Direct from the Prater I drove to my father's house. What an unpleasant sensation the announcement would make, and I wished it over as soon as possible. Father and Aunt Marie were busy over their morning papers, and both were astonished at my early call, and in a riding habit.

"I have been riding in the Prater, and something happened which you must all know at once. I have promised to marry——"

Aunt Marie threw up her hands, and father frowned—"I can only hope——"

"I have promised to marry the man that I love, and who will surely make me happy—Baron Frederick von Tilling."

"How dare you, after what I said yesterday," shouted my father, springing up.

Aunt Marie shook her head: I had rather it were some one else. He is not a match for you, and has such peculiar views."

"Our views are alike, and I scorn to look out for any match. Father, dearest father, do not frown so darkly, do not spoil my happiness with your displeasure; be my dear good papa."

"But, child," said my father, softening, "I only want your happiness. I could not be happy with a soldier who is not a soldier from his heart and soul."

"But you do not need to marry him," remarked Aunt Marie judiciously. "His soldier notions are of little consequence. But I would be unhappy with a man who speaks with so little reverence of the Bible and God as he did the other day."

"You, too, my dear Aunt, need not marry him," I interposed laughingly.

"Well," said my father, sighing, "every one makes his own heaven. I suppose he will resign."

"We have not mentioned that at all, and I certainly desire it, but I fear he will not."

"To think," said Aunt Marie, "that you have refused a Prince! and now you are descending in the social scale instead."

"Here I come," I said, "for the first time since Arno's death, to tell you I am happy, and instead of being glad you both drag out reasons for reproach—military service, Jehovah, social scale and suchlike."

But after half an hour's conversation the old folks were somewhat reconciled, and my father agreed to come in the evening to meet his future son-in-law at my house.

All the relatives came at the same time, and I introduced Tilling as my betrothed. Rosa and Lilli were delighted. Conrad cried: "Bravo, Martha. Lilli should profit by your example." My father had conquered his antipathy, or succeeded in concealing it, and Aunt was even full of sentiment. Little Rudolf was presented to his "new papa," who kissing, said: "Of you, my little fellow, we two must try to make a perfect man."

During the evening my father suggested his idea that Tilling would quit the service. The latter answered in astonishment.

"Give up my career, when I have no other! One can dislike war and still——"

"Yes, I know—as you said lately, a fireman need not love to see a house on fire."

"There are other illustrations: Need a physician love cancer and typhus, or a judge enjoy burglary and murder? But what reason could I have for abandoning my profession?"

"You would spare your wife the unpleasant life of the garrison," said Aunt Marie, "and spare her the anxiety should there be war."

"Those are good reasons, and I shall try to keep my wife from as many unpleasantnesses as possible. But would it not be most unpleasant to have a husband without a calling? If I resigned, it would count for laziness or cowardice. It did not occur to me, nor to you either, Martha, I hope."

"Suppose I made it a condition?"

"You would not do that. I should prefer to renounce my happiness. You are rich, I am poor, except for my pay and the hope of promotion. These I cannot surrender without loss of my dignity and honor."

"Bravo, my son, now I am reconciled. It would be a shame, for you will certainly rise to the rank of general—you may be a governor or minister of war some day. Your wife may have a proud position."

The prospect of being a commander's wife had no charms for me, but I was silent. Though I would rather have retired to one of our quiet estates, yet I approved of Frederick's resolution since it reconciled my father.

"Yes, quite reconciled," continued my father, "for the daughter of a soldier, the widow of a soldier could never be content with a civilian's costume for always."

Frederick's glance said, "I know you better," but aloud he remarked, with a smile: "Yes—maybe she only fell in love with my uniform."

In September we were married. My husband had two months' leave, and we spent a week in Berlin, visiting the sister of Frederick's mother. The two sisters had greatly resembled each other, and I was able to realize the beauty of character of the one from the other. Frau Cornelia von Tessau, the widow of a Prussian general, was the mother of an only son, just about to become a lieutenant, and a touching affection existed between them, such as I hoped my son and I might experience some day.

Our wedding tour, extending to the Rhine and to Switzerland, brought many charming revelations. I discovered many new qualities in my husband. I found him full of liveliness and quick appreciation of everything beautiful in nature and art, and discovered also that he was a perfect master of the French and English languages. Our two months passed only too swiftly, and the first unpleasant moment was when the official paper came recalling us to duty.

We joined Frederick's regiment at Olmutz' where we retired completely from the military circle and devoted our free time wholly to each other. I exchanged the first necessary calls, and soon found I could not endure the usual gossip of the set. We took up a course of scientific reading between us, keeping up the liveliest sympathy in the advanced thought of the world, and the philosophic questions of the day. We discussed the future of our boy, and planned above all that he should not be a soldier.

Christmas took us back to Vienna, the family being quite reconciled to our marriage, for they were compelled to admit that at least we were very happy. Conrad was still a constant visitor, and I could see that he had made some progress with Lilli. Christmas eve was very gay, and above all gifts were showered upon little Rudolf. A lively company had gathered in the drawing-room, among the rest our old friends, the Minister of the Interior and Dr. Bresser.

"Is it true, your Excellency," the Doctor asked, "that another war is threatening."

"Yes," answered the statesman, "there is indeed a dark and portentous cloud on the political horizon."

"Denmark has certainly gone too far."

"Oh, Denmark? Then the storm does not threaten us," I said, relieved. "But the prospect of any war is distressing, yet I am glad it is Denmark rather than Austria."

"Never fear," said my father, to comfort me. "If Austria is drawn into it, we do not risk anything. In defending the rights of Schleswig-Holstein we do not involve Austrian territory."

"Do you imagine, father, that I would consider the question of territories for a moment, when I only fear the one thing, and that is the danger of those I love!"

"My child, you cannot consider the fate of the individual where the fate of the nation is concerned. The men that are lost are of little consequence in comparison to the main question whether our country shall lose or win. I say if we cross swords with the Danes we can only extend our influence in the German Alliance, and it is my dream that the Hapsburgs may recover the German imperial crown to which they are entitled. A war with Denmark would be a fit opportunity to wipe out the loss of '59 in Lombardy, and who knows, we might even gain power enough to reconquer that province."

How Fat Folks May Become Thin

By Elizabeth Thomas

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either cases the cause if the same—lack of oxygen-carrying power of the blood. This trouble occurs in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of orilene capsules. Take one after each meal and one before going to bed. Weigh yourself so as to know just how fast you are losing weight. Wonderful results have been accomplished by this inexpensive recipe, but be sure to get the genuine oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any large druggist can supply you, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co. Box 1240 Montreal, Can.

WHAT CURES ECZEMA?

We have had so many inquiries lately regarding Eczema and other skin diseases, that we are glad to make our answer public. After careful investigation we have found that a simple wash of Oil of Wintergreen, as compounded in D. D. D. Prescription, can be relied upon. We would not make this statement to our patrons, friends and neighbors unless we were sure of it—and although there are many so-called Eczema remedies sold, we ourselves unhesitatingly recommend D. D. D. Prescription. All druggists have D.D.D. 25c, $1.

Drop into our store today, just to talk over the merits of this wonderful Prescription. Ask also about D. D. D. Soap—J. S. McKEOWN, Druggist, Belleville.

FRECKLES

February and March Worst Months For This Trouble—How to Remove Easily.

There's a reason why nearly everybody freckles in February and March, but happily there is also a remedy for these ugly blemishes, and no one need stay freckled.

Simply get an ounce of othine, double strength, from your druggist and apply a little of it night and morning, and in a few days you should see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the light ones have vanished entirely. Now is the time to rid yourself of freckles, for if not removed now they may stay all Summer, and spoil an otherwise beautiful complexion. Your money back if othine fails.

DIED IN TORONTO

Her many friends in the city will be grieved to hear that Miss Jennie F. Paterson, of Whitby, died in Toronto on Saturday, March 6th. Deceased was well-known in this city, having resided here before going to Whitby. She was a daughter of the late R. S. Paterson, ex-Mayor of Belleville.

A SOCIETY FUNERAL

Under the auspices of the I.O.O.F Society, of which deceased was a member, the funeral of the late Mr. Samuel J. Benson took place yesterday afternoon, and was largely attended. Members of Mizpah and Belleville Lodges were out in large numbers, and as a mark of respect all the barber shops in the city were closed whilst the funeral was in progress. The floral tributes were many and beautiful in design, showing deceased had many friends. At the family residence, South John street, and at the interment at Belleville cemetery, services were conducted by the Rev. E. C. Currie, pastor of John street Presbyterian church. The burial services of the Oddfellow's Society were taken by Bro. Fairman of Mizpah Lodge and Bro. Jas. Duckworth. The bearers were members of the Society, namely Bros. R. H. Ketcheson, E. T. Thompson, C. Ostrom, C. Atkins, R. Leonard and S. E. Haight. In the obituary notice it should have read deceased was a member of John street Presbyterian church instead of St. Andrew's church, and one sister survives, Mrs. George Boyle, of this city, in addition to the widow.

Seventy-Five Years Young

Yesterday, March 12th Prof. Coleman, M.A., teacher in the Ontario School for the Deaf, entered upon his 75th year, and has been a teacher of the Deaf for 50 years. When the Belleville Institution was opened in 1870, the first Principal, the late Dr. W. J. Palmer, was requested by the Ontario Government to bring two experienced teachers with him, and the late Mr. S. T. Greene and Mr. Coleman were selected, the latter having had five years experience as a teacher in the North Carolina Institution For the Deaf. Mr. Coleman has witnessed many changes in the Institution here, during its 45 years of existence. Of the teaching staff, bursars, matrons and heads of departments, 32 have been called away by death. Mr. Coleman is the oldest employe in the Institution, and the only link connecting it with its opening day.

HARDWARE vs. MIDGETS

When the Belleville Hardware and the Midgets meet at the Arena Tuesday night, March 16, it should be a tidy little battle, as these two teams have met twice before, the Hardware winning both games. With a new goal tender, and a few changes around on the team, the Hardware will have to play good fast hockey every period to beat the Midgets, for the third game.

THE OBJECT SOUGHT

While Canada is pursuing the even tenor of her way, sympathetically at war, but practically at peace, the great Mother is struggling between life and death, is lavishing blood and treasure, and is assuming a burden so ponderous, so gigantic, that while showing her wondrous might, calls upon, nay, commands all her children to rally around her. At such a time there is not one of us who cannot do something to help on and to hasten victory. If we feel that way we shall cease to think of self and, conjuring up a vision of the maternal giantess in labor with her weight of troubles, will consider how and in what manner the cause we have at heart can be helped. Fortunately the farmers of Canada have a ready answer at hand. They have only to put in action a resolution to secure increased crops by adopting improved methods and to breed better by giving greater attention to selection and surroundings, and the deed is accomplished. They benefit alike themselves and ensure food and clothing to the soldiers, sailors and people of the old land and to the refugees from the wrecked and ruined countries. It has been said that the farmers will do this without urging because it is to their interest so to do. But to every man it is a spur to know that others are interested in him, desire to second and encourage his efforts and are vitally concerned in his success. It is in this way that the Patriotism and Production campaign should be regarded. It is for this reason that conferences are being held throughout the country. It is with this object that the Department of Agriculture has had prepared a catalogue of some two hundred publications, any of which can be had just for making application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

B. C. Election Is Postponed

Liberals Attribute Deferring of Election to Cabinet Crisis

VANCOUVER, March 12—With the formal postponement of the elections yesterday to a date to be later fixed, on the alleged ground that voters' lists could not be got into shape before April 10, which had previously been fixed as polling day, developments in the present Cabinet crisis in British Columbia came quite rapidly. It became known that Hon. W. J. Bowser, Attorney-General, had threatened to resign if Sir Richard McBride persisted in making the chief plank in his platform the giving of a loan of $7,000,000 to Foley, Welch and Stewart, proprietors of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, and the loaning of a similar amount to Mackenzie & Mann.

FIFTEEN INSURGENTS.

The Liberals are seizing on the crisis in Sir Richard McBride's Cabinet as the real reason for the postponement of the election, which it is said will not take place until some time in May. When the proposal to give a loan to the Pacific and Great Eastern and another to the C. N. R., for the completion of the Vancouver Island lines was presented to the Conservative caucus ten days ago, 15 members at once revolted. They have since been joined by others, so that a majority of the 40 Conservative members of the late legislature, nearly all of whom will be candidates for re-election, are now standing behind Attorney-General Bowser in refusing to sanction a loan bill.

Foley, Welch and Stewart find it impossible to sell bonds which have been already guaranteed by the Government of British Columbia at the rate of $42,000 per mile for the 450 miles from Vancouver to Fort George. They need another seven millions. The line complete will cost $63,000 per mile.

GERMAN IS CAUGHT SHIPPING EXPLOSIVE

CHICAGO, March 12.—Dr. Herman Bodenheim, of New York City, a chemist, was held under arrest by Federal authorities in St. Louis today on a charge of violating the Federal law which prohibits the shipping of high explosives on passenger trains.

The arrest of Bodenheim was caused last night by H. O. Clabaugh, of Chicago, Division Supt. of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Bodenheim, it was charged, carried a valise filled with gun cotton, which he had manufactured, when arrested.

Included in the complaint on which the arrest was made Bodenheim was charged with sending unmarked, a hundred ounces of gun cotton from New York to a Chicago publishing concern without the knowledge of the express company that the package contained an explosive.

Bodenheim manufactured the gun cotton in New York, according to the Government agents, and sold it to printing concerns throughout the country. By shipping the explosive dry he was able to undersell his competitors, Federal officials said. Under the Federal law gun cotton may be shipped only under proper conditions and in a wet solvent.

THE SPINAL AND NERVOUS ORIGIN OF DISEASE

Lining up the vertebrae, establishing free movement between them, thus getting a better blood supply into the nerve centers in the spinal cord, and freeing the spinal nerves from pressure.

There are twenty-six bones which make up the spine. They are called vertebrae, nerves and blood vessels pass in and out, between each of these vertebrae. It can easily be understood that any displacement, however slight, puts pressure on these vessels and nerves, thus causing disturbance to the part of the body these nerves supply. For instance, the eleventh dorsal vertebrae, if rigid, tender, or put slightly out of position, is certain to cause kidney trouble. Any structural displacement of the group from the fifth to the ninth dorsal vertebrae, is sure to cause stomach trouble. Very many diseases can be traced to some spinal injury, caused by falls, blows, twists, heavy lifting, etc.

Osteopathy cures by removing the cause. A careful spinal examination is made, the trouble is located and corrected. Spinal examination free.

Dr. J. P. Kimmel, Osteopathic Physician, 28 Victoria Avenue, Phone 209.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

To-morrow afternoon at 4.15 Mr. J. S. Woodsworth will address a Men's Meeting. His subject will be "Organized Christianity on Trial in Canada."

Mr. Woodsworth of Winnipeg, who is the Secretary of the Canadian Welfare League, will speak in two of the City Churches to-morrow and on Monday night will address the Canadian Club on the subject "The Immigrant Invasion after the war. Are we ready for it?"

Mr. McQueen of Knox College Toronto, has been added to the Association Staff by the National Committee. He will be assigned duties at the Barracks with the soldiers. He will have supervision of Correspondence Tables, supplying gratis Y.M.C.A. writing materials and selling postage stamps. Tables for Reading materials will also be supplied.

In searching for arguments against the saloon the fact that buttermilk is sold in most of them should not be overlooked.

The man with money is concerned mostly with the way his trousers hang in the leg. The man without money is more concerned with the way they wear in the seat.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY.
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

PRESERVE THE BIRDS

Canadian Expert's Views on What Has Been and Should be Done

Dr. C. W. Hewitt, Dominion Entomologist, of Ottawa, the man who did so much a few years ago in encouraging the "swat-the-fly" habit throughout Canada, delivered a very interesting lecture at Toronto, in which he urged the preservation of Canadian birds. From a humane as well as an economic point of view Dr. Hewitt directed strong words of criticism against a popular fashion in millinery, which is seriously ravaging the bird-life of this and other countries. The passing of legislation in Canada and in the United States against plumage sales has done much towards the preservation of bird life in America, but in England much was still to be desired in this work.

Dr. Hewitt quoted the following figures from sales on the London market, the great plumage centre of the world: December, 1912—plumage of 75,000 herons; February, 1913—5,142 crowned pigeons, 5,221 white terns; June, 1913—77,000 herons, 22,000 crowned pigeons, 25,000 humming birds, 162,000 king-fishers; June, 1911—100,000 herons, 8,500 birds of paradise, 4,200 crested pigeons, 11,600 Japanese jays.

THE SECRETARY BIRD of South Africa which is so valuable as a destroyer of snakes that an exceptionally heavy fine attaches to the killing of one.

The lecturer had lantern slides to show the cruelty of the business of securing the plumage from such birds as the heron. The heron aigrettes were plucked often only after the mother bird had been killed, and the young brood was left unprotected and helpless.

Farmers were urged to cultivate birds, even to the extent of building nests for them and providing food and water to keep them in Canada during the winter time. The Dominion Government, through Dr. Hewitt, has made Rockcliffe Park and the Experimental Farm at Ottawa bird sanctuaries, and over five hundred nests have been placed there to attract different kinds of birds.

"All Canadian birds should be preserved," said Dr. Hewitt. "For instance, the crow is invaluable for the destruction of the armyworm. Insects and weeds also are destroyed by all the common Canadian birds, the twenty species of native sparrows, swifts and swallows."

VINEYARD LORE

Roots Should be Set Deep so as Not to "Grow Out"

For several reasons grape vines have a tendency to work up on top of the ground, thus exposing their roots to damage, to say nothing of the weakening effect on the vine itself.

The first thing to do to prevent this is to set the vine deeply when planting, putting the lower roots a foot under ground. This, of course, means a deal of hard work shovelling out the hole for the young vine. The team and a big plow are used in setting large vineyards, thus reducing the hand work very much, though in old vineyards and home gardens the shovel and chisel-bar must do it all.

When a vine has worked up, something can be done by trimming the ends of such roots as are entirely on top of the ground and burying them again, pointed downward, swung around out of the way of the plow. A very choice vine that has lost roots can be strengthened by allowing some shoots or "suckers" to grow one season and the next spring, before the buds start, burying these suckers as deeply and as close up to the vine as possible, putting them also in the row—that is, out of reach of the plow. Then by training up a shoot from the roots and, after it is well established, cutting out of the old vine, you will have a new vine where the old one stood without losing a year's crop. Roots at the surface of the ground make troublesome hand hoeing, and the best way to avoid it is to set the vine deep enough in the beginning.

The public never forgets a scandal. Lately attention has again been directed to the fact that Adam and Eve never were married.

HON. W. T. WHITE TAKES SIR WILFRED LAURIER SHARPLY TO TASK

Criticism of Budget By Opposition Leader Invites A Review of Liberal Government's Record—Fighting Speech By Finance Minister—Opposition Leader Moves Amendment and Features The Reduction In British Preference

OTTAWA, March 11.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the first speaker, to-day in the House of Commons summarized the arguments of the Opposition against the Budget proposals of the Government and presented an amendment condemning the new taxes as oppressive, calculated to bring little revenue, and raising the tariff on British goods when the Mother Country was facing a great crisis.

The Liberal leader afforded the Hon. W. T. White, who replied at length to every argument that had been raised, the opportunity for making what was probably the most brilliant and most effective speech of his career. The Minister was in fine form, and showed himself a thorough master of the whole subject; he required only the final concentrated attack of the Opposition leader to impel him to make one of the best fighting speeches heard in the House of Commons for many sessions.

What Sir Wilfrid Charged

Sir Wilfrid had charged that the Government had been recklessly lavish in expenditure; that the special taxes were unduly heavy on the poor; while the tariff increases were not made for the sake of needed revenue but to benefit the wealthy and privileged classes. He pictured the increase of the British preferential rate also as an ungrateful and unpatriotic act when Britian and British trade were suffering so severely from the war.

Finance Minister's Reply.

Hon. Mr. White, in reply, first showed how the Liberals themselves a few years ago had raised the duties on many articles imported from Britain, and he left it to them to answer whether they did it for the sake of the revenue or for the sake of prices. Then he pointed out that as far as a preference to British trade goes, it had a better preference as against other countries under the new tariff than it had before. There was an additional preference of two and a half per cent. Apart from that, the Minister showed that liquor and tobacco had already been subjected to all the extra taxation they could stand at the session of last August.

The Budget Provisions

He provided for raising all the revenue he could by certain special taxes and then he was forced to fall back on the tariff to raise the rest.

He could not put all the increase on finished articles because there was a limit to the point to which various articles could be profitably taxed. Consequently, he was obliged to tax free goods and raw materials. As a necessary result of that he was obliged to raise the tariff on manufactured goods from Britain, as from other countries. Otherwise, the British manufacturers, competing against our manufacturers now under a handicap, would simply have driven Canadians out of business.

Mr. White's "Inheritance".

In repelling the charge of extravagance against the present government, Hon. Mr. White told of the load he had to shoulder on becoming Minister of Finance. The late Government had borrowed in a period of fourteen months shortly before no less than $110,000,000 on the London market. The Liberals had launched into huge and costly projects of all kinds, and tens of millions of dollars spent on them would be simply lost to the country.

Hon. Mr. White also showed that even if the Government had shut down on public works this year and thrown thousands of men out of work, it would still have had to raise a large amount of money by special war taxes. There was a deficit of $80,000,000 to be made up, and no sane financier would think of trying to borrow it all, especially at a time like this.

Confident of Public Approval

The Minister asserted with confidence that the people approved of the Budget and were behind the Government, and he boldly challenged the Opposition, if they disputed it, to consult them on the issue. To Sir Wilfrid, who had suspected his motive in raising the tariff, he replied that he had a suspicion that his opposition to the increase of the British preference rate was due to the fact that he had a troublesome conscience on account of his leading in the defeat of the Naval Bill which the Government introduced two years ago to enable Canada to do her duty in the matter of Imperial defence.

Sir Wilfrid spoke for about an hour and Hon. Mr. White for three hours.

Will Vote Next Tuesday

An arrangement was come to between the whips to-day whereby the vote on the amendment to the Budget proposed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be taken on Tuesday next.

It is regarded as hardly possible now that Parliament will prorogue before the latter part of April or May.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, at the outset of his speech, said that while the Opposition had no desire to impede the Government in its handling of the war situation, it was their duty to point out the faults of the fiscal resolutions referred to in the Budget. They were represented as being due to the war but "they were, as I believe", said Sir Wilfrid, "made only under color of the war."

The Opposition, he added, had the right to criticize the Government. The functions of Parliament had not been suspended. In England the Government was criticized by the Opposition during this war as in past wars. Fox severely criticized Pitt for refusing the peace overtures of Bonaparte.

Bright and Cobden had condemned the Government for the Crimean War. The Canadian Opposition had therefore full right to criticize actions of the Government here.

They thought that Britain was absolutely in the right in this war, and they gave their adherence to the decision that Canada should do her share. They had given the Government their support and Sir Wilfrid had given directions that no literature of partisan character should go out from the Liberal Bureau.

The Opposition had adhered to this decision though their opponents, he said, had sent out party literature. If the opposition had been consulted about the budget proposals they would have been happy to have given their views to the Minister of Finance and the Government. Both sides might have made concessions, and they might have reached an unanimous conclusion. He did not complain about this, but Hon. Mr. White could not complain, either, if the Opposition had to take issue with him.

Finance Minister's Serious Task

The Finance Minister had a serious task, Sir Wilfrid added, but it was not thrust suddenly upon him. There were warning signs, but what precaution had he taken? He had not slackened speed. The storm came and found him drifting and helpless. The expenditure on consolidated account of ninety-eight millions in 1912 increased to 1[illegible] millions in 1915. The Finance Minister should have used the pruning knife, said Sir Wilfrid, and prevented the imposition of this war taxation. He added that he did not oppose the expenditure on railways and canals, for they would provide employment, but there were in the estimates 22 millions for 600 different items of public works, public buildings, etc., all over the country. Such works away from the larger centres would be of no use in providing work for the unemployed.

Says Extra Taxes Not War Taxes

These extra taxes were not war taxes at all, continued the leader of the Opposition. The increase in the tariff was for the benefit and profit of the protected and wealthy classes. The special tax on the banks, loan and insurance companies was a very moderate one. Those companies could well believe that they had a friend at court. The pin prick would cause them no hurt at all. It would be a pleasant surprise to them that they were let off so easily. The postal increases of 33 per cent. in one case an 50 per cent. in the other were a very doubtful experiment. It was unlikely that much revenue would come from them. Sir Wm. Mullock had found that reduction of the postal rate brought an increase in revenue. The tax on railway traveling was absolutely unfair to the poor, and was to the benefit and advantage of the rich. The basis of the tax was wrong. It should have been graded according to the second class, first class and parlor car tickets. Sir Wilfird developed this argument at great length, picturing the wealthy young prodigal traveling in oriental comfort and splendor and paying no more tax on his ticket than the poor man in the second class car.

New Tariff Not a War Tariff

The new tariff was not a war tariff, said Sir Wilfrid. It was for revenue and not for the profit of the wealthy and privileged classes, the Finance Minister would have selected the articles to be taxed. He would have with this tariff a minimum of revenue and a maximum of loss and inconvenience. Why tax articles that we don't import at all? What revenue would come from the tariff on meats and cereals, yet it would be possible for speculators to make wealth for themselves at the expense of the poor? Wheat and flour had been excepted from the tariff increase. The Finance Minister would not dare to tax the bread of the people, and Sir Wilfrid aproved of that, but why not except all articles of food?

There was an increase in the duties on wines, but no increase in the excise. Sir Wilfrid said he was informed this would mean a very large profit to the distillers, about $6,000,000.

The increased duty on British goods was a blow to British trade, and we had lately got a loan there on easy terms to carry on the war. Germany was trying to injure British trade and this new tariff was not a Canadian idea, but at best a German conception. The British preference had been a great benefit to Canadian trade. Four years ago the Conservatives would not let Canada sell to the United States, and now they would not let her buy from Great Britain.

Sir Wilfrid's Amendment.

Sir Wilfrid then moved the following amendment:—

"That this House is ready to provide for the exigencies of the present situation and to vote all necessary ways and means to that end, but it regrets that in the measure under consideration duties are imposed which must be oppressive upon the people whilst yielding little or no revenue and that the said measure is particularly objectionable in the fact that instead of favoring it, it is placing extra barriers against Great Britain's trade with Canada at a moment when the mother country is under a war strain unparalleled in history."

We are Prepared to Meet the Issue Replies Hon. Mr. White.

Hon. W. T. White, in rising to reply, remarked that Sir Wilfrid had said that he need not complain if the Opposition took issue with them over the budget. "I want to say to the right honorable member that we do not complain. We welcome the issue on this budget or on any other matter they care to bring forward. We ask no indulgence. We are prepared to meet fairly and squarely the issue he has presented to us."

Mr. A. K. MacLean, the Financial critic of the Opposition Mr. White added, had charged the Government with extravagance, saying that the war was not the cause of the present financial position of the Government. He called the fiscal proposals unscientific and inadequate.

"He should be right at home in dealing with extravagance," said Hon. Mr. White.

A Serious Charge

"The late Government had such a career of unbridled extravagance, especially during its later years. Its continuance for any length of time at that rate would have ruined the credit of the Dominion. "I speak with full realization of the gravity of the charge I make against them. No man has a better opportunity of realizing the consequence of that policy than I. Their prodigal and reckless extravagance made a heavier load for my shoulders than any finance minister ever had to bear in this country before."

Liberals' Ruinous Railway Policy

Mr. White referred then to "the ruinous policy of the late Government," and the legacies of hundreds of millions of direct and indirect liabilities—obligations not due to any action of this Government, but to the mis-management and reckless extravagance of the honorable gentlemen opposite." A very considerable portion of the monies spent, or to be spent, in completing the undertakings started by them, he added, "is inevitably lost to the Dominion."

Holds the Liberals to Responsibilities

"Chickens always come home to roost," Mr. White said, "and I am going to see that the chickens for which my honorable friends are responsible roost where they belong. They are going to leave their troubles on our doorstep. To deal with all the mis-management of the late Government would require a special session of Parliament. I propose to deal with only a few of them."

The N.T.R. was estimated by the Finance Minister in 1904 to cost $60,000,000, while Sir Wilfrid estimted the cost at only $13,000,000. He said the interest of $60,000,000 was $1,800,000 a year and for seven years this was $13,000,000; after seven years he thought, the N.T.R. would be on a paying basis because the G.T.P. would be paying the three per cent. interest on the cost of that part of their line. As a matter of fact, the cost has been $200,000,000, more than enough to pay for Canada's part in this great war in which we are fighting for the liberties of the empire and of the world.

A Striking Difference

The difference beween Sir Wilfrid's estimate and the actual cost of the N.T.R. was enough to pay the cost of the war to Canada until the end of the next financial year.

The road, also, has not been built continuously, but the section from Levis to Moncton was rusting and rotting, while the building of the western sections was delayed for one reason or another. The result was that it cost the G.T.P. about twice as much to built their western sections as they estimated. Hon. Frank Oliver had spoken about railway rates. He should either deny responsibility for the railway policy of the late Government or forever quit mentioning railway rates.

Hon. Mr. White hoped that Sir Wilfrid's title to statesmanship would not depend on his railway policy. It would come home to the taxpayers of Canada for generations.

Some Big Advances

It was on account of the delay in completing the N.T.R. from Cochrane to Winnipeg, said Hon. Mr. White, that he had to lend the G.T.R. $15,000,000 a couple of years ago and a further $16,000,000 later. This was "in order to save this road, this child of my right honorable friend's imagination, yet he will denounce me for last fall saving the road by an advance of six millions so that they could link up the prairie section with the Prince Rupert section."

He also had to furnish $10,000,000 in connection with the implementing clause of the G.T.R. contract, including the necessary purchase of their bonds.

"Then they talk about the rich legacy they left and their solvent estate. If obligations are children, my right honorable friend is truly the father of his country. (Laughter.)

Who Bungled Quebec Bridge

"Who bungled the Quebec Bridge, which will cost from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 in all before completed? Am I blamable, because I had to find money for all these purposes, some of them most unwisely undertaken. On four accounts only, $125,000,000 have been paid in the last four years.

"Then there are the indirect liabili-

ACROSS the Bay of Fundy from St. John, New Brunswick, lies the historic coast of Nova Scotia, so full of romance, so beautiful to the eye that the hearts of those who visit it are kept in one perpetual enchantment. Digby and the little fishing villages on this coast of giant tide Annapolis Royal, with memories of Champlain and the first adventurous explorers from Old France, the orchard and the dairy land of the Annapolis Valley, Evangeline's country of the Grand Pre and Blomidon and Minas Basin, the scene of the great banishment of the Acadians—these have a charm that well might draw the traveller across the Great Continent from the Pacific.

All this country is served by the Dominion Atlantic Railway in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Wolfville is the chief centre for visitors to the Land of Evangeline. "Before the windows of Wolfville," says C. G. D. Roberts, the well known writer, "enrolls a superb view of marshes of pale green reclaimed from the sea by the spades of old time Acadian farmers, sharp strips of red and orange-tawny flats, where the retreating tide has left the beach uncovered, to the left front a well-grouped cluster of white cottages, spires and masts about a bridge, the shipping village of Port Williams; the long, low lines of green upland outstretching from either side to almost the centre of the picture, the delicious summer retreats of Starr's Point and Long Island; between them and beyond, away to the far, blue barrier of the Parrsboro shore the restless waters of Minas Basin yellow in the foreground, but in the distance, dominating all the scene with its mass of sombre indigo, the majestic bastion of Blomidon out-thrust against the tides. These are effects of full daylight; but the aerial magic of sunrise (too seldom seen), and the voluptuous sorcery of sunset such transformations are wrought as make the scene an ever-changing realm of fairy.

Three miles distant to the east, is Grand Pre itself, now a rich but scattered farming settlement. It is on the line of the Dominion Atlantic, and travellers who are passing through obtain from the car windows a good view of the scene of the Great Banishment. There are the storied meadows, and there, close to the station, are willows planted by Acadian hands. On the slope behind the station are gnarled French apple trees and stiff French poplars, and a short way further on is the Gaspereau mouth, where the exiles embarked. The car windows, indeed, afford a swift panoramic of what might be called "Views of Evangeline." But the best way to go to Grand Pre from Wolfville is by carriage.

The ancient Acadian village which Colonel Winslow and his New Englanders depopulated so effectually in that eventful Autumn of 1755 is supposed to have extended in a long, thin line from about where the Grand Pre station of the Dominion Atlantic now stands to somewhere near the next station of Horton Landing. Then, as now, the Acadians trailed their villages along a single street. Close to the station is a row of gnarled willows, whose branches perchance tell over to the young leaves of each recurring spring what they saw of Evangeline and her sorrow. Here suitably enclosed is "Evangeline's Well," and near it were unearthed some blacksmith's tools, sufficient to justify the pleasant tradition that this was the very site of the village smithy. In the immediate neighborhood were discovered foundations of a largish building, which may have been the chapel in which the Acadians were imprisoned before they were sent out on board the ships.

A Page Of Interest to Women

Sovereign Cure for Rheumatism

Mrs. E. W. Hazlett, 103 Wyandotte Street, Windsor, Ont., says there is only one Kidney Remedy in the world for her—GIN PILLS.

"Gin Pills, I know from personal experience, are the sovereign remedy for Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble in any form. I was cured by them after months of suffering. I was helpless—had several doctors and many other remedies but all failed to cure me. Then I tried Gin Pills with the result that I am well to-day. I heartily recommend them to any person suffering from Kidney or Bladder Trouble".

THE KITCHEN WORKER

Dry or tough meats can often be made tender and of a good flavor by braising. They are shut in a close covered pot, with salt pork stock, and chopped vegetables, and cooked slowly in the confined steam.

This is a good way to cook tough meats: Saute to keep the juices, and then stew until tender, and serve with thick gravy.

Remember that the success of frying depends upon two things—having enough fat to completely cover the articles cooked in it, and having the fat smoking hot.

Try using a small paint brush for greasing cake, bread or gem pans. It is a great help and can be easily cleaned in warm soap suds.

When ironing between buttons on a shirtwaist place the buttons down on a folded towel and iron on wrong side. The result will be very pleasing to both ironer and wearer.

Olive oil is injured by being kept in the light. When used at the table it should be put in a dark-colored bottle and removed to a cool, dark place immediately after the meal.

The "Oliver Twist"

Two half-worn wash dresses may be made into one pretty, little frock for a schoolgirl by combining part of an old gingham gown with another of white. The illustration shows the quaint way in which the gingham is used. This way also makes the dress keep clean longer.

A WOMAN'S PLACE

It May be in the Home, Factory or Office

There is no one position or place for a woman. Her duty is where she can do the most good and be of the greatest benefit. Some women can only be good wives and mothers. The home is the one best place. But there are numberless other places that can be filled and should be filled by women fitted for such work. Nurses, teachers, clerks, stenographers, domestic service and many other labors are best conducted by the woman who is fitted for the place. The great wrong of the present day is the inclination of women to attempt fields of labor and usefulness for which they are not adapted. Woman's rights and privileges are not secured in good measure by agitation and usurpation. Every sensible woman will find her place and fill it without law or ordinance. It may be as matron of a prison or as an advocate of justice. It may be as a writer of books or in wielding the needle. It is proper and right that woman should work in every legitimate way for the uplift and advancement of her sex. The question of suffrage is working itself out. But there will always be the question of place, and the best place for a woman is where her knowledge, ability and traits can best be utilized for her own pleasure and the benefit of those around her.

CLEANING WHITE KID GLOVES

With the price of gloves "going, going, gone," we will have to resort to every plan possible to keep those in our possession in fine condition.

A soiled pair of white kid gloves may be successfully cleaned at home. Place them in glass fruit jar—fill half full of gasoline of a good grade.

Shake gloves until gloves look clean; if there are any spots that fail to yield, remove gloves from gasoline and rub these spots with a good white soap; return to jar and shake again.

When taken from jar smooth out fingers and thumbs and keep rubbing gently until dry, and they will be as soft and clean as if sent to cleaner.

Allow gasoline to settle, and drain off clear part to be used again.

Cod Fish Chowder

Cut one thin slice of pork (about three inches square) and two thin slices of onion into very small pieces. Cook in kettle until all fat is extracted from meat and golden brown. Great care must be taken not to allow fat to scorch. Remove onion and pieces of meat from kettle.

To the fat add two cups of water and three small potatoes diced. Add one and one-half cups of cod fish that has been cut in small pieces and washed once in cold water. Boil together until potatoes are soft. Add two cups of milk to fish and potato and allow to boil up. Serve with crackers either dry or crumbled into dish of hot chowder.

"Tailor-made Girls"

The "tailor-made girl" keeps right up with the fashionable procession. She ignores the "latest fashions" and clings to her tailored coat with its straight lines, to the simple skirt trimmed only with patch pockets.

"SWEET SIMPLICITY" FASHION'S KEYNOTE

From the centres of fashion comes an edict that extravagance in dress must be curtailed. A charming frock for a dinner, or an informal dance is illustrated here. It's made of white chiffon, with a band of white charmeuse at the bottom, and the underskirt is also of charmeuse.

SAVORY DRIPPINGS

Some Fats Answer Splendidly For Seasoning Vegetables

As a substitute for butter in seasoning vegetables there is nothing better than sweet, savory drippings. Not all meats supply fats that are savory in the sense in which the word is employed here. The following fats may be employed alone or in combination for seasoning vegetables: The fat from fried sausages, ham, bacon and pork, and from roast pork, veal and chicken. Fats trimmed from poultry, veal, pork and ham may be fried out carefully and saved for use in cooking vegetables. Such fats have a flavor which comes from seasoning, as in sausage, from smoke, as in ham and bacon, or from brown material, as in roast meat. The fat skimmed from the water in which poultry has been boiled and the fats skimmed from the gravies of most roast meats may be clarified and also employed in the preparation of vegetables for the table.

Great care must be taken that all these fats are clean and sweet, and that the temperature at which they are fried out shall not be so high as to impair the flavor.

When rendering the trimmings of fat meat, add a small onion or a shallot (do not cut them), a few leaves of summer savory, and thyme, a teaspoonful of salt and a little pepper. This seasoning is enough for half a pint of fat. Keep the drippings covered and in a cool dry place.

Home-made Fire Extinguisher

The nervous housewife who lives in constant dread of fire may, with very little trouble, make an extinguisher that will put out a blaze if used at once. All she needs to do is to put three pounds of salt in a gallon of water, and to this add a pound and a half of sal ammoniac. This liquid should be bottled, and when fire is discovered it should be poured on it.

Arranging the Flower Bowl

In arranging flowers it is often difficult to make them stand up nicely. This difficulty will be overcome if a piece of wire netting be crushed up into a ball and placed in the bowl to hold the flower stems.

Carrot Soup

Boil half a dozen large carrots until tender; rub them through a colander into a saucepan; add a pint and a half of water and boil. Thicken with flour and add a teaspoonful of butter, and pepper and salt.

A small pinch of carbonate of soda in the water in which cabbages are boiled preserves the color of the vegetables and lessens the unpleasant odor while boiling.

MEAT DISHES THAT ARE INEXPENSIVE

Braising is an excellent way of cooking rather tough meats, as the long, slow, cooking softens the meat and yet all the nourishment is preserved in the gravy. A fowl that is tough should always be cooked in this way. Take a casserole just large enough to hold the fowl. Cover the bottom with slices of fat bacon, add thick slices of onion, carrots, and turnips, and put in the fowl. Cover the dish and let it cook on top of the stove for fifteen minutes. Then add a pint of hot water. Place in the oven. Let it simmer an hour or longer, according to the age and size of the fowl. Two hours will be needed for an old bird. Dish the bird. Put the vegetables around the dish, and pour over it a gravy made from the stock.

Kidneys, which may be bought for one, two or three cents apiece, make a cheap and delicious supper, luncheon, or breakfast dish either grilled or stewed. To stew the kidneys scald, skin, and cut them in halves, take out the small hard piece and rub in seasoned flour. Heat a little dripping in small casserole, put in the kidneys and fry them brown. Take them out and keep warm on a plate. Chop a small onion, fry in the casserole until brown, add a little flour, and brown. Add a teaspoonful of sharp sauce and one of tomato sauce or catsup. Pour in slowly as much water as required, stirring to keep smooth. Return the kidneys to the pan and simmer for about an hour. Skim off any scum and flavor with sherry. Kidneys that are left over from a supper dish are very good hashed and served on toast for breakfast. They should be re warmed with a brown gravy.

Grilled kidneys may be grilled in their own fat, or they may be scalded, skinned, and split and brushed with oil. They should be served on toast, either well seasoned or with a devil sauce.

Veal and ham pie, a very popular and inexpensive English dish, is made as follows:

One pound veal cutlet, four ounces bacon or ham, two hard-boiled eggs, pastry, seasoned flour and mushrooms.

Make a seasoned flour by mixing one tablespoonful flour, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of pepper, add a little grated rind of a lemon and a pinch of cayenne. Cut the meat into medium pieces, rub in the flour, and put into a deep pie or baking dish. Peel the mushrooms and put them in the dish. Pour in enough water to three-quarters fill the dish and cover the top of the dish over with pie crust. Make a hole in the centre of the pastry. Put it into the oven and bake for an hour.

CORNMEAL RECIPES

Cornmeal Mush and Pork

One pound lean pork, part meat and part bone, one cup corn meal, one teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoonful powdered sage, water.

Cook the pork in water until the meat can be easily removed from the bone. Remove the meat, cool the broth, and remove the fat. Reduce the broth to about a quart, or add water enough to bring it up to this amount, and cook the corn meal in it. Add the meat finely chopped and the seasonings. Pack in granite bread tins. Cut into slices and fry. Beef may be used in the same way.

Cornmeal Scrapple

One pig's head split in halves, two cups cornmeal, salt and sage.

Cornmeal Fish Balls

Two cups cold white cornmeal mush, one cup shredded codfish, one egg, one tablespoon butter.

Pick over the codfish and soak it to remove salt, if necessary. Combine the ingredients and drop by spoonfuls into hot fat. Drain on porous paper. These codfish balls compare very favorably in taste with those made with potato and are more easily and quickly prepared.

Chicken and Cornmeal Croquettes

One cup white cornmeal mush, one cup chopped chicken, few drops onion juice, one egg, salt and pepper.

Combine the ingredients and drop by spoonfuls into hot fat.

White cornmeal may be very satisfactorily combined with other kinds of cold meat to make croquettes. In general, cornmeal croquettes need not be egged and crumbed like ordinary croquettes, for the hardening of the corn meal on the surface of the mixture forms the necessary crust.

Do not hem a heavy silence cloth, as the hem is apt to make a ridge under the tablecloth. Buttonhole the cut edges with white darning cotton.

PRINCESS PATRICIA'S AT THE FRONT

OXO CUBES

within sound of the guns

An interesting letter from a sergeant in the above regiment:—

"At last we are where we wanted to be, and are contented with our little lot. We had a fairly good Christmas dinner, which consisted of bully beef and biscuits, and whatever we could forage. My friend and myself did not do so badly, as we had one carrot, one-half turnip, two leeks, one onion, TWO OXO CUBES and twelve ounces of bully beef, with three hard biscuits, all mixed up and boiled in a beef tin.

"To-day we had our Christmas pudding, one-half pound to a man, one pound tin of jam between four men, and a small bottle of wine, also between four men.

"We are all in good spirits, and also within sound of big guns."

Winter weather is OXO CUBE weather. What could be more invigorating and sustaining than a steaming, delicious cup of OXO, which gives that rich, strengthening beef-nourishment the body needs to withstand cold and fatigue?

OXO CUBES beat all the old ideas for food-quickness. Simply drop an OXO CUBE into a cup of hot water—stir—and it's ready.

BIRDS CARRY A LUNCH

Well Authenticated Cases of Snails Tucked Beneath the Wings

Several bobolinks killed in Cuba were found to have living specimens of the small, grass-inhabiting snail clinging among their feathers. This mollusk lives in Porto Rico and St. Croix, but not in Cuba.

A similar circumstance was since observed in the case of the upland plover (so called); a migratory sandpiper; and it appears to be a regular occurrence with that bird. This sandpiper arrives on the coast of Louisiana from its winter home in the tropics during the third week of March and is shot as game. Those killed immediately after their arrival are often found to be carrying beneath their wings from 20 to 40 small snails of the fresh-water genus Physa, which the birds are accustomed to eat. These snails abound in tropical America as well as in the United States, but can not be obtained in Louisiana until the warmth of early summer brings them out of their winter retreat beneath the mud.

In both these cases the fact of the birds transporting food-mollusks clinging to their feathers is certain, and the inference is that they are eaten soon after arrival, for a few days later none are to be found. Were they put there as a provision for the long journey across the water? No one knows, nor can say how the snails got under the wings.

Light is thrown on the matter by recalling a note, published by Grace Ellicott, of an incident in blue-jay life observed at New Castle, Indiana. Miss Ellicott noticed a blue-jay fly down to a disturbed anthill in her garden and began to pick up the big ants, which were running about in great excitement over the catastrophe that had befallen their city. The bird apparently realized that the ants were too many to be eaten at once, and that he had the chance of his life for savings. Working as fast as possible, he picked up ant after ant and tucked them beneath his wing, now on one side and then on the other. Ants have a propensity for grasping with their jaws and holding onto anything they touch when treated in such a way as that, and the bird seemed to know this and devoted himself to stowing away as many as possible. At last he (or she) flew away, perhaps to feed the insects to hungry young.

Housecleaning Economy

Don't take up the dining room carpet—save your household expenses by sponging it as it lies on the floor.

Often where there is a family of children the carpet in the dining room around the table shows little grease spots. These may be quickly disposed of by rubbing well with one part salt to four parts alcohol.

Salts Make Colors Fast

When washing and rinsing colored materials add a teaspoonful of Epsom salts to each gallon of water, and even the most delicate shades will neither fade nor run. Serge or merino dresses, which have been dyed black, can be safely washed in this way without any risk of the dye running.

To clean greasy overalls is a hard job, unless you let Snowflake Ammonia loosen the grease. Then it's easy.

Ask for it by name—say "Snowflake."

Criticism of Budget By Opposition Leader Invites A Review of Liberal Government's Record—Fighting Speech By Finance Minister—Opposition Leader Moves Amendment and Features The Reduction In British Preference

OTTAWA, March 11.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the first speaker, to-day in the House of Commons summarized the arguments of the Opposition against the Budget proposals of the Government and presented an amendment condemning the new taxes as oppressive, calculated to bring little revenue, and raising the tariff on British goods when the Mother Country was facing a great crisis.

The Liberal leader afforded the Hon. W. T. White, who replied at length to every argument that had been raised, the opportunity for making what was probably the most brilliant and most effective speech of his career. The Minister was in fine form, and showed himself a thorough master of the whole subject; he required only the final concentrated attack of the Opposition leader to impel him to make one of the best fighting speeches heard in the House of Commons for many sessions.

What Sir Wilfrid Charged

Sir Wilfrid had charged that the Government had been recklessly lavish in expenditure; that the special taxes were unduly heavy on the poor; while the tariff increases were not made for the sake of needed revenue but to benefit the wealthy and privileged classes. He pictured the increase of the British preferential rate also as an ungrateful and unpatriotic act when Britian and British trade were suffering so severely from the war.

Finance Minister's Reply.

Hon. Mr. White, in reply, first showed how the Liberals themselves a few years ago had raised the duties on many articles imported from Britain, and he left it to them to answer whether they did it for the sake of the revenue or for the sake of prices. Then he pointed out that as far as a preference to British trade goes, it had a better preference as against other countries under the new tariff than it had before. There was an additional preference of two and a half per cent. Apart from that, the Minister showed that liquor and tobacco had already been subjected to all the extra taxation they could stand at the session of last August.

The Budget Provisions

He provided for raising all the revenue he could by certain special taxes and then he was forced to fall back on the tariff to raise the rest.

He could not put all the increase on finished articles because there was a limit to the point to which various articles could be profitably taxed. Consequently, he was obliged to tax free goods and raw materials. As a necessary result of that he was obliged to raise the tariff on manufactured goods from Britain, as from other countries. Otherwise, the British manufacturers, competing against our manufacturers now under a handicap, would simply have driven Canadians out of business.

Mr White's "Inheritance".

In repelling the charge of extravagance against the present government, Hon. Mr. White told of the load he had to shoulder on becoming Minister of Finance. The late Government had borrowed in a period of fourteen months shortly before no less than $110,000,000 on the London market. The Liberals had launched into huge and costly projects of all kinds, and tens of millions of dollars spent on them would be simply lost to the country.

Hon. Mr. White also showed that even if the Government had shut down on public works this year and thrown thousands of men out of work, it would still have had to raise a large amount of money by special war taxes. There was a deficit of $80,000,000 to be made up, and no sane financier would think of trying to borrow it all, especially at a time like this.

Confident of Public Approval

The Minister asserted with confidence that the people approved of the Budget and were behind the Government, and he boldly challenged the Opposition, if they disputed it, to consult them on the issue. To Sir Wilfrid, who had suspected his motive in raising the tariff, he replied that he had a suspicion that his opposition to the increase of the British preference rate was due to the fact that he had a troublesome conscience on account of his leading in the defeat of the Naval Bill which the Government introduced two years ago to enable Canada to do her duty in the matter of Imperial defence.

Sir Wilfrid spoke for about an hour and Hon. Mr. White for three hours.

Will Vote Next Tuesday

An arrangement was come to between the whips to-day whereby the vote on the amendment to the Budget proposed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be taken on Tuesday next.

It is regarded as hardly possible now that Parliament will prorogue before the latter part of April or May.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, at the outset of his speech, said that while the Opposition had no desire to impede the Government in its handling of the war situation, "it was their duty to point out the faults of the fiscal resolutions referred to in the Budget. They were represented as being due to the war but "they were, as I believe", said Sir Wilfrid, "made only under color of the war."

The Opposition, he added, had the right to criticize the Government. The functions of Parliament had not been suspended. In England the Government was criticized by the Opposition during this war as in past wars. Fox severely criticized Pitt for refusing the peace overtures of Bonaparte.

Bright and Cobden had condemned the Government for the Crimean War. The Canadian Opposition had therefore full right to criticize actions of the Government here.

They thought that Britain was absolutely in the right in this war, and they gave their adherence to the decision that Canada should do her share. They had given the Government their support and Sir Wilfrid had given directions that no literature of partisan character should go out from the Liberal Bureau.

The Opposition had adhered to this decision though their opponents, he said, had sent out party literature. If the opposition had been consulted about the budget proposals they would have been happy to have given their views to the Minister of Finance and the Government. Both sides might have made concessions, and they might have reached an unanimous conclusion. He did not complain about this, but Hon. Mr. White could not complain, either, if the Opposition had to take issue with him.

Finance Minister's Serious Task

The Finance Minister had a serious task, Sir Wilfrid added, but it was not thrust suddenly upon him. There were warning signs, but what precaution had he taken? He had not slackened speed. The storm came and found him drifting and helpless. The expenditure on consolidated account of ninety-eight millions in 1912 increased to 140 millions in 1915. The Finance Minister should have used the pruning knife, said Sir Wilfrid, and prevented the imposition of this war taxation. He added that he did not oppose the expenditure on railways and canals, for they would provide employment, but there were in the estimates 22 millions for 600 different items of public works, public buildings, etc., all over the country. Such works away from the larger centres would be of no use in providing work for the unemployed.

Says Extra Taxes Not War Taxes

These extra taxes were not war taxes at all, continued the leader of the Opposition. The increase in the tariff was for the benefit and profit of the protected and wealthy classes. The special tax on the banks, loan and insurance companies was a very moderate one. Those companies could well believe that they had a friend at court. The pin prick would cause them no hurt at all. It would be a pleasant surprise to them that they were let off so easily. The postal increases of 33 per cent. in one case an 50 per cent. in the other were a very doubtful experiment. It was unlikely that much revenue would come from them. Sir Wm. Mullock had found that reduction of the postal rate brought an increase in revenue. The tax on railway traveling was absolutely unfair to the poor, and was to the benefit and advantage of the rich. The basis of the tax was wrong. It should have been graded according to the second class, first class and parlor car tickets. Sir Wilfrid developed this argument at great length, picturing the wealthy young prodigal traveling in oriental comfort and splendor and paying no more tax on his ticket than the poor man in the second class car.

New Tariff Not a War Tariff

The new tariff was not a war tariff, said Sir Wilfrid. It was for revenue and not for the profit of the wealthy and privileged classes, the Finance Minister would have selected the articles to be taxed. He would have with this tariff a minimum of revenue and a maximum of loss and inconvenience. Why tax articles that we don't import at all? What revenue would come from the tariff on meats and cereals, yet it would be possible for speculators to make wealth for themselves at the expense of the poor? Wheat and flour had been excepted from the tariff increase. The Finance Minister would not dare to tax the bread of the people, and Sir Wilfrid aproved of that, but why not except all articles of food?

There was an increase in the duties on wines but no increase in the excise. Sir Wilfrid said he was informed this would mean a very large profit to the distillers, about $6,000,000.

The increased duty on British goods was a blow to British trade, and we had lately got a loan there on easy terms to carry on the war. Germany was trying to injure British trade and this new tariff was not a Canadian idea, but at best a German conception. The British preference had been a great benefit to Canadian trade. Four years ago the Conservatives would not let Canada sell to the United States, and now they would not let her buy from Great Britain.

Sir Wilfrid's Amendment.

Sir Wilfrid then moved the following amendment:—

"That this House is ready to provide for the exigencies of the present situation and to vote all necessary ways and means to that end, but it regrets that in the measure under consideration duties are imposed which must be oppressive upon the people whilst yielding little or no revenue and that the said measure is particularly objectionable in the fact that instead of favoring it, it is placing extra barriers against Great Britain's trade with Canada at a moment when the mother country is under a war strain unparalleled in history."

We are Prepared to Meet the Issue Replies Hon. Mr. White.

Hon. W. T. White, in rising to reply, remarked that Sir Wilfrid had said that he need not complain if the Opposition took issue with them over the budget. "I want to say to the right honorable member that we do not complain. We welcome the issue on this budget or on any other matter they care to bring forward. We ask no indulgence. We are prepared to meet fairly and squarely the issue he has presented to us."

Mr. A. K. MacLean, the Financial critic of the Opposition Mr. White added, had charged the Government with extravagance, saying that the war was not the cause of the present financial position of the Government. He called the fiscal proposals unscientific and inadequate.

"He should be right at home in dealing with extravagance," said Hon. Mr. White.

A Serious Charge

"The late Government had such a career of unbridled extravagance, especially during its later years. Its continuance for any length of time at that rate would have ruined the credit of the Dominion. "I speak with full realization of the gravity of the charge I make against them. No man has a better opportunity of realizing the consequence of that policy than I. Their prodigal and reckless extravagance made a heavier load for my shoulders than any finance minister ever had to bear in this country before."

Liberals' Ruinous Railway Policy

Mr. White referred then to "the ruinous policy of the late Government," and the legacies of hundreds of millions of direct and indirect liabilities—obligations not due to any action of this Government, but to the mis-management and reckless extravagance of the honorable gentlemen opposite." A very considerable portion of the monies spent, or to be spent, in completing the undertakings started by them, he added, "is inevitably lost to the Dominion."

Holds the Liberals to Responsibilities

"Chickens always come home to roost," Mr. White said, "and I am going to see that the chickens for which my honorable friends are responsible roost where they belong. They are going to leave their troubles on our doorstep. To deal with all the mis-management of the late Government would require a special session of Parliament. I propose to deal with only a few of them."

The N.T.R. was estimated by the Finance Minister in 1904 to cost $60,000,000, while Sir Wilfrid estimted the cost at only $13,000,000. He said the interest of $60,000,000 was $1,800,000 a year and for seven years this was $13,000,000; after seven years he thought, the N.T.R. would be on a paying basis because the G.T.P. would be paying the three per cent. interest on the cost of that part of their line. As a matter of fact, the cost has been $200,000,000, more than enough to pay for Canada's part in this great war in which we are fighting for the liberties of the empire and of the world.

A Striking Difference

The difference beween Sir Wilfrid's estimate and the actual cost of the N.T.R. was enough to pay the cost of the war to Canada until the end of the next financial year.

The road, also, has not been built continuously, but the section from Levis to Moncton was rusting and rotting, while the building of the western sections was delayed for one reason or another. The result was that it cost the G.T.P. about twice as much to built their western sections as they estimated. Hon. Frank Oliver had spoken about railway rates. He should either deny responsibility for the railway policy of the late Government or forever quit mentioning railway rates.

Hon. Mr. White hoped that Sir Wilfrid's title to statesmanship would not depend on his railway policy. It would come home to the taxpayers of Canada for generations.

Some Big Advances

It was on account of the delay in completing the N.T.R. from Cochrane to Winnipeg, said Hon. Mr. White, that he had to lend the G.T.R. $15,000,000 a couple of years ago and a further $16,000,000 later. This was "in order to save this road, this child of my right honorable friend's imagination, yet he will denounce me for last fall saving the road by an advance of six millions so that they could link up the prairie section with the Prince Rupert section."

He also had to furnish $10,000,000 in connection with the implementing clause of the G.T.R. contract, including the necessary purchase of their bonds.

"Then they talk about the rich legacy they left and their solvent estate. If obligations are children, my right honorable friend is truly the father of his country. (Laughter.)

Who Bungled Quebec Bridge

"Who bungled the Quebec Bridge, which will cost from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 in all before completed? Am I blamable, because I had to find money for all these purposes, some of them most unwisely undertaken. On four accounts only, $125,000,000 have been paid in the last four years.

"Then there are the indirect liabili-

ACROSS the Bay of Fundy from St. John, New Brunswick, lies the historic coast of Nova Scotia, so full of romance, so beautiful to the eye that the hearts of those who visit it are kept in one perpetual enchantment. Digby and the little fishing villages on this coast of giant tide Annapolis Royal, with memories of Champlain and the first adventurous explorers from Old France, the orchard and the dairy land of the Annapolis Valley, Evangeline's country of the Grand Pre and Blomidon and Minas Basin, the scene of the great banishment of the Acadians—these have a charm that well might draw the traveller across the Great Continent from the Pacific.

All this country is served by the Dominion Atlantic Railway in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Wolfville is the chief centre for visitors to the Land of Evangeline. "Before the windows of Wolfville," says C. G. D. Roberts, the well known writer, "enrolls a superb view of marshes of pale green reclaimed from the sea by the spades of old time Acadian farmers, sharp strips of red and orange-tawny flats, where the retreating tide has left the beach uncovered, to the left front a well-grouped cluster of white cottages, spires and masts about a bridge, the shipping village of Port Williams; the long, low lines of green upland outstretching from either side to almost the centre of the picture, the delicious summer retreats of Starr's Point and Long Island; between them and beyond, away to the far, blue barrier of the Parrsboro shore the restless waters of Minas Basin yellow in the foreground, but in the distance, dominating all the scene with its mass of sombre indigo, the majestic bastion of Blomidon out-thrust against the tides. These are effects of full daylight; but the aerial magic of sunrise (too seldom seen), and the voluptuous sorcery of sunset such transformations are wrought as make the scene an ever-changing realm of fairy.

Three miles distant to the east, is Grand Pre itself, now a rich but scattered farming settlement. It is on the line of the Dominion Atlantic, and travellers who are passing through obtain from the car windows a good view of the scene of the Great Banishment. There are the storied meadows, and there, close to the station, are willows planted by Acadian hands. On the slope behind the station are gnarled French apple trees and stiff French poplars, and a short way further on is the Gaspereau mouth, where the exiles embarked. The car windows, indeed, afford a swift panoramic of what might be called "Views of Evangeline." But the best way to go to Grand Pre from Wolfville is by carriage.

The ancient Acadian village which Colonel Winslow and his New Englanders depopulated so effectually in that eventful Autumn of 1755 is supposed to have extended in a long, thin line from about where the Grand Pre station of the Dominion Atlantic now stands to somewhere near the next station of Horton Landing. Then, as now, the Acadians trailed their villages along a single street. Close to the station is a row of gnarled willows, whose branches perchance tell over to the young leaves of each recurring spring what they saw of Evangeline and her sorrow. Here suitably enclosed is "Evangeline's Well," and near it were unearthed some blacksmith's tools, sufficient to justify the pleasant tradition that this was the very site of the village smithy. In the immediate neighborhood were discovered foundations of a largish building, which may have been the chapel in which the Acadians were imprisoned before they were sent out on baord the ships.

ties the guarantees which were initiated by the late Government. They gave guarantees of $70,000,000 to the G.T.P. and $55,000,000 to the C.N.R. These companies as a result became involved with the credit of the provinces as well.

"In the face of these facts how can they charge this Government with extravagance? Whenever extravagance is charged from this side against them their only answer is to put up the white flag and throw up both hands because there is no possible defence open to them in the facts."

Hon. Mr. White told of the surplus in the first year of the present Government, the largest surplus in the history of the country, enabling $25,000,000 to be taken off the debt of the country. On March 31 last the debt was less than when the Government came into power. In two years and nine months after the Liberals came in the debt increased by $8,000,000.

In the same period, at the end of Liberal rule the debt increased by $70,000,000.

Now, he added, Mr. A. K. McLean called, "Stop the public works." and Mr. Pugsley "came along as a sort of salvage operation to pull off the rocks. He explained that he only wanted us to "slow down on the public works."

Mr. Pugsley's works, he added, were made one of the gems of Parliamentary literature. He said the Government "might have wiped out all expenditure on public works for the next fiscal year." "Then," said Mr. White, "he added, 'this is if need be.' (Laughter.)

"My estimates show that $180,000,000 has to be made up next fiscal year. We are trying to meet the situation, but we are not going to lose our heads over it, nor do anything to destroy the credit of this country."

Criticizes Sir Wilfrid Again

Sir Wilfrid has also favored stopping public works. What had he done some years ago about public works? At the Imperial conference in 1907 when Dr. Smart moved that the Dominions should make a contribution for the maintenance of the Imperial navy, Sir Wilfrid said that Canada could not do so. She had to make expenditures on public works. Public works weighed more with him then than the supreme duty of contributing to the defence of the empire.

If Sir Wilfrid had now to choose between raising the money or shutting down on public works, what would he have done? The answer could be left to the House.

Mr. Pugsley had talked of the sacrifice that he made at Hon. Mr. Fielding's request in 1908. Mr. White had had looked this up and found that the estimates for 1907 were ten millions, while those for 1908 were twelve millions, and for 1909 they were seventeen millions.

Mr. Pugsley—How much is consolidated fund and how much on capital account?

World Wide Effects of War

Mr. White—It is all on consolidated fund account. The capital account was millions more. Mr. Maclean had said that the customs revenue had fallen but little as a result of the war.

Mr. White then dealt with the paralyzing effect of the war on commerce and finance all over the world. The borrowing process was not by the importation of goods from England and other countries. Could this be cut off and the revenue not be affected? It was "an insult to the intelligence of the public to say that the war had no effect on the revenue. It would be a great compliment to Canada to be able to say truly that her trade had not suffered by the war. In Britain the imports fell off from eighteen to twenty-eight per cent. in the first months of the war. In the United States an increase in imports was charged to decreases of from five to eighteen per cent. In Australia the imports decreased from four to twenty-eight per cent.

British Preference.

"Why did my Right Hon. friend raise the question of British preference to the increase in the duties on white lead, paint, varnishes, woollens, etc., from Britain. The increase on woollens was from 23 to 30 per cent. and on dry and white lead from three to 20 per cent. Was this done for protection or because the revenue was needed? If it was done for protection, then why all this talk about our protecting the manufacturers? And, if for revenue, then how can he accuse us now and say we should not have increased the rate of the British preference?

Tells Why They Can't Stop Public Works

Mr. White added that the British preference was more advantageous now for Britain than before he brought down the Budget. The whole effect of the obstruction argument was that the Government should shut down on public works. They forgot that the country was growing. Trade had increased from 750 millions in 1911 to 1,100 millions last year. The machinery of Government had to be increased all over the country. When contracts had been solemnly entered into for such works as the N.T.R. and the Quebec Bridge, the Government could not well stop them.

Mr. Pugsley's Argument

Mr. Pugsley: The contracts provide that where the appropriation is exhausted the contractors must wait.

Mr. White: "Just for a few minutes I'll make my hon. friend a contractor, and he knows something about contracts. If he has a big plant gathered together and several thousand men working, can the Government simply tell him to quit work and suffer the loss that he would have to meet? That might just be possible under certain national circumstances but relief works would have to be started all over the country if we did that now.

"I have received requests from numerous provinces and municipalities for assistance in looking after their unemployed. An appeal has just gone out from Montreal for a combined Dominion, Provincial and municipal fund for this purpose The Mayor of Montreal has also asked that more public works be started.

Mr. Turriff had told what a man in private business would do in a time like this, Mr. White added. But such a man was in an entirely different position from the Government. He had no obligations outside his own family. He could shut down his business and dismiss all his employes, though to the credit of the employers of this country it could be said they had not done so. But what a private business man could do was not open to the Government of this country. The Opposition had said no new taxes were necessary at this time. They did not appreciate the effect of the war on this country. Apart from the war, the Government had to find $80,000,000

"I tell them they don't understand the Budget, but the people of this country do understand it. They realize that we are faced with a serious situation and are not temporizing with it."

"We have to pay the interest on the war loans and the pensions, yet the Opposition say this is not war taxation. I would have expected more from my right honorable friend (Sir Wilfrid). Such a statement is nothing but an absurdity and a partisan misrepresentation. I have also been likened to a man putting out a fradulent prospectus."

Mr. Pugsley: Hear, hear.

Mr. White: When he says "hear, hear," he does more credit to his partisanship than to his intellect.

Referring to the special taxes, he asked if anyone begrudged the use of a part of them on the interest on the war loan and the pensions? The Government had lost the power to borrow as freely as before, but it had to find the money some way. The taxation proposed was the least the Government could adopt unless it deliberately shirked its responsibility. Even if it cut off expenditures as was suggested, as much as possible of the deficit would have to be raised by extra taxes anyway. It was a duty to those who were to come after that this generation should bear as much as possible. It was a very moderate taxation considering the responsibility the country was assuming.

Mr. White showed how the late Government in one period of 14 years borrowed $110,000,000 in the London market. "I may hold the record as a war borrower," said the Finance Minister, "but the late finance minister carries off the blue ribbon as a peace borrower."

Mr. Pugsley—For what?

Mr. White—"To meet the extravagant expenditures that I have mentioned." The taxation measures, he added, were to supply a portion of the expenditures Canada was making in connection with the war, and to maintain on a proper basis the financial credit of the country. "Notwithstanding the assertion of my right honorable friend that is the purpose, and there is no other purpose whatsoever. We are in this position—that we must impose fresh taxation or cease sending troops to the front to participate in the defence of Canada and the Empire. I would be wanting in my duty if I did not cope with the difficulty. The people expect me to do my duty in this situation, and I have done it. Instead of raising too much money by taxation I have preferred the other way. Leading financiers of the world would say that the country should pay more in taxes. But on account of the effect of the war on the business of the country I have refrained from doing so.

Minister Points out That the Opposition has an Alternative.

"Now the Opposition must take one of those stands, either that we must cease sending troops to the war, or they must find some other method of raising supplementary revenue; or, if they are sincere and desire the prosecution of the war, they must concur in the fiscal proposals of the Government.

In reply to Mr. E. M. Macdonald, Hon. Mr. White said he doubted if he could borrow any money for general purposes on the London market unless the country bore some of the burden by special taxation. He added that there was no other purpose but to supplement the revenues.

Income Tax a Broken Reed

Where was the alternative proposition? Mr. McNutt (Saltcoats) was the only man to suggest any; and he favored an income tax and a land tax on unoccupied land. An income tax would bring much less than $2,000,000, considering the cost of collection. It would be a broken reed to depend on at this time. As for a land tax, municipalities were now complaining that they were unable to collect arrears of taxes on lands.

"At the present time how many millions could I take from the owners of unoccupied lands and within what time? The obligations of Canada must be met on the nail. We cannot wait for the show processes of the income tax or land tax."

Deals With Special Taxes

Hon Mr. White added that the Government was not responsible for the legacy of heavy liabilities left by the late Government nor for the German Emperor bringing on the war. Last August, at the war session, liquor and tobacco had been taxed practically to the limit. Sir Wilfrid had referred with levity and ridicule to the special taxation. Mr. White did not believe he understood it. His criticism of the tax on railway tickets showed that he did not. If the tax were raised too high on any class of transportation the people in places near the border would travel through the United States whenever possible. The same was true of steamship tickets. These things had all been carefully considered by the Minister. The tax did not come hard on the poor man. There was no tax on tickets of less than a dollar, while parlor car tickets costing twenty-five cents would have to pay a tax of five cents. On tickets of over $1, the tax was not above five per cent, and the poor man would not complain of it.

The Letter Tax.

The letter tax had also been criticized. It fell, however, on the business men and companies who sent hundreds of letters daily and were best able to pay such a tax. "The people generally are not unwilling to pay their mite," he said. He then explained that he was forced to put a tariff on free goods and raw materials because he had to raise the revenue and to put too much duty on other articles would defeat his object. There was a point in the taxing article past which one could not go if he wished to get any revenue.

If he put a duty on coal, coke, and iron ore, and did not put a higher duty on the product of Canadian steel companies they could not, under the handicap, compete against the British manufacturers. The same was true of other manufacturers. Hence the duties on British goods had to be raised also.

The Opposition had said that the manufacturers would benefit largely from the tariff increases. They were compelled to raise the price of their product because they had to pay more for their coal and raw materials. As for the farmers, said Mr. White, he had never refused the Minister of Agriculture the amounts he needed to encourage agriculture, and he never would. Ten million dollars had been spent to supply those in the stricken districts in the west with seed grain and to help them otherwise.

Another Question for Sir Wilfrid

Sir Wilfrid had thought that the tariff on the banks and other companies was a very light one. Why did not he impose it in 1904 instead of increasing the tariff on woollens and other goods imported from England? He had even raised the duty on granite headstones, so that the man who had gone into his grave would have to pay a heavier tax on importations from Britain. The goods coming into Canada free from Britain had been $25,000,000 and a duty of five per cent would not prevent Canadians from buying them still. The Liberals always said that the consumer paid the duty. In that case the tax would not fall on Britain at all. The people of Canada will pay these taxes and do it gladly.

Our First Duty

"Our first duty is the war, till the war is over", said the Minister. "Shall we send our flesh and blood and quibble over taxation necessary to maintain them there Our object is to raise money directly and indirectly for that purpose. The attack on the Budget has signally failed because it was fundamentally unsound. The duty of the Opposition is to oppose, we are told. I don't believe it. The duty applies only to proper cases for opposition.

Says Debate Has Been Trivial in Character

But I say this is not a proper case. I have had it borne in on me that this debate has been trivial in character while the greatest war in history is in progress. Britain is facing an expenditure of $10,000,000 per day with a population of 15,000,000.

Dr. Michael Clark—"And free trade."

Mr. White—Better not be too sure about that. Canada would have sent men faster but for the poor facilities due to the starving of the Militia Department and the opposition of the Liberals to expenditures for the department. The people are saying send one, two, three contingents. Send all the men that are necessary. But money is needed, and the people must be prepared to sacrifice not only blood but treasure.

Trivial Charges

The charges of extravagance are trivial and vexatious when the Government is struggling with the greatest crisis with which a Canadian government was ever confronted. Was Sir Wilfrid wise, he asked, in criticizing the increase of British preference rate and perhaps endangering to some extent the credit of the Dominion? If he was representing the situation unfairly, and it goes across the seas with ill-effects to the country, I ask is that co-operating with the government in this crisis? The Opposition say that I am helping the privileged and wealthy classes, and that it is the object of the budget. I shall do myself the injustice of denying that statement.

Tells Sir Wilfrid To Read Shakespeare.

Referring to Sir Wilfrid's blocking of the Naval Bill, the Minister said he should read the sleep-walking scene in Macbeth, where Lady Macbeth looks on the hand that had slain King Duncan, and lamented that all the perfumes in the world would not cleanse the stains from that hand. In response to the advice of the Admiraltly two years ago the Government introduced the Naval Bill to assist in the defence of the Empire. My right, honorable friend obstructed and killed that bill. I say now, without imputation against his statesmanship, that all the amendment he may move now will never obliterate the memory of the action he took in regard to that bill.

"The people desire the Government to carry on this war with all its power and all its soul. If the Opposition doubts that we have this mandate let them say so. We shall not fail to take all necessary measures to carry out the whole duty we owe to ourselves and to the Empire."

Hon. Mr. White was loudly cheered at various points in his address, and he was given an ovation by members on the Government side when he concluded.

Dr. Michael Clark and J. H. Sinclair, on the Liberal side, and Donald Sutherland on the Government side, also took part in the debate, which was adjourned at 1.15 Thursday morning.

GERMAN FIELD KITCHENS

Motor Vehicles Haul the Cook Ovens Around After the Army

All civilized nations have long recognized that food supplies play almost as important a part in the winning or losing of battles as ammunition, marksmanship, or personal bravery. The Germans have not failed to appreciate this point, and their methods of feeding soldiers are scientifically carried out under the direction of dietetic specialists, who have devoted years to the study of food requirements of fighting men.

The daily ration includes 26 ounces of fresh bread or 17 ounces of biscuit, 13 ounces of fresh meat or 7 ounces of smoked meat, 4 ounces of rice or 8 ounces of flour or 52 ounces of potatoes, 1 ounce of salt, nearly 1 ounce of roasted coffee or one-tenth of an ounce of tea, and half an ounce of sugar.

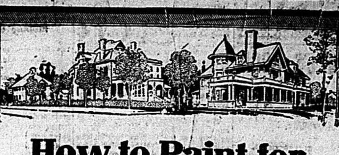
For cooking food the Germans use ingenious field kitchens. These are attached to motor vehicles which follow the troops from point to point. The kitchens are fitted with every modern appliance to be found in an up-to-date culinary establishment, and they enable the raw food to be well cooked and served up hot to the men, thereby warming them better than cold tinned foods. When these portable kitchens go astray, however, as they often do, the German soldiers are in a sorry plight, as raw coffee or tea or rice is of little use. Probably this is why the Kaiser's troops often fall back on a diet of maize and horseflesh, unappetizing edibles which have been found in large quantities in the knapsacks of German prisoners.

Be an Optimist

Every optimist in Canada ought to take a pessimist in charge. The cheerful man should gently lead the disciple of calamity to some quiet corner, and there impart to him as kindly as only the true optimist can, the knowledge that this country will still be distinctly visible on any good map of the world when peace is concluded in Berlin.—Saturday Sunset, Vancouver.

Findlater After More Glory

Among those who lately joined the army at Turriff was Piper Findlater, V.C., a farmer at Cairnhill, Scotland. It will be remembered that Piper Findlater gained the V.C. at Dargai in October, 1897, when he continued playing "The Cock o' the North" after being wounded.



How to Paint for Less Money

We'll tell you how in three words—use less gallons. That's the thing to go by in Paint—not the price per gallon, but the number of gallons required plus the length of time it will wear and look well.

"100% Pure" Paint costs about half as much, counting the surface it covers, and wears two or three times as long as ordinary paint.

You pay by the gallon—both for the paint and for putting it on. The Paint that is cheapest for you is the paint that spreads easiest and covers the most surface.

HOW NAMES ORIGINATE

It was James I., who had a pretty wit of his own that named the part of the beef "above the loin," sirloin. In his day that particular cut was called by its French name surlonge or "over the loin." But the English monarch was so pleased with a dish of meat served him one day after a hunt that placing his sword across the platter as if he were to dub a knight, he exclaimed not surlonge, but "Sir Loin" and from that day the juicy steak bears the noble name of knighthood conferred upon it by a king.

The strawberry plant never would stay at home 'round the parent stock, so like other wanderers it lost its good name.

Whatever name the little red berry had in the beginning no one seems to remember, but because the vine was always straying from the main plant it was called "stray-berry." After awhile even that name was lost by mispronunciation, and the luscious berry that bears no resemblance at all to straw is now called strawberry.

The "Tune the Old Cow Died On" was not ragtime. History throws very little light on the career of this unhappy bovine, but it does relate that when she had nothing to eat the farmer tried to make her forget her troubles by playing a tune on his fiddle. The tune was too much for her. She gave up the ghost and died.

It was a bishop of olden times who first "put his foot in it." and even since then the most ordinary layman who makes a blunder is said to "put his foot in it."

It wasn't the bishop's fault after all, but the housewives who ran to doors and windows every time the good bishop passed and asked for his blessing—and while getting it they let the porridge burn. Then they blamed the bishop for the trouble and said "the bishop put his foot in it."

Boxes Securely Held

In an English box making machine the nails, driven at an angle through two boards at once, are turned back to form a hook in the second board.

Safety For Ladder Users

To prevent ladders slipping on smooth surfaces there has been invented a hinged foot that is a combination of a rubber pad and sharp spikes.

Household Helps

Before using tea, spread it on a sheet of paper and place in a warm—not hot—oven for 10 or 15 minutes. It will greatly improve the flavor and it will also go much further.

If you put two tablespoons of vinegar in the water when boiling eggs they will not boil out if they are cracked. Eggs slightly cracked can be had for half the price of sound ones.

When you have bread very dry and stale, hold the loaf under the tap till wet slightly, put it in a loaf tin, and place another on top, and bake over again. The result will be practically a new loaf. Use a very hot oven.

Great saving can be effected in the use of metal polish if it is mixed with paraffin oil. A tin of polish and about four egg cupfuls of the oil shaken together will last for months, besides being much cleaner to use.

Study Your Feet

Wet feet are the root of many evils, and yet women, especially girls, are not half so careful as they should be in having their footwear absolutely watertight. Much aching, pain, and weariness would be avoided if the feet were more carefully guarded.

Warm feet, too, are essential to health and comfort. Tight shoes or boots are sufficient to keep the feet cold. Wear good-fitting but not too tight footgear, and if you are prone to bad circulation slip a woollen sock inside the boot. These can be purchased quite cheaply, and are not bulky.

HINTS FOR HUSBANDS

Two Sides to the Question of Harmony in the Home

One so often reads "hints for wives" that we might take a peep at the other side of the question.

Of course, it is very nice for the breadwinner to be met with a "pleasant smile" and to find a nice dinner awaiting him in an atmosphere calm and peaceful, free from domestic cares, but what about the tired housewife? She deserves a little consideration, too! Therefore, don't come home with a surly frown because things have gone wrong at the office—it isn't her fault!

Don't always be choking the delicious dishes "mother used to make for next to nothing" down her throat.

Don't shut her up and make her feel small by saying "You wouldn't understand" if she wants to chat about your work.

Remember that domestic worries and troubles are very real ones, and be sympathetic if she tells you of them.

Remember that while you are out in the big world—even though working hard—her life is cramped and narrow, so take her out sometimes in the evening.

Take your fair shares of home worries and responsibilities—you generally expect quite your share of its ease and comfort!

Pay her pretty little compliments sometimes—just as you did when you were courting.

Let her know in good time when you are bringing a friend home—a cosy dinner planned for two may prove a dire failure for three!

In short—let her share your joys and sorrows while you share hers.

Gentlemen who were long on wheat did not ask that the Dardanelles be bombarded.

HOPEVILLE'S BOOM

Town Failed to Get the Railroad, but Prosperity Came Another Way.

By GEORGE ELMER COBB.

Thus Jared Bross, of the board of trustees of the neat, picturesque, but isolated town of Hopeville.

"You mean the railroad has missed us," corrected Phillip Dawes, president of this same board of trustees. "Well, gentlemen, that shall not prevent Hopeville continuing to do itself proud, I trust, as a model village without a blemish."

Very proud of the community he had helped build up was Phillip Dawes, and he spoke with enthusiasm. He had always predicted great things in store for Hopeville. Never a village of fairer location and environment. A rare trout stream bounded one of its limits, a dream of a lake bounded another. There were hills, dales and lovely undulating meadows, a thrifty farming community surrounding, and the town people ideal, morally, socially and as to their municipal harmony.

"Some day Hopeville will forge to the front," was his optimistic slogan—"some day values will go up, and each man come into his own."

When the new railroad was talked of, old residents began to boost their acres and town lots as to values. Enormous fortunes were figured out. In fancy they saw a busy traffic, crowds of summer visitors, picnickers from the city, scattered farm trade centered at the new shipping point. Hopes rose high, then they were correspondingly depressed, for the railroad made a detour, and Byron, quite a busy little city eight miles distant, was made the terminus of the new branch line railway.

"Trying to Get a Railroad Into Hopeville?"

"Wish I'd settled there as I intended to ten years ago!" grumbled disloyal and disagreeable Jared Bross. "There's some go to Byron. I don't care if they do encourage a riff-raff crowd—stir and sensation bring in the dollars, don't they?"

"But we don't want the dollars that way," insisted Dawes. "We go in for schools, and rational amusements, and clean, healthy children. Do you ever find any riotous crowds in Hopeville? No, sir!"

Bross had a strong personal reason for being disgruntled with Hopeville. He was a man of some means and his son, Bradley, had married a poor humble girl. The old man had railed at the secret match, and had promptly discarded his disobedient son. Nellie Horton, whom Bradley had married, was an orphan, but her parents had left her a small farm just out of town. There the wedded pair settled down. It was a poor place, however, situated near a sterile ravine, soil not fertile, and affording a bare living.

"That boy will rue the day he disregarded my advise!" the elder Bross had said one day to Dawes.

"Oh, nonsense!" retorted his neighbor, "Bradley is a good boy. The poor young pair have hard scratching, perhaps, but they're happy and contented as two birds in a nest."

"Humph!" commented the iron-hearted father, and went his way sullen and unlovely.

So Byron got the railroad and what went with it, both good and bad. There was a good deal of grumbling in Hopeville, and in a measure Phillip Dawes looked upon as a disappointing founder and builder. The pride and ambition of the old man were touched. Then he began to plan to retain his prestige. Neighbors noticed that he went to a city fifty miles distant a great deal. Also, that he brought distinguished-looking business men back with him, whom he showed all over the district.

"Not at all," retorted Dawes, with an enigmatical smile. "We don't want one—why, I intend to explain to you weak sister growlers at the annual."

The "annual" was a time honored institution of Hopeville, and now again close at hand. Every year Phillip Dawes had insisted that the representative residents of the place meet at the town hall to celebrate the founding of the village. Speeches, congratulations, suggestions for civic improvements comprised the features of the program. Then a banquet. Dawes was always the chairman of the functions, and so felicitous was his handling of the various toasts proposed, that he had won the title of "The Cheer Master."

They could hear the distant echo of an engine whistle across the valley as they sat in the town hall on the present occasion. It reminded some of the sore ones of their disappointment. Dawes, however, was in great fettle that evening, and when the banquet board was reached his buoyant, optimistic air communicated itself to others.

They never had anything stronger than clear, sparkling water at these celebration functions. They had nothing stronger, because in the first place no one seemed to want it, and furthermore the big artesian well that supplied the town ranked third in the state as to purity of outrush, so, as a matter of local loyalty, the toasts were drunk in aqua pura.

"Hopeville—her splendid past and her glorious future," was the toast read.

"Humph!" grumbled Bross, "I think, Dawes will have to take a back seat this time."

But Phillip Dawes arose, looking brighter and prouder than he had ever seemed. He took no back water on the buoyant predictions of past years. He looked quite dazzled as he spoke of the golden stream of good fortune now knocking at their doors. And then they drank the toast. And then most everybody made a grimace, set down the unfinished libation, and looked queer.

"Something the matter with the water, friends?" smiled Dawes. "That's the merit of it. It is Hopeville water, though not from the home well. Gentlemen, you have drank of the soon-to-be-celebrated Lithia-Magnesium water, specially presented to you to introduce the last requirement this beautiful district needed to make it famous."

"Say, what are you driving at, anyhow?" inquired Bross bluntly.

"Just this," explained Dawes. "I reasoned from the first that the new railroad would open up a popular outing resort somewhere along its line. The noisy railroad has spoiled Byron. Besides, they have no such magnificent scenery as Hopeville, nor a lake, nor a trout stream, nor the model town. Again, tourists like to ride from terminus in a stage—think they're diving into the primeval wilderness. Well, gentlemen, for two months I have been negotiating with wealthy promoters in the city. The deal is closed, a big hotel is to be built at the head of the lake, and people will come to Hopeville next season, dead loads of them."

Voices arose in eager demands for more detailed information. Property and rents would go up! The town stores would quadruple their business! The rich golden harvest was coming at last!

"But what about this horrible tasting water?" queried Bross, with a wry face.

"Pronounced by chemists the most healthful beverage in the world," boasted Dawes proudly, "a true mineral water. When the promoters learned that, they offered ten thousand dollars cash for the spring it came from."

"And where is that?"

"Down in a forgotten corner of that poor, neglected farm your boy lives on over in the ravine. Now, Neighbor Bross, as all the town is happy over the grand general prospects ahead of us, suppose you go down to the ravine farm and congratulate your son, Bradley, and his wife on their share in the general good luck?"

And thus it was that the name of the popular Cheer Master became a household word in Hopeville for all time to come.

Three Birthdays Yearly.

There is apparently plenty of fun for the child in Sweden in the matter of birthdays, but the parent can hardly be expected to feel the same, for the children there do not confine themselves to one birthday, but they must have three.

Of course, the first one is the real birthday, and the other two are those whose names the Swedish boy or girl bears.

For every day in the year of the Swedish calendar has its own separate name, besides the weekly names which other nations have. Sometimes if the parent gives the child a second name or a first one that cannot be found in the calendar the child loses out on one birthday. And considerable protest must follow, too, when the child becomes old enough to realize what he is missing.

In the German calendar every day has a name also, but the observance of these days is not at all common in the latter country.

INDIANS GROW GRAIN

The Bloods Also Raise Pure Bred Cattle and Good Horses

The Indians on the Blood Reserve, situated between the Belly and St. Mary's Rivers in Southern Alberta, are coming to the front as growers of grain and raisers of cattle. The gaudy Indian warrior has discarded the war paint and the war path to guide the plow. The reserve is the largest in Canada, containing some 354,000 acres of good agricultural land, and the wards of the Government who inhabit it are said to be worth over $5,000 per capita. If they continue to show thee interest in agriculture that has produced for them such abundant harvests, they will before long easily double their per capita wealth. It is now about seven years since farming was taken up as an occupation, but in that time the Indians have been able to prove their ability to grow grain that compares favorably with that of their white neighbors along the reserve.

In addition to grain the Indians have gone in for cattle raising, no bulls but pure-breds of the beef strains being used. All the beef needed for rations among the Indians is raised on the reserve. The cattle are handled as range stock in one large herd with a stockman in charge and Indians to assist him. A few individual Indians own their own cattle and take good care of them.

The Bloods have a sufficient number of horses for their own use, and from time to time the agent issues permits to sell ponies. Their horses are improving through the use of stallions provided by the Indian Department.

WANT IRRIGATION

Alberta Farmers See That it Pays and Ask More of it

Farmers in Southern Alberta circulated a petition to the Dominion Government asking that irrigation, which was such a success as carried out by the Canadian Pacific, be extended to their lands. Past seasons have demonstrated the advantages of irrigation, as irrigated farms have fine crops, whereas in districts where irrigation was not available the results have been sometimes disappointing. In their petition to the Minister of the Interior, the petitioners stated that to meet the construction they would bond their land and were willing to pay the capital cost of installing this system, with interest of four per cent., extending the time of repayment of the cost of construction over a period of forty years—the first payment of such a sum of indebtedness to become due four years after the completion of the canal, thus affording farmers an opportunity to be in a position to make the payments promptly by getting their farms in a proper condition for irrigating growing crops in a profitable manner.

BUSINESS METHODS APPLIED TO THE FARM

Utilization of Waste Space a Problem Worthy of Up-to-date Farmer's Careful Consideration

The cost of building material is yearly mounting higher and present conditions indicate that it will go still higher. Alert farmers are beginning to appreciate the fact that the proper conducting of the farm means engineering and studied systematizing in every one of its many phases.

It costs so much to erect a barn that will enclose and shelter a certain volume of space. This space immediately becomes valuable, to obtain it a certain investment has been necessary, depreciation loss amounts to a considerable sum yearly, there is a yearly tax. If this space is utilized, its value and even more, may be realized: if allowed to stand idle, a loss equal to its value will be sustained. Of course, there will be times when space is at a premium and again times when there is ample and to spare, as when mows are crammed with hay and when they are empty; but as this fluctuation is not stable, one must figure his space accommodations at a time this part is occupied.

We have learned that a little thought and figuring will aid one in adapting the various articles needing shelter to the nooks and corners of vacant space best suited to them. When badly pressed for room we have on various occasions hoisted some of the smaller implements into the vacant space above the hay mows. They can be easily moved when necessary, but often plows and harrows that were used for fall work and are to be used early in the spring do not have to be moved if the mow is not used during the winter. Even if they do have to be moved from one side of the mow to the other, it is likely to be time well spent.

We utilized some idle boards and erected two small or loft floors over the driveway in the granary. Though too small to hold large tools, they make place for a lot of smaller articles which are used but few times yet are necessary to have about, butchering utensils, reels of wire, bundles of repair shingles, etc. Many of the smaller articles in this category are suspended on nails, and hooks attached to the rafters and gable ends. In this way valuable floor space is saved and the articles are in plain view and easily located when needed.

Between the joists over the stables and under the mows we have provided places for a lot of things by nailing an occasional slat crosswise beneath them. Especially do we find there long narrow spaces adapted to the storing of boards and scantlings. As fences and old buildings were torn down we have saved the good lumber and stored it in this way. Now, when a piece is desired it is so easy to go to the barn and walk along beneath the pieces until one is found suiting the demands. Here only a few are at a place and they are easily inspected, whereas, when all are in a single pile one has often to handle almost the entire pile before he finds what is wanted.

It has been our practice to hoist our hay ladder into the vacant space between the mows over the driveway in the barn. It is hoisted high enough so that it in no way intereferes with the passage of the team beneath it. Poles resting on the cross beams support it. In this way the rack itself is not only given shelter and gotten out of the way, but constitutes a receptacle for other tools and articles that are placed upon it.

We have also constructed a low loft over the driveway. It is at a place where there is no need of a load being driven beneath it so we made it just high enough to permit us to carry feed under it into the feed lot. Such a loft utilizes a lot of vacant space, and by using some old boards and poles, is easily made. A wagon can be backed up to it and such implements as plows, harrows, etc., can be lifted directly upon it.

We had a pair of extra side boards for the wagon bed that needed storage in a dry place. We searched but a short time; low down along one of the stable walls two pins were driven and the side boards placed upon them. The space they took up was hardly appreciable.—J. R. Grose in "Successful Farming."

Trade of Canada A Billion Dollars

Hon. Dr. Reid Issues Highly Favorable Statement

OTTAWA, March 13.—Trade figures for the eleven months of the fiscal year issued last night by Hon. Dr. Reid, Minister of Customs, show that despite the war, the total trade volume of the Dominion for the year will be well over a billion dollars. The total for the eleven months is $967,632,242.

The statement is the most favorable for many months. The feature of the statement is the enormous increase in the exports of manufactures, showing that the business men of Canada are rapidly adjusting themselves to world conditions and capturing their share of Germany's vanished commerce. Manufactured exports for Februray totalled $8,982,639, as against $4,674,709 for the same month of last year. For the eleven months there is an increase in manufactured exports of no less than $18,000,000, the total for the eleven months being $69,938,711.

A striking feature of the trade figures is the rapid disappearance of the balance of traffic against Canada. A year ago for the eleven months the balance of trade against the Dominion totalled $160,000,000. This year for the same period the total is only $50,000,000.

No One Knows

The Kingston Standard says: There has been much speculation as to the departure of the 21st Battalion for overseas, but owing to the strict censorship maintained, it is impossible to say when Kingston will lose this fine unit of the second expeditionary force. But there are certain signs which indicate the nearness of the departure of this portion of the second contingent for the front and among these is an order which was promulgated by the Divisional office yesterday which reads as follows:—

As all warrant officers, N.C.O.'s and men of the expeditionary force should be in possession of two blankets and one ground sheet at time of arrival at port of debarkation overseas divisional and district commanders will please give such instructions as will ensure that the requisite number of these articles is taken by units before entraining at their stations. The ground sheets should now be in possession of units as part of their mobilization equipment. The blankets will be taken from those in use in the temporary barracks. Commanding officers concerned will take the necessary action for this order to be complied with.

While the above order has previously been published as militia order 110, its place in the Divisional orders of yesterday is suggestive of preparation for departure. When orders are received by the 21st Battalion to leave, there will be neither fuss nor demonstration, but they "Will fold their tents like the Arabs, and silently steal away."

CHILD BURNED TO DEATH

Younger Sister Also Burned With No Hope of Recovery

ST. THOMAS, March 13.—Lillian, three-year-old daughter of Leonard Catchpole, of St. Thomas, was burned to death in her home yesterday afternoon, and her two-year-old sister was so severely burned that no hopes are held out for her recovery. It is believed the children were playing with matches.

Mrs. Catchpole was called to the bedside of a sick neighbor, and she left the children in the house alone. In a few minutes flames were seen bursting from the windows, and the mother, rushing back, tried to enter the burning house to rescue her children, but was driven back by the flames.

A fireman later entered by an upstairs window and found the remains of the three-year-old girl lying on the floor and the younger unconscious in the corner of the room behind a door, where she had hidden to get away from the flames.

DEFENDS SINKING OF AMERICAN SHIP

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Count Bernstorff, German Ambassador in discussing with State Department officials today the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye, defended the action of Captain Thierichens of the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Fredrich, contending that he acted under the declaration of London, which was the only guide he had as to disposition of prizes.

TESTIFY TO TERRIBLE BRITISH SHELL FIRE

Allied Success Largely Due to Perfection of Aerial Scouting —Every German Move Detected

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 15.—The British steamers, Florazan Headlands and Hartdale, torpedoed by German submarines, and about whose fate there had been some doubt, have all gone to the bottom according to an Admiralty announcement today.

A Daily Express despatch from the Belgian frontier says: Convincing indication of the demoralization of German troops which bore the brunt of the five-day onslaught by the British, is the arrival at Ghent and Brussels for trial by court martial of parties of soldiers sent under escort from their trenches for having failed to respond to an order to make counter attacks with sufficient enthusiasm. In some cases, it is said, they even failed altogether to advance. Wounded and captured Germans testify to the terrible accuracy of British shell fire. A Daily Mail despatch from Rotterdam says the British success was largely due to the perfection of their aerial scouting, by which every German move was detected. German officers in Bruges admit that their air service is hopelessly outclassed.

CANADIANS RELIEVE LINE REGIMENTS

Are Fast Getting Used to "Zing of Bullets";Mud Still Very Deep

LONON, March 13.—Proof of the splendid conduct of the Canadians is afforded in a letter received to-day, stating that the contingent is relieving British regulars in the trenches. The period of training is evidently over and the force has been accepted as really fit for active service. The writer of this letter, a Torontonian in the Vancouver Highlanders, states that when first arriving at the front they had 24 hours in the trenches with a line regiment, "just to season the Canadians to the zing of bullets." The mud wase so thick one man had to be dug out. We returned to billet for a few days and then took over a line of trenches and four in billets. We are just in the middle of the artillery zone and shells are flying about all over, occasional rifle bullets singing to complete the harmony.

OLDEST MOTHER 110 BRIDE WHEN 13

THIBODAUX, La., March 13.—Lafourche parish is boasting of the oldest mother in the South. She is Mrs. Paul Breaux, one hundred and ten years old. She has children, grandchildren, great grandchildren, and great-great-grand children.

Her descendants in the direct line are so far estimated at from five to six generations and exceed 1,000 scattered over the entire state.

Her youngest child is in his seventies, and one of her children still living is more than ninety. The oldest mother still gets about her premises unassisted, and while her eyesight had been bad, it is now sufficiently good to permit the threading of a needle. She finds pleasure in getting out in her yard and feeding the chickens and poultry. She was married when thirteen.

CHINAMAN FOUND DEAD IN BED

Was Tardy in Reporting the Circumstances to the Police

TORONTO, March 13.—The police are investigation the death of a Chinaman, Tong Mong Jone, aged 55 years who was found dead in bed on Thursday at 5 Dundas-street, by another celestial, Mong Yew. The latter did not report the death until yesterday, when he notified the police of Claremont Street Station. He claimed that he went up to Jone's room and found him dead. The body will be taken to the morgue and inquest will in all likelihood be held.

BERLIN, March 13.—Because the inhabitants of Lille, a city in France occupied by the Germans, made a demonstration in honor of a group of prisoners of war brought into the city, the German military authorities in control imposed a tax of $100,000, to be paid by the city before March 20. The people of Lille also were forbidden to leave their houses between five o'clock in the evening and seven o'clock in the morning.

MYSTERY ENVELOPES FIELD PROGRESS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 15.—Mystery envelopes the progress of Field Marshall von Hindenburg's latest advance into Poland, but it is the opinion of British observers that the vast forces along the line from the Nieman to the Vistula cannot much longer be kept from a decisive contact unless the direction of the German offensive undergoes a radical change.

Meagre information coming through indicates that the Germans have been successful in the forest of Augustowo, whence the Russians have fallen back under the guns of Grodno. Further to the south in the Mlawa region the German advance has been checked and the Russians are initiating an advance on the northern bank of the Vistula in the direction of Plock. In the Carpathians the Russians are apparently abandoning their defensive attitude, for they are making desperate counter attacks on the Austrians.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., March 13.—County Surogate Judge Fish has been notified by counsel for Mrs Peterson, of 226 North Lisgar street, Toronto, that a settlement has been affected and she will not contest the will of her husband, Christian Peterson, realty broker, who died, here about six months ago following an operation. The will bequeathed the entire estate to Miss Grace Holquist, the testator's stenographer. According to the widow's counsel there was but six hundred dollars left after the debts had been paid.

Retaliating Decree By Great Britain

No Merchant Vessel Allowed to Proceed to any German Port

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 15.—The British order-in-Council decreeing retaliatory measures on the part of the Government to meet the declaration of Germany that the waters surrounding the United Kingdom are a military area, was made public today. The retaliatory measures adopted by the British Government and Allies are, in brief, as follows:

First: No merchant vessel which sailed from her port of departure after March 1st shall be allowed to proceed to any German port, unless she has received a pass permitting her to proceed to some neutral or friendly port named in the pass. Her cargo must be discharged in a British port and placed in the custody of a prize court. This cargo, if not contraband, or if not requisitioned for Government use shall be delivered to the person entitled to it on terms to be decided by the court.

Second: No vessel which sailed from a German port after March 1st shall be allowed to proceed with goods laden at that port, which shall be handed over to a prize court at a British or allied port, and either requisitioned for Government use or sold, the proceeds of the sale to be held by the court until the end of the war.

Similar provisions are made for ships sailing destined for neutral parts, but carrying a cargo which is either the property of the enemy or destined for the enemy's country. These cargoes are to go into a prize court and be adjudicated upon by that court. Provision is made for redress to persons claiming an interest in the cargoes thus seized, provided they are not contraband.

This order-in-Council does not supersede, but merely supplements previous regulations.

Thaw Acquitted Not Yet Free

Not Guilty of Conspiracy, But His Sanity Not Yet Legally Recognized

NEW YORK, March 15.—Special—Harry K. Thaw was acquitted yesterday of conspiracy in escaping from the Matteawan Asylum, August 17, 1913, the charge upon which he was brought back to New York from New Hampshire. Roger Thompson, Richard J. Butler, Eugene Duffy and Thomas Flood, the four men who assisted him in his spectaculor flight by automobile from Matteawan to Canada, likewise were acquitted.

The jury which acquitted Thaw had labored all night and until 12.20 o'clock this afternoon in an effort to reach a verdict.

As soon as the verdict was announced Thaw was given into the custody of Sheriff Griffhagen of New York county. The four codefendants were discharged.

A motion to have Thaw committed to Matteawan Asylum as an insane person was made by Deputy Attorney-General Cook immediately after the jury had rendered its verdict. This motion was combatted by Thaw's counsel, who announced that inasmuch as Thaw was brought here on the conspiracy charge and found not guilty he should be returned to the State of New Hampshire as a sane man.

A formal motion that he be so returned was then made by Thaw's lawyers.

Justice Page announced that he would hear arguments on this motion Monday afternoon, March 15. In the meantime Thaw was remanded to the Tombs.

ENCOUNTERS REPULSED BY BELGIAN TROOPS

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 15.—This afternoon's communication says: The Belgian army continues to progress in the bend of the Yser and south of Dixmude.

British troops were very violently attacked yesterday evening at Veloi, south of Ypres and were at first pushed back slightly, but they counter attacked and regained part of the ground lost. The fighting continues. In the region of Neuve Chapelle there is no change.

In the Argonne the enemy attempted by a third and very violent counter attack to retake trenches won by us between Four de Paris and Bolante. As was the case with previous attacks the assault was repulsed.

FAMOUS FLYER TAKES DROP TO HIS DEATH

Lincoln Beachey and Machine Dive 2,500 Feet at Panama Exposition —Made Flight in Belleville

SAN FRANCISCO, March 15.—Special—Death came to Lincoln Beachey, world-famous aviator, yesterday afternoon, when he dropped through the air 2,500 feet, before thousands of spectators at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The accident which ended the life of the man who defied death so long came when the wings of his new monoplane collapsed while Beachey was attempting to right the machine after a perpendicular drop through space of several hundred feet.

The stress on the new monoplane was too great, and one of the wings was seen to fly up like that of a wounded bird. In a flash the second wing of the monoplane gave way and the shining engine and propeller blades gleamed in the sunshine as the crippled machine fell.

There was no chance for escape, although Beachey and his collapsed monoplane landed in the waters of San Francisco Bay. The force of the fall was so great that the machine and its daring pilot were buried in the mud of the bay in forty feet of water near the United States army transport docks, in a narrow path of water between two monster transports swinging at anchor.

Immediately a rescue crew was despatched from the battleship Oregon, which was lying in the stream. After two hours the machine and body were dug from the mud by a diver from the Oregon's crew. Beachey was found entangled in the wires of the wrecked machine, and all of the bones of his body were broken.

Mr. Beachey will be remembered as making a very successful flight at the Belleville Agricultural Grounds last summer, performing feats in the air that were spectacular in the extreme. By his ease of action and gentlemanly bearing he made many friends among our admiring citizens. The news of his death comes with regret.

SAW THREE FLYING MACHINES FLYING OVER RIDEAU LAKE

Chief of Dominion Police Claims to Have Seen One at Smith's Falls—Precautions Taken

KINGSTON, March 13.—Canada is evidently filled with German spies, sympathizers, and possibly, a good sprinkling of German reservists who are prepared to go to any length to assist Germany and retard the work of the Allies. In Kingston several men have been, and some are still under police surveillance. Two tools of the Kaiser have been caught in the military service here. During the early days of the war, many of the most reliable citizens of Kingston reported seeing aeroplanes at night, and the reports were far too numerous, and the reporters too reliable, to have their claims ignored or ridiculed.

Now comes a report from Kingston Mills that aeroplanes were operating in open daylight within seven miles of the city of Kingston where nearly 2,000 men are wearing uniform and being trained for overseas service.

At noon yesterday, between twelve and one o'clock, Ely Caron, special constable of the G.T. Ry., declares he saw three aeroplanes flying low over the western end of Rideau Lake, just above the G.T.R. bridge at the mills. Three other citizens of the mills saw the aerial ships, and vow that it was impossible to be mistaken. It was broad daylight and the machines were moving low over the water surface and flying in an easterly direction.

Every precaution has been taken to protect Rideau Hall, and to make the Parliament buildings as inconspicuous as possible at night. At South Porcupine thirty Germans were caught drilling in a barn, and were arrested. A few weeks ago an attack on this city and vicinity was planned along the American border, but the watchfulness of the military prevented the undertaking being carried out, and it is scarcely to be wondered at that Germans and Austrians, who are so numerous along the Canadian border should make an attempt on Canada with air machines.

VIOLENT CANNONADING

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 15.—A violent cannonading is going on at a point to the northeast of Dunkirk, according to reports from that port to the Havas agency. The belief in Dunkirk is that the British squadron is again bombarding the sand dunes around Nieuport.

NEW YORK, March 15.—The Greek steamer Ioannina, from Athens, with nearly three hundred passengers, is held up at Quarantine while a case of suspected Asiatic cholera is investigated.

BUILD SUBMARINES IN BELGIAN PORT

AMSTERDAM, via London, March 13.—Five hundred German workmen from Kiel and Hamburg, says the Antwerp correspondent of the Telegraaf, are now employed in the dockyards at Hoboken, Belgium, assembling and building German submarines, the first of which probably will be launched soon. The occupants of houses in the vicinity of the dockyards are reported to have fled in the fear of a raid by aircraft of the allies.

BRITISH STEAMERS TORPEDOED BY GERMAN SUBMARINE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 15.—It is reported that two British steamers were torpedoed by the German submarine U-29 off the Scilly Islands yesterday. The crews were saved. A despatch from Cresswell states that the British collier Invergyle was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off that place last night. The crew was rescued.

A despatch from Havre reports that two thousand Germans, captured by the British, have arrived there on their way to England.

A despatch from Petrograd reports that the Russian offensive in Galicia has forced the Austrians to abandon most of their positions. A general retreat of the Austrian forces from Galician territory is anticipated.

EVAPORATOR DESTROYED

(Canadian Press Special)

SWEED, March 15.—Fire from an unknown cause at three o'clock this morning destroyed an evaporator owned by R. J. Graham of Belleville, with a loss of $10,000, partly covered by insurance. Large war orders were on hand for evaporated potatoes, and twenty-five hands have been thrown out of work.

IN THE TRENCHES

Belleville's Splendid Boys Fear Not Germans or Shells

France, Sunday, 21st Feb., 1915.

Dear Dad:

Well, we have had our baptism of fire and have just returned to billets for a few hours' rest. We were up in the first line trenches, some of which are only 100 yards from the Germans. It was great. After the first half hour was over it becomes something indescribable. A great intense zest arises and one immediately begins to call all his thinking powers together in order to outshoot and outpost the enemy. We went into the trenches at 3 a.m. on Friday, amidst bursting shells and machine gun fusilades in addition to searchlights and huge star shells. Such a sight and sound it was. Wonderful! By the time dawn came we had settled down to our work and overcome any little nervousness men naturally have when marching in, and in front appeared the trenches of the Germans. Shells started at dawn again, but our artillery was quite equal to the occasion. On Friday night we were right out in front fixing the entanglements. The Germans have no more chance of getting through our lines here and our steel than I have of going to India. Well, we were tired enough this morning at 4 a.m. to be relieved for a little rest and to pull ourselves together. We go back again tonight. We had very slight casualties. Sniping has the greatest effect. The country around here is in an awful state, bearing tragic witness to the great struggle that has lasted for weeks. Of course we notice these things more now that we will later on, but everything is laid waste. On Thursday evening our mail came. Letters from you and Mother and Anna and Bill Shorey. You can never imagine such rejoicing at getting them, and just before going into action for the first time! The men behaved splendidly and their work was highly complimented by British officers who have been here for weeks. All the Belleville 15th and 49th boys are fine and untouched so far. My platoon did splendid work both at checking, sniping and entanglements. Have met some of the very finest officers of the Royal Fusiliers, Royal Engineers, The Buffs, North Staffordshire, etc., etc., with whom we are fighting side by side. Now, dad, I am off to bed in a very comfortable billet, and from the way I feel I will sleep every minute of the few hours I have.

Good-bye and dear love to you all.

DICK.

"Well, boy, I am writing this in the trenches only 100 yards from the enemy. Saw a number of them this morning early. Tonight at dusk they sang German songs and called to our men who whistled back, and then it all turned into machine gun fusilades which were not so cheerful. The Canadians have the bull dog breed, all right. Love. DICK."

A further postcard to Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., kindly sent out by him says:

"We have been in the trenches for four days. The men have behaved splendidly, and only slight casualties so far. We will go back to billets for a little rest in a few days. We are all feeling fit and working hard. With kind regards."

Dog's Sagacity Saves Lives

PITTSBURG, Pa., March 13.—Six persons attribute the saving of their livese here early to-day to the sagacity of a pet dog that lost its own life as a result. The dog, a French poodle belonged to Charles and Samuel Hill, twelve and fourteen years of age, respectively, living at No. 2-416 Wadsworth Street. During the night the dog smelled burning wood and first went to the bedroom of the two boys, jumped on the bed and pulled the clothes from them, awakening them. He then ran to the bedroom of Samuel Wade and wife, and barked at the bedside until they awoke. The cries of the latter aroused George Hill and wife, in another apartment, and the six escaped to the street, but the dog was suffocated, his body being found after the fire was extinguished.

KINGSTON

Rev. R. S. Farneri, M.A., B.D., Rector of St. Luke's Church, Kingston was installed this morning by the Very Rev. Dean Starr, D.D., as a Canon of the Cathedral Church of St. George. The installation took place after the 3rd collect. Canon Grant read the Bishop of Kingston's command to the Dean for the installation of Canon Farneri. Dean Starr, in a few well chosen words expressed the pleasure he had in fulfilling the Bishop of Kingston's command. He spoke of the high esteem in which Mr. Forneri was held by the Clergy. He got his degree of B.D. by examination. He held the curacy of Penetang, the curacy of Uxbridge in Toronto Diocese. He was Rector of Christ Church, Belleville, Rector of St. John's Church in the same city, Rector of Adolphustown, and Rural Dean of Lennox & Addington, Rector of Merrickville and Rector of St. Luke's Church, Kingston, his present charge. He was for a time chaplain to the Bishop of Ontario. Canon Forneri preached a very thoughtful sermon on the love of God and of our relationship to Him. Rev. Crozer McGee, curate of the Cathedral took the morning service at St. Luke's Church.

BOXING BOUTS

At the Armouries this evening an entertainment will take place consisting of boxing bouts. The chief bout, of 10 rounds, will be between Jack McCracken and Joseph Murphy, both of Toronto. Previous to the principal event will be bouts between local boxers, which will no doubt be of interest.

AT THE FRONT

Mr. Wm. J. Smith of the Kyle House, this morning received a communication from Mr. Charles H. Hopkins, who was for some time assistant engineer here. The communication was dated from Candahar Barracks, Tedworth Hants, England, and stated that all were well, having a good time and lots of work. They were expected to be moved shortly and hoped it was to the front. He expressed wishes to all the boys. Mr. Hopkins enlisted with the engineering department of the militia, and his future will be watched with interest by his many friends in this city.

Sunday Night Band Concert

A great number were again unable to gain admission to the theatre last evening when the Fifteenth Regiment Band repeated the concert given last Sunday evening. A special feature of the concert was "Tipperary" as an encore to "Faust," the chorus being sung by Master Tommy Anderson, a three year old boy, in a clear sweet voice, and was received with great applause. The rest of the programme cannot be singled out, each number being rendered in excellent form. Miss Terwilligar again captivated the audience, especially with her encore, "The Best Old Flag that Flies." Another fine programme will be rendered next Sunday evening.

Last night's Programme:—

ROBERT E. KEMERER

108 BAY STREET TORONTO

Toronto, March 13th, 1915.

The stock markets have exhibited a decided degree of strength during the week, and most satisfactory advances have been recorded in practically all classes of securities. Repeated rumors of the possibility of an earlier peace than had been expected were accepted with a marked degree of caution and were only partially responsible. Beyond doubt there is a growing conviction that the German campaign is weakening and the inevitable end is not so far off as it was thought to be some weeks ago. The spread of this belief will, of course, result in a growing public interest in securities to the advantage of the markets as a whole.

The campaign for increased agricultural productivity seems to be meeting with a large degree of success, over 50,000 applications having been made to the Dominion Government for seed grain. Increase in this direction cannot but hasten a general revival of business and returning prosperity, and as the crops of 1915 both in Canada and the United States, are expected to be much larger than last year, the outlook is improved to a decided degree. The United States wheat crop for 1915 is estimated at 900,000,000 bushels as against 890,000,000, bushels last year.

BRAZILIAN TRACTION.—In spite of a somewhat disappointing monthly statement, the shares of the Brazilian Traction Company advanced three or four points and sold again at fifty-three. This advance was caused by an improvement in the Brazilian exchange rate and by reports, which were received from Brazil, of a general improvement in the trade of that country. The figures of the report were:—

THE PHILHARMONIC

Belleville, March 12, 1915.
Editor Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—In regard to the concert to be given by the Philharmonic Society in Bridge Street Church on the evening of March 18th, I am taking the liberty of presenting to the general public through the medium of your esteemed and courteously granted column space, some of the aims and purposes of the Society in their work generally, and more especially for this season. Our efforts of last year met with a most kindly reception at the hands of the musical public, and the suggestion of associating with the Society an effective business backing, was received by the Executive with the deepest appreciation. Only by the adoption of such a plan can a choral presentation of representative and satisfactory musical excellence be consummated, and it is a matter of regret that the unusual conditions prevalent since August 4th, have to some degree disturbed the successful developing of what seemed a short year ago so entirely feasible.

It is a fact beyond dispute that in larger cities representative choral organizations receive substantial support and aid from men of prominence and insight, to whom it is apparent that good citizenship is rather developed than violated by a practical interest in the enlarging and broadening of a general artistic atmosphere, and Belleville can be effectively advertised and helped by a musical prominence as well as in other ways. We will hope for success in this direction in the future, when conditions will have changed for the better.

We have prepared Gounod's exquisite oratorio, the "Redemption," an expression clothed in matchless musical form, of Christendom's greatest theme, and hope to give it a worthy presentation at the time stated.

The performance will be the most pretentious musical work undertaken in Belleville since Mr. Hunt's chorus gave the "Messiah" some years ago. Every detail has been thoughtfully considered and with a painstaking and enthusiastic chorus, assisted by the large and gifted list of musicians mentioned in our advertisement of to-day, the prospects are bright for an evening of rare charm. When too late many expressed their regret at not having attended our last year's concerts. We urge you this year to do your best to escape from classification as "might have gones" by securing a ticket and attending next Thursday evening, willing to be pleased.

We are more than grateful to the kind people of Bridge Street Church for their graciously extended privilege, covering the use of their beautiful auditorium, giving us as it does, a perfect setting for a gem of art. The chorus will be supported by the superb Cassavant organ which has given such satisfaction and enjoyment since its installation.

I feel impelled to state, in connection with the instrumental part of the work, that we are fortunate in Belleville in having many organists whom it would be a pleasure to me personally to have assist in such a capacity, and the arrangements which we have made in this connection are rendered advisable, solely in view of the complexity of the organ consol and have been arrived at after much deliberation, in which, I am glad to be able to affirm, the consideration of comparative musical values played absolutely no part.

The Executive also feel that the greater portion of any outlay made, should be devoted to the procuring of competent singers, especially in view of the fact that this is to be a "singing" concert, the work in hand making no provision for the display of organ virtuosity. What we require are soloists with a proficient and dexterous accompanist, and these we have, I am glad to announce, secured. It is to be regretted that the wishes of all cannot be met on every point, but the general public may rest assured that those who have done the work and understand each and every interest to be taken into consideration have made what are in reality the most promising arrangements under the circumstances.

We have all worked hard during the winter, are making a considerable outlay in order to bring the concert up to a high standard of artistic excellence throughout, and we earnestly request a loyal patronage from our Belleville people. We have reason to believe that the concert will be enjoyable, our assisting artists are gifted in their different parts, the music is tuneful and beautiful and the theme is ideally suited to the season and exquisitely in accord with the Lenten attitude. Our advertisements will keep everyone informed more particularly from day to day and we are hoping for a general interest which will give us a large and an appreciative audience.

It would be a genuine pleasure to the executive to be in a position to turn over to one of the patriotic funds a goodly sum as earnings from the concert, over expenses, which course of action it is their intention to adopt, should a surplus remain.

Will you keep March 18th in mind and come?

Very truly yours,
DAN A. CAMERON.

NERVOUS ORIGIN OF DISEASE

Lining up the vertebrae, establishing free movement between them, thus getting a better blood supply into the nerve centers in the spinal cord, and freeing the spinal nerves from pressure.

There are twenty-six bones which make up the spine. They are called vertebrae, nerves and blood vessels pass in and out, between each of these vertebrae. It can easily be understood that any displacement, however slight, puts pressure on these vessels and nerves, thus causing disturbance to the part of the body these nerves supply. For instance, the eleventh dorsal vertebrae, if rigid, tender, or put slightly out of position, is certain to cause kidney trouble. Any structural displacement of the group from the fifth to the ninth dorsal vertebrae, is sure to cause stomach trouble. Very many diseases can be traced to some spinal injury, caused by falls, blows, twists, heavy lifting, etc.

Osteopathy cures by removing the cause. A careful spinal examination is made, the trouble is located and corrected. Spinal examination free.

Enlisters at Bridge St. Church

The members of the 39th Battalion, who are stationed here, yesterday morning attended divine service at Bridge Street Church. Rev. H. S. Osborne, pastor of the church, delivered an appropriate and patriotic discourse. The turnout was most creditable. During the service Mr. Dan Cameron sang "The Golden Gates are Open," the music being written by E. R. Hinchey and the words by Samuel Turner. There was a large number present at the service, which was inspiring and instructive.

Ethel Elliott, wife of Hugh Elliott, druggist at Tamworth, died on Sunday morning, March 14th. The deceased was in her 31st year. The funeral was held on the arrival of the noon train in Bowmanville to-day. Mrs. Eliott was a granddaughter of the late William Nicholas Rose, M. D., of Newcastle, and a cousin of Mrs. C. J. Bowell, Belleville. She leaves a husband to mourn her loss.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"IT'S A LONG WAY TO TIPPERARY".

Mother, Sweetheart or Country, to which do you owe the greatest loyalty? That's the theme of Gus Hill's big production of William Anthony McGuines' play called "It's a Long Way to Tipperary", coming to the Griffin Opera House, Tuesday, March 23rd. It is entirely different from anything you have ever seen on the stage. It's a distinct revelation in modern stagecraft. It's as gripping as the song which inspired it, with thrilling pictures of war seasoned with heroic love and sweet songs.

Before you make over or clean or dye last year's coat or gown be sure that the garment is worth the trouble you are going to take with it.

If the garment is to be ripped apart remove all stains first. If you do it afterward you'll stretch the seams.

Rip the seams with great care, using a sharp knife. Never use scissors, for the sharp points are apt to break the fine threads. If the goods to be renovated is of silk texture brush with piece of old flannel. If woolen material shake well and brush with whisk broom.

Sponge black silks on both sides with spirits of wine. Apply with a piece of the silk. Hang out of doors and when nearly dry cover the silk with white tissue paper and iron lightly with very slightly heated iron.

Mice Dislike Pepper

Cayenne pepper is excellent to rid cupboards of mice. The floor should be gone over carefully, and each hole stopped up with a piece of rag dipped in water and then in cayenne pepper.

Do Bees Hear?

The question of whether bees hear or whether they receive impressions in some other way, is a mooted one among scientists. Nothing has been found that corresponds to the ears in ordinary animals, although it has been supposed that the antennæ may serve the purpose in some way. We know this: Bees are very sensitive to a jar or any vibration; that loud shouting in a bee-cellar will bring back a response from the bees; but as sound always produces sound-waves in the air, the bees may get the effect of the sound by a concussion on their bodies or their antennæ.

Sunkist Orange Recipes

BUTTERFLY SALAD

Remove all skin from two grape fruit and three Sunkist Oranges and cut into uniform slices across the fruit, and then into halves. Drain juice from a small can of pineapple and cut slices also in halves. Make individual nests of shredded lettuce on serving plates, place two sections of grapefruit in centre with the curved edges together on these two of pineapple, and above that two of orange. Place a strip of pimento down the center and a nut meat at one end, and cover all with French dressing, or serve mayonnaise separately.

Words of Sympathy

To Bro. Lewis Bell and family.

We, the members of Wallbridge Lodge, L.O.L., No. 2386, desire to extend to you and your family, our sincere sympathy in this your hour of sadness.

It is useless for us to try in words to say anything that would change the present circumstances. Only to lighten the sadness and let you know that we also are sad, because of our brotherly love to you and in conclusion may we be as your loving daughter was, a shining star in the community, and ever ready, as the poet said:

Twilight and evening star,
And one last call to me.
And may there be no moaning at the bar,
When we put out to sea.

Signed on behalf of the Lodge.

Queen Victoria School Girls

On March 12th a meeting of the Girls' Club was held in Queen Victoria School. The Club consists of an Honorary President, a President a Secretary and four Committees.

After the refreshments were served during which time Mrs. Wilkin played several selections on the piano Mrs. MacLaurin sang a beautiful solo, which was very much appreciated, and encored. After this, the secretary, Miss Jean Evans, read the minutes of the first meeting and also a letter from the Canadian Society for the protection of birds, which everyone agreed to join. A letter was also read from Col. Ponton, congratulating the children on the distribution of their patriotic money. Then the president, Miss Jean Kerr, delivered her speech, saying that all the work did not depend entirely on the officers of the Club, but that each member should do her share.

Mr. Smith then delivered his address, which was entitled "Three Peas in a Pod." These were "Pluck Perseverance and Partnership". It would have been well if every Bellevillian had been there to hear him. Miss Handley, the honorary president was called upon for a speech, and in a short address showed the girls that they had put the right one in the right place. The singing of the National Anthem closed the successful meeting.

There still are a number of sterling citizens whose notion of the proper place to wear evening clothes is in a photograph.

STRENGTH

Without Overloading the Stomach

The business man, especially, needs food in the morning that will not overload the stomach, but give mental vigor for the day.

Much depends on the start a man gets each day as to how he may expect to accomplish the work on hand.

He can't be alert with a heavy, fried meat-and-potatoes breakfast, requiring a lot of vital energy in digesting it.

A Western business man found a combination for producing energy. He writes:

"For years I was unable to find a breakfast food that had nutrition enough to sustain a business man without overloading his stomach, causing indigestion and kindred ailments.

"Being a very busy and also a very nervous man, I had about decided to give up breakfast altogether. But luckily I was induced to try Grape-Nuts.

Since that morning I have been a new man; can work without tiring, my head is clear and my nerves strong and quiet.

"I find that Grape-Nuts, with a little sugar and a small quantity of cold milk makes a delicious morning meal, invigorates me for the day's business."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co. Windsor, Ont. Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Foreign Objects in the Lungs.

Sir William Milligan exhibited at a recent meeting of the Royal Society of Medicine a damson stone, a carpet tack and a coin, all of which had been inhaled into the lungs and been removed with forceps after several days of suffering on the part of the persons who had been foolish enough to put them into their mouths.

Figures of Speech.

"Of what mathematical term does marriage remind you?"

"Multiplication of course."

"Right. And divorce?"

"Why, division."

"Certainly. What term, then, would you apply to grass widowhood?"

"I suppose that would have to be called an improper fraction."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Heredity.

Fond Parent—That youngster of mine is beginning already to have the family traits. You know we gave him a stop watch for a birthday present? Friend—Yes. Fond Parent—Well, sir, within half an hour of the time he first got hold of that timepiece he had found a bowl of water and put it in soak.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Changed Views.

"Time makes a big difference."

"What are you thinking of?"

"My wife's father. I used to think him a stubborn old fool. Now I respect his judgment."

"What's happened?"

"Nothing; only he did his durndest to prevent my eloping with his daughter."—Detroit Free Press.

Land of the Date Palm.

Beyond the land of the Berbers, in the far south of Morocco, lies the great oasis of Tafilet, famous for its vast groves of date palms. Here for hundreds of square miles the land is covered with a thick growth of the tall, straight stems of the palm, and the product of these close growing trees is enormous in quantity. They produce the finest dates in the world.

Whistler's Comment.

One of Whistler's proofs, sold by Sotheby's in 1888—that of an early etching—brought a good price, not on its merits, but for this line by the artist, written on the margin: "Legs not by me, but a fatuous addition by a general practitioner."

The "legs" were by Dr. Seymour Haden, Whistler's eminent brother-in-law.

Bare Poles.

Purser—Don't go on deck, madam. It is stormy, and we are running her with bare poles.

Aunt Polly—Well, I suppose that, coming from such a cold country as Poland, they can stand running round naked, but I think it's downright scandalous to let 'em do it.—London Telegraph.

Fast and Slow.

The Father—I learn with sorrow, my son, that you are getting to be what they term quite fast.

The Son—You shouldn't believe all you hear, dad. I'll introduce you to a man who will tell you another story.

The Father—And who is he?

The Son—My tailor. He says I'm the slowest chap he's got on his books.

Athletic Exercises.

Flattered Restaurant Keeper—I'm glad to hear, sir, that you've been growing so strong since you began coming to my restaurant.

Fullett—Well, it's a fact. You see, my habits are sedentary, and I can't afford to enter a gymnasium. Yes, sir; your steaks and roast fowls are making a new man of me.

Perversity.

"One peculiarity of melancholia," said a specialist, "is that the victim of it actually enjoys the despondency and often doesn't want to be cured. I once told a young woman who had this disease that she must be careful of her digestion and eat nothing fried. After that she tried to eat only fried food. Not only did she insist on having her potatoes and meat fried, but didn't want to eat bread unless it had been fried in a lot of grease."—New York Tribune.

Wrong House.

It had been a hard day for the book agent. Sales were desperately slow, and as a last resort he decided to try a nearby house despite its shabby appearance. "Have you a Charles Dickens in your home?" he asked politely. "No," she snapped. "Or a Robert Louis Stevenson?" "No." "Or a Walter Scott?" "No, we ain't; an' what's more we don't run a boarding house here either. If you're looking for them fellows you might try the house across the street. I understand they keep boarders."—Argonaut.

CHARACTER.

Character is moral order embodied in the individual. Men of character are not only the conscience of society, but in every well governed state they are its best motive power, for it is moral qualities in the main which rule the world.—Samuel Smiles.

A million men are engaged in a great battle in Poland. How much more satisfactory if the same numbers were engaged in a constructive instead of a destructive work.

WHEN BRIGHTER DAYS COME

Every day makes it plainer and plainer that Germany intends to fight to the bitter end, or until exhaustion overcomes her. To what date this will carry the war cannot be foretold. That the end is still a long distance away is only too apparent. That another winter's campaign will be experienced appears more than probable. In the meantime Germany is evidently not so much seeking to produce as she is endeavoring to store against a protracted siege, which has seemingly only begun. Thus it is certain that long after the war has concluded she will be in the market more to buy than to sell. Her live stock will be all but completely depleted, and there will be no surplus oats, barley and rye to export. Of wheat she has always been an importer, but with Poland devastated, Belgium laid waste and Northern France largely laid bare, to say nothing of the condition of Turkey, of Servia and of the other Balkan States, it can hardly be expected that there will be an overplus in any market or markets sufficient to meet requirements. In this emergency the natural direction of enquiry will be the Western Hemisphere, including Canada, the United States and Argentine. Extra efforts at production may be expected in other countries and colonies, notably India, Egypt and Australasia, but, after all, it will and must be on Canada that Great Britain will mostly depend to meet her wants. Russia will be engaged to a considerable extent in supplying the needs of her more immediate neighbors. Consequently it is this country and this continent that will be called upon not only to remedy and repair deficiencies, but also to furnish at first hand large quantities of all kinds of foodstuffs, of raw material of many sorts, and of every species of live stock. Patriotism and production is, therefore, no empty cry. On the contrary, it goes forward with a certainty of fulfilment of almost unlimited promise.

ON WHICH SIDE ?

A Toronto paper finds fault because it was stated at a recent Toronto meeting that if Asquith, Lloyd George, Grey and Churchill were in Canada they would be Conservatives. This organ of Laurierism in the Queen City argues that there is no difference between British and Canadian Liberals. Well, let us see. In 1909 the present Liberal Government in Great Britain urged the Laurier Government to go in for an Imperial squadron on the Pacific ocean, and the Laurier Government refused. The Conservative party stood squarely for Admiralty control. If Lloyd George, Churchill, Asquith and, Grey had been in Canada then, where would they have stood? Would they have stood? Would they have been with Laurier for a separate navy and Colonial neutrality; or with Borden for one navy and Imperial control?

In 1912 this same British Government asked the Canadian people to contribute three dreadnoughts to the fighting forces of the Empire. The Conservative party endeavored to carry out the request. The Liberal party fought it tooth and nail. If Lloyd George and Churchill and Asquith and Grey were in Canada then, on what side would they have been found?

The present Government of Great Britain saw the conflict that was coming in Europe and year after year they increased the power of the British navy to meet the impact of the struggle.

In Canada the Liberal party, with the same information in their possession, fought the giving of aid to the Motherland. Does anybody but a partizan simpleton believe that the statesmen who are guiding the destiny of Britain today would have associated themselves with the men who were withholding that aid?

MISSLEADING THE PUBLIC

Some well-informed supporter of the Laurier separatist navy policy a few days ago referred editorially to the great work which had been done by the Australian battleship Brisbane, built and manned in Australia. The point was, of course, that Canada could have done the same. Canada undoubtedly could have done as well as Australia has done if Canada had begun when Australia began, by accepting the Admiralty suggestion of a Pacific fleet unit in 1909. Laurier, as everybody knows gave a point blank refusal to this proposal.

But what about this Brisbane which has been sweeping the seas? She has never yet been in the water. The ships built for the Australian navy in England are, of course, in commission, and these are the ships, built and manned in England, which have done such great work for the whole Empire, Canada included.

But the Brisbane has never been off the stocks and won't be for six or seven months, if then. The progress of the cruiser has been slow from the beginning and now that she is nearly ready to be launched the somewhat disconcerting discovery has been made that there isn't enough water near at hand for her to slip into. It will be necessary to build a cofferdam to cost a hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and in January the estimate was that this dam could not be completed for nine months.

CURRENT COMMENT

Sir Robert Borden: "The unity of the Empire cannot be maintained if its greatest Dominion adopts the policy of scampering under the cover of neutrality in time of danger or trouble."

Last week saw the first sale of a seat on the Montreal Stock Exchange since the outbreak of the war. The price was $13,000. The last previous sale was $24,500. There are other values besides those of real estate that have tumbled.

Toronto News: "The feline is out of the receptacle. At a recent Ottawa meeting, Mr. Paul Emile Lamarche, member for Nicolet, delivered a speech on the bi-lingual school question, and invited his hearers to hold the Borden Government responsible for the acts of the Conservative Government of Ontario!"

L'Action Sociale: "Mr. Bourassa does not support cheerfully any contradiction, and he has even gross and plentiful injuries for any who dare to contradict him. Unhappily for a man of his talent, in his frequent moments of irritation he takes liberties with the the truth. He has the habit of oratorical exaggeration." No better picture of the man could be better drawn.

Mr. A. K. Maclean talked nearly two hours in the House in an effort to prove that Government expenditures, and not war conditions, should be held responsible for special war taxes; and at the end of two hours he kicked his card house to pieces by admitting that since the outbreak of hostilities our borrowings abroad have been entirely stopped. There is something fascinating about the elasticity of Liberal logic.

Edmonton Journal: "A special train left Camrose last week for Toronto with five hundred head of hogs. We could take more satisfaction out of such items of news if we did not know that such shipments were depleting the stock of the province to a dangerous extent. Professor Elliott, of the Olds Agricultural School, told an audience the other night that Alberta, as a result of the dumping that had been done, was now 800,000 hogs short of a year ago, and urged farmers strongly to hold their stocks. He is certain that the coming summer will see record prices in all branches of live stock."

STOCK SOLD, MANURE LOST, CROPS RUINED

History repeats itself. It has always been noticed that when grain and feed advance quickly to a high price, beef cattle, pork, mutton and all meat products just as rapidly drop down and down until they bump bottom. Then when the conditions which cause the high price of grains are removed, down goes grain and up goes the price of meat. It is a sort of double elevator, when one is up the other is down, and vice versa. Meat drops when grain is dear because of the short-sighted policy of rushing everything that stands on four legs, finished or unfinished, to market to save grain and feed, and because every effort is put forth to increase grain production and reap the benefit of the high prices prevailing. Quite logical! But the high prices for grain are over by the time the grain is produced in abundance and it is down to its lowest level, while at the same time the stock has been sold and there is a scarcity and up goes the price of meat. It is a nice little fortune wheel with the odds against the plunger.

This has a serious side. High-priced grain and cheap meat causing a clearing out of feeding and breeding stock is disastrous. The fewer the numbers of live stock the smaller the quantity of manure. The less grain and "rich" feed fed on the farm the poorer the quality of the manure. It means less manure, and the smaller quantity is of poor quality. It is manure and other fertilizers that make crops grow. Farm-yard manure is the chief of all. Unless the stock is kept, and we know it is being rushed to market, there is bound to be less plant food returned to the soil in the form of solid and liquid excrement from the stables, the cheapest and best form in which the farmer fertilizes his fields. The next best thing for the producer is to buy commercial fertilizers, but unless a change is made these will be subject to duty and the price will be up accordingly.

Soil fertility is a big question. Production depends on it and it depends largely upon manuring. The difference in the crops on a farm upon which large numbers of well-fed live stock are kept and on one where the grain is all sold off as raw material is all too well known to readers. When the stock goes the crop goes, and when the crop goes the profits are gone. Let it never be forgotten that the little extra which means the difference between a poor or average crop and a good crop is generally made up largely by farmyard manure, and above all things remember that just so sure as we have dear grain and cheaper meat now, we will have cheap grain and dearer meat in the not so distant future.

FARM NOTES

Take a handful of cleaned seed, hand sort it, and see how much of it is really good seed. We recently watched a man do this with a sample of seed being offered for sale, and he discarded over fifty per cent., as unsuitable for sowing. Try it and it will not take long to decide that more cleaning is necessary.

All hands together for a big crop.

Clean the seed once more. It will pay.

First good seeds next, good cultivation and then a good crop.

There is a good crop of advice for the farmer this year. The production of this commodity has increased wonderfully.

There are various ways of concealing one's identity, but marrying a prima donna seems to be the most successful.

TIRING, CEASELESS BACK-ACHE CAN BE RUBBED AWAY TO-NIGHT

RELIEF IS ALMOST UNFAILING FROM EVEN THE FIRST APPLICATION.

RUB ON NERVILINE

Cold has a vicious way of finding out aching muscles or weak joints. How often pain settles in the back, causing inflammation and excruciating soreness. Stiffness and aching all over follows.

An application of Nerviline at the start gives immediate relief and prevents worse trouble.

When the pain is very acute, Nerviline has a chance to show its wonderful penetrating and pain-subduing power. It strikes in deeply, and its strike-in-deep quality quickly proves its superiority to feebler remedies. Then this goodness is magnified by its strength, easily five times greater than most liniments.

Surely so powerful and curative a liniment as Nerviline offers perfect security against pain.

Nerviline is the only guaranteed pain remedy sold in Canada. Forty years of success in many countries warrants its manufacturers saying, if it does not relieve, get your money back.

No curable pain, not even neuralgia, lumbago, sciatica, or rheumatism can resist the magic power of Nerviline. Try it today. Rub it on your tired back, let it ease your sore muscles, let it take the swelling and stiffness out of your joints. It's a marvel—thousands say so that use Nerviline.

The large 50c family size bottle of Nerviline is more economical than the 25c trial size. Buy the larger size today. Sold by dealers everywhere, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

VEGETABLE SEEDS GROWN FOR HOME USE

Dominion Horticulturist Gives Practical Methods For Farmers and Gardeners

It is a simple matter to save seed of vegetables which have only an annual growth, such as beans, corn, peas, peppers, tomatoes, cucumbers, melons, squash pumpkins, radish, lettuce, etc., writes Mr. W. T. Macoun, Dominion Horticulturist in an article urging upon Canadian farmers the advisability of growing and using their own seeds. All that is necessary is to clean the seed as soon as possible after the vegetables are ripe, dry it rapidly and then keep it dry until it is needed for sowing. Raising seed of biennials such as beets, carrots, parsnips, onions, cabbage, cauliflower and celery is a little more difficult.

To raise seed of beets, carrots and parsnips, good medium-sized, shapely specimens are selected at digging time, the tops are cut off to within about two inches of the end of the specimen thus leaving the centre shoot. Cutting back close to the root will remove this centre shoot, which is not desirable. Store the roots in a cool, fairly dry cellar, or they may be pitted outside, but if this is done care should be taken not to cover them with much soil until really cool weather sets in, so as to avoid danger of heating.

Careful Planting

Early in the spring plant the roots out in good, well-drained soil, planting the roots about two feet apart in rows three feet apart. When planting it is desirable to have the top of the beets, carrots or parsnips slightly below the surface of the ground. Cultivate the ground regularly and the reward is likely to be a fine crop of seed. The stalks are cut when the seed is beginning to ripen and allowed to dry thoroughly, after which the seed may be thrashed out and put away in a dry place until it is needed in spring.

To grow cabbage seed, plants having the best heads should be selected and the whole plant dug. Half-formed heads or even the stumps after the head has been removed will produce seed, but it is recommended to use plants with good heads.

During the winter the plants should be kept in as cool a place as possible without freezing, and if freezing cannot be prevented they should be kept where they will thaw out gradually. The best plan is to store them outside. A trench is opened where water will not lie, wide enough for three or four cabbages side by side. They are set in this in a slightly sloping position with the roots down. The tops are then covered with straw at first or a light covering of earth to keep out light frosts, and later covered with sufficient soil to prevent freezing. It is important not to put the soil on until it is necessary to prevent frost, as there is danger of the cabbage heating.

Much Seed From One Plant

Cabbage can be successfully stored in any cool cellar if it is not very dry or very wet. In the spring the cabbages are taken out and planted where severe frosts are over, about three feet apart each way, putting all the root and stalks below ground and leaving the head above. When solid heads are used slits should be made crosswise on the top of the head when planting, which will make it easier for the seed stalk to force its way out. Seed stalks will soon be thrown up and each plant will produce a large quantity of seed.

Banking the earth against the stalks will help to support them. When part of the seed pods have become brown the stalks should be cut and hung up and thrashed when dry and the seed kept dry until seeded. Cauliflowers are treated much the same as cabbage, but are much more difficult to to bring through the winter.

In growing onion seed the first step is to select medium-sized, well-shaped and well-ripened bulbs and then store them in a cool, dry place. Early in the spring they should be planted out about six inches apart in rows three feet apart. If the onions have sprouted the sprout should be cut off when being planted, as they will then throw up straighter stalks. The upper side of the bulbs should be an inch or two below the surface of the ground after being planted.

When the plants have grown sufficiently they should be banked up about six inches to help support the plants when the tops become heavy with flowers and seed. When the seed stalks show yellow near the ground the seed balls are cut off, with about two inches of the stalk attached, it being necessary to go over the plantation several times, as they do not all ripen at once. They are then spread out to dry, and when dried are thrashed and the seed is cleaned and put in a dry place until needed. It is important to dry the seed as rapidly as possible.

Carry a laugh with you and you will find a welcome almost everywhere—with the exception, possibly, of a funeral.

The Pinafore For a Little Miss

These little dresses may go made from "big sister's" discarded gowns. They are made in a kind of pinafore style, with a long waist belted about the hips. They are made with very large sleeve holes and a deep point in front and back. This is worn over a white gimpe which allows the wearing out of all the half-worn shirt waists.

An old black serge skirt with a white blouse and bright red tie would make "Little Miss" eight-year-old look as though she had a new dress straight from the best child's dressmaker in town.

THE FAMILY INCOME

The Wife Better Fitted For Expenditure on Household Upkeep

In the poor family the larger part of the income is spent for the household needs—food, service, laundry, clothes, and household supplies. These lie in the woman's province, and it is therefore fairer for the man to lay aside such a sum as shall cover rent, insurance, heat, light, and his own personal needs and bank the rest of the income in a checking account for his wife.

Rent, in this land of high rents, is often calculated at one-third of the income, but that is too large an obligation to assume, and one-fifth or one-sixth is only safe reckoning.

Heat and light it is impossible to generalize about, as these expenses will depend entirely on how and where you live. The heat and light bills are usually better left to the man to regulate and settle, as he is better fitted to cope with the furnace and in the matter of using light. Men are naturally the more extravagant and careless. They should therefore have the payment of the bills and the understanding that that brings. Also in the matter of a mistake in the gas or electric meter a man usually feels that he is better able to attend to the subject than a woman.

Food, however, comes entirely in the woman's province and too large a sum is often allowed for it. This is often due to the man's insistence on too much and too expensive meat. The man who thinks that he must have a roast, steak, or chops every day is an impossible man to cater to economically or efficiently. A variety of cuts, fish once or twice a week, and an occasional meatless supper or high tea for a change will keep the meat bill down amazingly.

Clothing and incidentals it is impracticable to give an estimate for, as these vary so according to the position of the family, their friends, and habitation. The woman, if she has had any experience in handling money, is, as a rule, more economical than the man, and to leave the question of management and saving entirely in her hands is often the wiser plan. At all events, the mistake should never be made of giving the woman the control of the household and not giving her the management of the money for the expenses that she contracts. Whether it be by allowance or by an equal right to draw against her husband's bank account, every woman should have the handling of the money she spends. That is not only justice, but the only way to learn economy and the value of money.

Flour Cleans Currants

A quick way to clean currants when making cakes is to put the fruit into a colander with a sprinkling of flour, and rub it round a few times with your hand. It is surprising how quickly the stalks are separated and come through the small holes.

An apron made with a bib of table oilcloth is a great saver when washing dishes.

In searching for arguments against the saloon the fact that buttermilk is sold in most of them should not be overlooked.

MYSTERY OF WOMAN

All a Piece of Superstition, Says Writer—Woman Merely Human

At every turn in literature and in life we run up against the superstition that woman is a mysterious being. Romancers and poets have carefully cultivated this notion, women have generally encouraged it and men by their gingerly treatment of it have seemed to accept it, says a writer in the Toronto Mail and Empire.

But is it well founded? Is there any more mystery about women than about men? Is the feminine nature any more difficult to understand than the masculine nature? Has it any more inexplicable moods? Have women, conscious of their inferior strength, this notion of mystery about themselves as a defence, or have men simply idealized them for fictitious purposes?

Really, there is nothing in it. All the twaddle of centuries about women being guided by intuition and about their minds acting indirectly, while men's acted directly, is the idle invention of fantastic brained poets and dreaming novelists.

Were there anything in the superstition it would have been discovered in the beginning. But there is no record that Adam observed any mystery about Eve except temptation. The mystery was in the serpent.

The savage races, who are the closest to human nature of any of us do not appear to have had this notion. A woman to the Indian is a simple affair, dealt with without circumlocution.

In the Bible records there is no mystery about her; there are many tributes to her noble qualities and some pretty severe and uncomplimentary things are said about her, but there is little affectation of not understanding her. She may be a prophetess, or a consoler, or a snare, but she is no more "deceitful and desperately wicked" than anybody else.

There is no evidence that the ancient Egyptian woman was more difficult to comprehend than the Egyptian man. They were doubtless wily as highly civilized people are apt to be—the "serpent of old Nile" was in both of them.

All that is known worth knowing about human nature was discovered in early times, but the notion of mystery in woman was not among the early fund of information.

USES FOR KEROSENE

Makes Dusters Dustless—Cleans Glass, Metal or Soiled Fingers

Here are nine uses to be made of kerosene oil. Wash out your dustless mops in kerosene and soak your dusters in kerosene. Let the kerosene dry on your dusters and you will have dustless dusters!

A spoonful of kerosene added to a kettle of very hot water will make windows, looking glasses, and picture glasses bright and clear. Use a small, clean cloth, wring it dry, and rub it over the glass, after wiping down the framework with an oiled cloth. Then proceed to the next window and treat it similarly on both sides. After that go back to the first one and wipe it dry with a large, clean cloth. No real polishing is required and the window or glass will look clear and shiny.

Kerosene will clean your hands better than anything else after blacking a range or stove. Pour a little in the water, wash your hands in it, then wash them in tepid water, and finally with plenty of soap and a stiff brush in hot water. Finish up by rubbing the hands with lemon and rosewater and glycerine.

The white spots appearing in the spring on the lining of your refrigerator will disappear if you rub the zinc with kerosene. Leave the refrigerator open several hours, then wash with water, soap, and ammonia. The refrigerator will then be clean and sweet and all spots will have disappeared.

To clean painted walls wipe them first with a cloth wet in kerosene and let stand fifteen minutes. Then wash the walls with good, warm soapsuds, but do not rub soap on the cloth or the paint will be streaked. Rub spots of tar or pine pitch on clothing in kerosene before washing them.

Science in the Kitchen

It is very convenient to have a board sprinkled with kitchen salt at hand when ironing. The salt cleans the irons.

To test the purity of coffee, pour cold water on it. If the water assumes a brownish hue, it may be concluded that there is chicory with it.

To remove red ink stains from table linen, spread freshly-made mustard over the stain and leave for about half an hour. Then sponge off, and all trace of the ink will have disappeared.

Even if the anti-kissing bill introduced in the Kansas legislature should pass, how would the guilty be discovered?

HOT WATER BOTTLES

Common Sense Must be Observed in Use or Tender Feet Will Result

Hot water bottles no doubt are very comfortable things to use on a cold night, but, unfortunately, the constant use of hot water bottles has a tendency to make the soles of the feet very tender and also creates a liability to blisters, especially if the persons suffers from feet which perspire profusely.

Rubber hot water bottles are naturally the best, but they should never be filled really full, and the water must not be absolutely boiling. When three parts filled the stopper should be screwed down, and they should be slipped into a thick bag made from a blanket or several thicknesses of flannel. If this hot water bottle is placed in a bed an hour before the person goes to bed, the bed clothes will be quite warm and the bottle can be removed.

Earthenware and stone bottles are very popular, because they retain their heat until the next morning, but as they are generally filled with boiling water, the bottles themselves become so hot that they are capable of causing a very serious burn. To prevent this the bottles should be covered with a bag of thick felt or double blanket before being placed in the bed.

To fill a stone or earthenware bottle, stand it in front of the fire until quite hot; or, if there is no time for this, fill it with hot water until the bottle itself has absorbed the heat. Pour away this water, and immediately fill three parts full with actually boiling water. Let the bottle remain uncorked for a few seconds, then screw tight and place in a bag and then in the bed. Before getting into bed push the bottle out of the way of the feet. Water placed in a stone hot water bottle over night will be quite warm enough for washing with the next morning. This is a great help to the busy house mother, who has to get up early and objects to washing in cold water. But if she is to keep her feet from getting tender she must not place them against the hot water bottle when sleeping.

Tips For the Housewife

When boiling cabbage, spinach, peas and lima beans try the experiment of adding about one teaspoonful of sugar and a bit of bicarbonate of soda, the size of a pea, to the water, and do not cover the kettle while cooking. The flavor is much improved and the strong odor while cooking is missing.

After washing oilcloth and linoleum, be sure to dry it properly. If left damp it will speedily rot, and finally become totally spoiled. It is a great mistake to use too much water for washing it. The cloth should merely be wrung out and passed over the surface.

When the lamp wick is too large for the burner and does not turn up readily, drawing a few threads from the middle of the wick, instead of cutting down the sides, is more satisfactory, as it keeps the wick from ravelling.

Why Do Feet Outlast Shoes?

Why is it, asks Master Inquisitive, that our shoes wear out so easily, but our feet never wear out, even though we walk in our barefeet all day long?

This isn't so puzzling, after all, if we just stop to consider that our feet are very much alive and our shoes are quite dead—that is, the hide they are made of is dead. It quit growing as soon as it was removed from the cow or the kid or goat or whatever animal it covered. But our feet are living things. Friction or use applied to living things make them grow strong instead of wearing them out.

The short answer to this question is, our shoes wear out because they are dead, and our feet grow strong with use because they are alive.

Repairing Furniture

Cracks in furniture should be filled in with beeswax. Soften the beeswax until it becomes like putty, then press it firmly into the cracks, and smooth the surface over with a thin knife. Sandpaper the surrounding wood, and work some of the dust into the beeswax. This gives a finish to the wood, and when it is varnished the cracks will have disappeared. Putty used in the same way soon dries and falls out.

Care of Flat-irons

If an iron is allowed to get redhot, it will never retain the heat as well again. The flat-iron is badly abused if allowed to stand on the range and in a dusty place. Irons should be put away to cool as soon as done with, and then kept in a cool place away from dust till wanted again.

Whipped Cream Substitute

Add a sliced banana to the white of one egg and beat until stiff. The banana will entirely dissolve, and a delicious substitute for whipped cream will result.

The public never forgets a scandal. Lately attention has again been directed to the fact that Adam and Eve never were married.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

Articles of Interest and Profit to the Farmer—Item for the Household, Garden and Field

HAY TWICE A DAY

Never in the history of Canada has the feeding of live stock been such a problem as it is at the present time, and horse-owners are wondering just how they can use their feed to best advantage and keep up the horses during the spring work. We believe it would be a good practice for the farmer to take a leaf out of the books of the liverymen and cartage companies in the feeding of their work horses this spring. As a general thing on most farms we believe that horses get too much hay, and hay is valubale. We do not think it would require much, if any, increase in grain rations to carry the horses over the spring work in good condition and omit the feeding of hay at noon. Livery horses and horses working at city cartage work are seldom fed hay at noon hour. They go into the stable, get an hour to rest and munch their ordinary feed of oats, and these horses are fitted to do the hardest of work and to stand the worst kind of usage. The farmer usually rams the manger full of hay in the morning, feeds his oats at the same time, and leaves the horses for an hour and a half to eat before going to the field. At noon he again feeds hay, gives them their grain, and at night crams all into the manger that he possibly can get there. It would seem better practice to feed a very light feed of hay in the morning, no hay at noon and give the usual big feed at night, relying on oats or a grain mixture only, for the noon feed. It stands to reason that a horse will work more easily afternoon if he is not gorged with hay, and it will not be so hard on his digestive apparatus to simply digest and assimilate his gallon or so of oats as it will if he must do his hard afternoon work on an over-loaded stomach. Besides the horse rests better. We know at least one farm where this system is followe, and the horses are kept in good condition throughout the entire season. It is worth a trial when feed is high. Any of our readers who see fit to try this plan might give other readers the benefit of their experience.

VINOL DID ME A WORLD OF GOOD

Woman Seventy-Five Years Old Exhausted by Effects of Grippe, Restored to Strength by Vinol.

Canton, Miss.—"I am seventy-five years old, and I contracted a severe cold and cough due to a case of LaGrippe, so that I lost my strength and became very weak and feeble. Vinol was recommended to me and after taking it for some time, I can truly say it has done me a world of good. The cold is gone, and my cough is practically cured and it has built up my strength, so I feel active and well again. I think a lot of Vinol, and tell all my friends about what it has done for me."—Mrs. LIZZIE BALDWIN, Canton, Miss.

Old people may regain much of their former strength and vigor by taking Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, on which so many elderly people depend for good health. Vinol sharpens the appetite, aids digestion, enriches the blood and in this natural manner creates strength.

The reason Vinol is so efficacious in such cases is because it contains in a delicious concentrated form all the medicinal curative elements of cod liver oil, with tonic, blood building iron added.

"WAR"

A SERIAL STORY BY

BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

I glanced across the room where Frederick was joking with the young people, and a violent pain shot through me. My all would be crippled, or perhaps shot dead. One child, yet unborn, would be fatherless, all our fresh happiness would be blotted out. All this in one side of the scale, and in the other Austria, and the German Alliance, the liberation of Schleswig-Holstein, with fresh laurels for the army—a lot of new phrases for schoolboy orations and army proclamations. Thousands and thousands of other individuals would have their happiness staked as well as mine, both in ours and the enemy's country. Could it not be avoided, this monstrous thing? If all were to combine, all the wise, the good, and just, could it not be averted?

"Tell me, your Excellency," I asked. "Has it gone so far that the statesmen and diplomatists cannot ward it off?"

"Do not believe, dear Baroness, that it is our business to maintain eternal peace? It would be a beautiful mission, certainly, but impracticable. It is ours to watch the interests of our states and dynasties, and never allow their power to be diminished but strive in every way to maintain our supremacy and honor and revenge insults."

"In fact the principle of war is to injure the enemy whether you are right or wrong."

"Exactly."

"And so they hack away at each other. It is horrible."

"But it is the only way out. How else can quarrels be decided?"

"As are the quarrels between individuals."

"By tribunals? But there are none over the nations."

And Dr. Bresser came to my help: "No, savages have not; hence nations in their intercourse cannot claim to be civilized, and it will take a long time before an International Tribunal is constituted."

"We shall never get there," interrupted my father. "Such things must always be fought out, for the stronger nations would never submit to arbitration. They will only set themselves right by fighting even as gentlemen do, when they are offended."

"The duel is barbarous and immoral."

"You never will be able to alter it."

"Still, your Excellency, I would never defend it."

"What think you, Frederick?" my father turned to my husband. "Should a man take a slap in the face and carry the matter to a law court, and get five florins damages?"

"I should not do so."

"You would challenge the insulter?"

"Of course."

"Aha, Martha! Aha, Doctor," cried my father victoriously. "Did you hear? Tilling, who hates war, is an advocate of duelling."

"No, I do not admit that. But in certain cases I should resort to it, even as I have gone to war under certain conditions. Our conduct must correspond to the current notions of honor. Some day the insult will turn back upon the person inflicting it as the disgraced one, and it will be considered immoral to seek revenge, as it is in other questions considered wrong to take the law into one's own hands."

"We will have to wait a long time for that day," my father broke in. "As long as an aristocracy exists——"

"That will not be for ever," muttered the Doctor.

"Oh, so you would abolish aristocracy?"

"Yes, the feudal. The future needs no nobility."

"But so much the more will it need noble men," said Frederick in confirmation.

"And this rare race will quietly take a slap in the face?"

"There will be none to offer the insult."

"And the states will not defend themselves, if attacked by a neighbor?"

"No neighboring state will offer an attack, as even now our neighboring country seats do not besiege each other. A nobleman no longer needs troops for his castle."

"So some day the states will dispense with standing armies? Ha, what will then become of you lieutenant-colonels?"

"What has become of the squires of feudal times?"

CHAPTER I.

The remaining two weeks in Vienna were no joyous time for me. My happiness was again darkened by this fatal prospect of war. Over all my joys there seemed ever to hang some imminent anguish. Are there not sufficient catastrophies in the natural course of events to keep one in a sense of uncertainty? Why should man wilfully add fresh tortures to the category of natural calamities which might at any time beset him? Some people have learned to look upon war as a natural phenomenon like earthquake and drought, but I had ceased to see it so. Instead of resignation I felt only pain and opposition. Why should Schleswig-Holstein and the Danish Constitution upset us? What matter to us if the "Protocol Prince" repealed or confirmed the constitutional law of November 13, 1863? What if the papers did make it the most important matter in the world, should our husbands and sons therefore be shot down? Should our belonging to the German Alliance necessitate taking up all their quarrels? Had I foreseen two years later how these same German brothers broke into the bitterest enmity, and the Austrians hated the Prussians with a fiercer hate than that which they now entertained for Denmark, I should have realized that all these arguments given out to justify war are mere pretexts and empty phrases.

On New Year's Eve at my father's house he proposed a toast to the hour, and "might it be a glorious one to our arms." I refused to concur. When we returned to the hotel I found myself disturbed even to tears. My husband comforted me: "Do not weep over the bare possibility of war; nothing is yet definite."

"It is the possibility which makes me cry. Were there a certainty I should be shrieking and wailing. Oh that in this first year you should be torn from me by war."

"Come, my dear Martha, when a child is born to you, you must face the possibility of death like every man on the battle-field. Let us enjoy our life now and not waste it thinking of the death which hangs over every head."

"You talk of Destiny just like Aunt Marie. No, it is the thoughtlessness, cruelty, and folly of mankind. Where is there a necessity of a war with Denmark?"

"But that is not yet declared——"

"Yes, I know, accidents may still avert the evil; but it should depend not on accidents, intrigues, humors, but upon the righteous will of humanity. Do not try to quiet me with evasive words when I know that your whole soul shudders with repugnance. My only consolation is that you condemn with me what brings so much unhappiness."

"Yes, yes, dear, I do not hide from you my feelings; when the disaster happens I will not conceal from you my hate for legalized slaughter. But to-day let us not think of destruction; let us be happy while nothing separates us. No joy can last for ever. It is not the length of our days, but the degree of the beauty of our days which makes life so blessed."

And I let myself sink into the sweet rest of the moment and forget the threatening future.

We returned to the garrison on January 10. There was no longer any doubt of war. In Vienna I still heard of some small hope that the dispute could be settled, but in our military circles this was out of the question. The officers and their wives were greatly, even joyfully excited. Did it mean hope for promotion and distinction, or only a restless desire for action?"

"Ah, this war will be immensely popular," said the Colonel at a jolly supper. "And our own territory cannot suffer."

"It is the noble motive that inspires me," said a young lieutenant. "We defend the rights of our oppressed brothers the Prussians. We cannot be vanquished when we fight together, and it will strengthen the national ties. The ideal of nationality——"

"Nonsense," interrupted the Colonel with severity, "that is humbug to an Austrian. Louis Napoleon rode the same sort of a hobby-horse in '59; 'Italy for the Italians.' Why talk of banding with the Germans when we have the Bohemians, Hungarians, Croats?—our bond of unity lies in our loyalty to our dynasty. The thing which must inspire us is not the nationality of our allies but the good, faithful service we can render our beloved ruler."

All rose and pledged the toast. Even my quaking heart stirred for a moment with enthusiasm. That thousands could be inspired by one motive, one person, into a desire for self-sacrifice, this is really a lofty sense of love. But to think that through this love the high fulfilment of duty leads each into the most horrible work of the deadliest hatred—War! My heart chilled again at the thought.

My anxiety grew with the succeeding days. On January 16 the allies demanded that Denmark revoke a certain law against which the Holsteiners had protested asking the protection of the German Alliance, and to this in twenty-four hours. Denmark refused, and had been expected to refuse, for Austrian and German troops stood massed on the frontier, and on February 1 they crossed the Elder.

So the die was cast and the bloody game began.

Frederick's regiment, to the great chagrin of the Colonel and corps, was not ordered north. This brought a fatherly letter of commiseration:—

Such ill-luck, not to be called into the opening to a glorious campaign! This will rejoice Martha. But you, Frederick, though philosophically opposed to war, must regret it. If you got into the fight, certainly your manly enthusiasm would awaken. To be forced to stay at home is truly hard on a soldier!

"Is it hard on you to stay with me, Frederick?" The silent answer was enough.

But my peace was gone. The order might come any day. If the campaign would only end quickly! I watched the newspapers eagerly. I prayed for the termination of the war before my "all on earth" was called. What cared I what became of that little scrap of country? Their rulers were quarrelling only over their jealousies, not over the wrongs of their people, or to better the conditions.

If a number of dogs are fighting over some bones, it is only the hungry dogs that tear each other, but in human history it is the "bones" that have to fight for their devourers.

The Austrian held that they were justified in maintaining the "balance of power." The Danes maintained the opposite principle with equal emphasis. If two States disagree and cannot come to an understanding, why not call in a third Power as arbitrator? Why go on shouting oneself hoarse, and then finally decide by force of arms? Is it not savage? And when a third Power comes in it does not do so judicially, but with blows again. And this is what they call world politics. Why not name it primitive savagery—or parliamentary nonsense—or international barbarism?

I found myself greatly troubled by this mysterious power called "reasons of State," and I began a careful study of history to find out where the historic right lay over which they were quarrelling.

I found the disputed district ceded to Denmark in 1027. So in reality the Danes are right. They are the legitimate kings. However, two hundred years later it was turned over to a younger house, and it was ranked only as a fief of Denmark. In 1326 Count Gerhard Holstein received Schleswig, and the Waldemar constitution provided that Denmark should never again claim any ownership. Oh! then, indeed, the right is with the allies! We are really fighting for the Waldemar Constitution of 1326. That is very good, for if these paper securities are not upheld of what worth are they?

In 1448 this constitution was again ratified by King Christian I. So how dare Denmark ever again claim sovereignty? But what has the Protocol Prince to do with the matter? Twelve years later the Schleswig ruler dies with heirs, and the National Assembly met at Ripen (so important to know exactly where these assemblies always convene). Well then at Ripon, in 1460, they proclaimed the Danish king the Duke of Schleswig, and he thereupon promised that the countries should remain together "for ever undivided." Ah, that is a bit confusing; but remember, they shall remain united "for ever." This little "for ever" is chiefly responsible for the historical confusion, for straightway they divide up the provinces among the king's sons, and under later kings they are again reunited. They are hardly together before they are sliced up again. What a tangle! How can I find my way out, and historically establish the point upon which finally our Austrian countrymen must shed their blood?

Again, I find during the Thirty Years' War, Charles IV. fell upon the duchy. Then a treaty made in 1658 forced the Danish sovereignty to surrender for ever. So we have gotten rid of the Danish feudal lordship "for ever," thank God, and our way is clear again.

But here comes an agreement on August 22, 1721, and Schleswig becomes a dependency of Denmark once more, and on June 1, 1773, Holstein also becomes a simple Danish province. This alters the case again, and, certainly, now the Danes have a perfect right. But hold, not quite—for the Vienna Congress of 1815 declared Holstein a part of the German Alliance. This enraged the Danes, who raised the battle-cry "Denmark to the Elder!" and strove for the complete possession of Schleswig. In the year 1846 King Christian writes a public letter in which he proposed the integrity of the entire state. But the Germans protest. Then the announcement of the complete union is made from the throne, and a rebellion breaks out on the part of the Germans. The Danes win one battle, the Schleswig-Holsteiners the other. Hereupon the Alliance interfered. Prussia took some strategic points, but the struggle continues. At last Prussia and Denmark conclude a peace, so Schleswig-Holstein now stands alone to fight the Danes, and is defeated.

The Alliance calls the "revolters" to discontinue, and they do. Austria takes possession of Holstein, and the two duchies are separated. What has become of all the paper promises to hold them together "for ever?" It is incomprehensible.

But here comes the Protocol of London, May 8, 1852. (So wise that we know the exact date of these flimsy agreements!) This secures to Prince Christian of Glucksburg the succession to Schleswig. So this is where the "Protocol Prince" originated.

In 1854, after each little duchy had adopted a Constitution of its own, both were again appended to Denmark. In '58 Denmark was compelled to lay down its claim. Now history brings us quite close to the present time, and yet with all this eager study it is not clear to me to whom these two countries should rightly belong. November 18, 1858, the German Parliament passed a "Fundamental Law for the Mutual Relations between Denmark and Schleswig." Two days afterwards the king died and left no heir.

Relying on this two-days'-old law, Frederick of Augustenburg raised his claim and turned to the German Alliance for support. (I had completely forgotten to follow that Augustenburg family.) The Alliance at once occupied and proclaimed Augustenburg the duke. But why? Prussians disagreed with Austrians in the proceedings. But why? I cannot understand it to this day.

The London Protocol must be respected. Why? Are protocols things so absolute and supreme that we must pour out the blood of our sons to defend them? Ah, yes, there comes in the mysterious "reason of State." The gentlemen around the green diplomatic table are all wise, and they know how to bring about the greatest security of national supremacy. Of course, the London Protocol of 1852 must be upheld and the constitutional decree of Copenhagen of 1863 must be revoked within twenty-four hours. Yes, Austria's honor and welfare depended upon that. The dogma was a bit hard to believe, but in politics, even more than in religion, the mass allows itself to be led by the rule of quia absurdum—to reason about it is forbidden. With the sword once unsheathed, they shout the unquestioning "hurrah" and struggle for victory.

Oh what a foolish, cruel, and misguided world, still in the leading strings of infancy! Thus my historical studies left me quite as confused as they found me.

CHAPTER II.

Encouraging tidings from the seat of war. The allies won battle after battle. The Danes were forced from the entire field, which was occupied by our troops, the enemy barely maintaining the lines. With pins and flags I followed the campaign on the map. If only the butchery might end before Frederick's regiment was ordered into the field! This fear hung over me like the sword of Damocles. I dreaded the night lest the morning would bring the marching orders. Frederick was calm, but he saw what was coming.

"Accustom yourself to face the events, my dear, and cease protesting. I believe the war will continue for force was sent to the front in the beginning, so my regiment will have to join."

Two months and yet no results! Oh, why could not the cruel game be settled in one fight like a duel? But no, if one battle is lost, another is offered; if one position is given up, another is taken, and so on till one side or the other is annihilated, or both exhausted.

On April 14 the last stronghold was taken, and immediately a peace conference assembled in London. Every one was overjoyed and relieved, save perhaps, some of my husband's comrades, who had hoped to share the glory. Their wives thought it bad luck. But I received the news of "suspension of hostilities" with great joy, and wrote in my diary "Disarm! Disarm! Forever." I added desponding, and in brackets, "Utopia."

The London conference dragged on two months without agreement, and then came the orders to Frederick's regiment to march, with twenty-four hours for leave-taking. The birth of our little child was hourly expected, and it was as if we both awaited death upon our farewell.

We were overwhelmed with the magnitude of the approaching evils. To us it was neither patriotic nor heroic to help hew down the Danes, and in case our parting was for ever, what excuse of state could reconcile us to this terrible sacrifice? To defend the common cause of humanity might be justified, but to rush into battle with a distant country, throwing away life, and home, and family, because of the mere pledge of princes—it was too infamous! Why must Austrian soldiers leave home to help set this petty prince on his petty throne? Why? Why? How treasonable and blasphemous to ask such a question of Emperor and Pope! Neither would or could answer.

The regiment was to march at ten. We had not slept for hours lest we should waste a moment. We strove vainly to comfort each other. In the rays of morning light I realized that my hour had come, and with tears of uncertainty we tore ourselves apart, Frederick desperate lest the next moment might rob him of both wife and child.

The next morning the Olmutz papers contained the following account:—

Yesterday the —th Regiment left town with flying colors to gain fresh laurels in the sea-girt brotherland. The joy of battle inspired every heart, etc., etc.

I lost my child, and for weeks lay between life and death, dreaming all the agonies of war and torture. In my delirium I cried, "Disarm! Disarm! Help! Help us all for the sake of justice and mercy, help!"

When I regained consciousness, my father and Aunt Marie stood at my bedside.

"Is he alive? Have letters come?" were my first questions. Yes, quite a heap of letters had accumulated. One was marked: "Not to be opened till all danger is past." From this I take extracts:—

Now they're having aeroplane funerals. Most people however, will prefer their remains to be taken cemetery-ward in the old-fashioned way.

It is said that Roumania will enter the war in April. "Everybody's Doing It" should be a popular tune soon.

It is going counter to popular opinion to say so, but the fact is no lady can properly support a husband by taking in washing.

A SUCCESSFUL TEA

On Saturday afternoon the Felecitor Club entertained their friends at the tea hour at the home of their convenor, Mrs. Mitchell, 28 Cedar street. The tea room was prettily decorated with yellow daffodils, yellow being the Club color. This pleasing function was in aid of the Red Cross sock fund, and the returns were exceedingly gratifying. All credit is due these young ladies for the successful manner in which the tea was carried out.

Agricultural News

THE HORSE

Make increases gradually, until at the time the animals take the field they are on full feed.

It is time to begin increasing the grain ration for the work horses in preparation for spring work.

Continue the feeding of roots up until the time the horses go to work. They will help keep the digestive system in good order when increasing the grain ration.

Give the in-foal mare the advantage during spring work. Many practice allowing her a double-tree advantage of about two or three inches. Avoid putting her on the tongue if possible.

It is folly to feed on straw and roots only, and then start the horses on a gallon of oats each three times daily the day seeding opens. This is responsible for digestive troubles which prove costly.

Colts which are to be worked in seeding cannot be expected to do a full day's work in the beginning. Where a man has two colts it is good practice to work them half a day about beside an older horse.

Give the colts the lightest of the seeding work. They are far more able to do harrowing than they are to take their places on the cultivator or disk. Where they are to be used on the cultivator do not put them on the tongue.

The first day in the fields allow the horses to stand for a few minutes at frequent intervals. Remember they are soft, have done little work through the winter, and there is a danger of over-doing them, especially if the day be hot with little breeze blowing.

Be careful in watering over-warm animals. Some will stand it, but many will not. It is good practice to give them a little water when coming in from work, and allow them more when going out again. This insures against their taking too much at once.

Give the colts that are going to help with the seeding this year for the first time exercise in harness as often as possible. Let them do the light team work around the farm from now until seeding begins. They will then be much more fit when the hard work comes.

Raise the collars off the horses' shoulders frequently, and with the hand rub down the shoulders well. This may be done when allowing the horses to stand for a breath of fresh air. It will cool the shoulder, remove the sweat and prevent, to a considerable extent, scalding.

Many a case of colic has resulted from feeding too heavily on grain during the first few days of heavy spring work. The work is a strain upon the animal's system, which weakens it and places it in no condition to handle the extra concentrated food which is sure to cause trouble.

Look to the harness and see that all parts are in order, and that they fit the horse which is to wear them. Where possible avoid changing harness from one horse to another, and always provide a special collar for each horse. A collar which fits one animal well is not likely to fit another to so good advantage.

Don't forget, in the preparation of the horses for spring work, to use the curry comb. It is almost as important as feed, and its use should not be left until such time as the horses are actually engaged in the seeding operations, although it is very important that they be cleaned each night and morning then.

It makes extra work, but it is good practice to remove the harness while the horse is feeding at the noon hour. It gives the sweating collar and all other parts which are in contact with the heated animal when working an opportunity to cool off, and also gives the horse a chance to rest from carrying the weight of the harness and allows him to cool down more quickly.

BETTER CANADIAN BABIES

Calves and chickens come before babies in these days of higher education. Thousands of dollars are spent by our Governments to teach us how to care for and feed calves and chickens, but did you ever hear of one dollar being spent to teach Canadian mothers how to care for their babies either before or after birth?

Thousands of babies die every year because their mothers do not know how to care for their children. How many calves or chickens die from the same reasons? Not many. Why? Because we have made a study of their requirements and know how they should be cared for, and because our Creator has given them the power to help themselves to a certain degree almost from birth.

Babies not being able to help themselves, there is all the more reason why mothers should fit themselves to help the babies. What chance have babies to become healthy Canadian citizens if mothers do not know how to care for them?

Our Governments spend thousands of dollars to deal with hog cholera, but where is there a dollar spent to stamp out tuberculosis in babies?

Even the doctors do not seem to study the baby; their time is taken up doctoring adults that, had they been given proper care when babies would have grown up healthy and strong and would not have needed a doctor so frequently.

Babies are not born "strong" or "weakly"; they are born just as their mothers brought them into the world and even the weakest little mortal can be made healthy and strong if its mother will only use common sense and good judgment in the care of her child.

Mothers should join in the movement for Better Canadian Babies and learn from those who have made a study of babies just what to do and what not to do to have them grow up healthy, happy children—Canadian Home Journal.

DEATHS.

Since Saturday the reaper of death has been busy in the city and vicinity, and in consequence three have joined the great majority.

MRS. THOS. BARNHART.

Mrs. Margaret Barnhart, wife of the late Thomas Barnhart of this city, passed away last evening here. Deceased, who was in her 55th year, had lived here for some time and was favorably known to many in the city. Her fatal illness was of short duration. Mrs. Barnhart was born in Limerick, Ireland, but had resided in this county nearly all her life. She was a member of St. Michael's church. One son, John J., of Erie, Pa., and three daughters, Misses Minnie, Lena and Maggie of this city, survive.

MISS JANE BOYLE.

An aged maiden lady in the person of Miss Jane Boyle, died yesterday in Thurlow Township, at the advanced age of 91 years. Deceased was born in Queen's County, Ireland, but when a girl came to this country, where she had since made it her home. Miss Boyle was a member of the Anglican church, and was much respected by all who knew her. She was a relative of the late Mr. Wm. Thompson, who resided on the Canifton Road.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SEALED TENDERS (in duplicate) for the supply of Coal and Fuel Wood required to heat the Military Buildings at Kingston, Belleville, Port Hope, Cobourg, Peterborough, Ottawa, Brockville, Picton, Lindsay and Renfrew, Ont., for the year ending March 31, 1916, will be received up to Thursday, March 25, next. Each tender is to be marked "Tender for Fuel," and addressed to the Director of Contracts, Militia Headquarters, Ottawa.

Printed forms of tender containing full particulars may be obtained from the Director of Contracts, Militia Headquarters, Ottawa, or at the office of the Officer Commanding, 3rd Division, Kingston, who will furnish all information required.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque, on a Canadian chartered Bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence, for five per cent. of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the party making the tender decline to sign a contract when called upon to do so. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

RENEWING THE FLOCK

It is Rather Expensive For Chicken Raisers to Replace Half Each Year

One of the biggest drawbacks to success in the poultry industry is the problem of renewing the flock. With most strains of fowls the average life of usefulness is considered to be about two years. Under these conditions fifty per cent. of the fowls must be replaced every year. A flock of two thousand hens would thus require one thousand good pullets added each year. This would mean an average of four thousand chicks, one-half of which would be lost in brooding or culled out, and at least one-half of those left would be cockerels, which are too often raised at a loss. The fact that most egg producers would be glad to buy pullets at the price they receive for the the cockerel is a confession that it costs more to produce them to the broiler age than they will bring.

Leghorn chicks can usually be bought in large numbers at ten cents each, with fifty per cent. loss or culled out the original cost per chick would be twenty cents. The feed cost would run from thirty cents to forty cents, making the total cost of producing a pullet, outside of equipment and labor, fifty to sixty cents.

The equipment required for brooding chicks in such large numbers is an expensive item, and can only be used for a short time each season. The labor problem is also acute. While the sale of the old stock may possibly balance the cost of these two items; still the annoyance and uncertainty of the whole process is one of the most discouraging factors in poultry production to-day.

The development of a strain of fowls that would be profitable through a longer period of time, and thus lower the renewal requirement to one-half or one-third of its present amount would materially reduce the cost of production, as well as the worry and hazard of the poultry industry.

WORK THE STALLION

He Should Not be Allowed to Get Fat and Weak in Stable

We have seen stallions over-exercised during the idle season, but we must confess that our experiences in that direction are rare, says a writer in the Farmer's Advocate, London. We know cases where they have been put into the harness and worked day after day, on not too much grain, yet the general run of stallions are a bit of expense after the traveling season is over, for they are shut up in the box stall where their hair gets dull and dusty, their skin dry and their toes long. In other words, they are allowed to go down physically, and the so-called rest is unprofitable recreation.

Untrained sires should be ridden or led daily, and a distance of five miles is not a bit too much. Failing daily activity on the line, a horse will take considerable exercise in a large, open paddock. A horse that will work should have a collar on his neck, and be driven by a good teamster. It is generally believed that much of the mortality in foals could be eliminated were they always sired by horses in proper condition. As a result of the agitation carried on by the owners of mares, and assisted by the farm press, the number of stallions imprisoned in a dark stall and uncared for during the winter, to be fattened in the spring and put on the road, is materially lessened. There is still opportunity for improvement—get a collar for the stallion.

Motorcycle as Chaff-cutter

A farmer at Bantnall, England, fixed his motorcycle on a stand against the wall of the farm buildings, and it drives a chaff-cutter and turnip-cutter at the same time. It does not cost much to work it. The turnip-cutter is on the same level as the cycle, and is connected by a kind of bicycle chain. The chaff-cutter is placed above the turnip-cutter on another floor, and connected by 2-inch belting. After it has been on some little time the engine gets hot, so a fan is made to revolve by the side to keep it cool. It is also used for churning milk. This saves a great deal of time for the workmen, because it can do the two jobs at once.

Farm Life Remodels Men

One lesson which the Provincial Secretary of Ontario maintains is to be learned from the operation of the Fort William industrial farm is the folly of short-term sentences, and the fact that indeterminate periods spent under the new method have proven vastly superior, from standpoints both of law observance and the development of the prisoners. The provision of healthy outdoor employment for the hundreds of persons committed to this institution since its opening has worked a revolution in the morale of the men incarcerated.

We brag about freeing the black slaves, but nobody seems to be doing anything for the woman who becomes the mother of seven or eight children.

A Letter That is Self Explanatory

The following offer, although received over a month ago, was needless to say immediately accepted. We withheld the announcement until after the formel openings and now we place them on sale at the price suggested by the manufacturers in the following letter. It is indeed a great chance for our customers to secure a $6 pair of Silk Corsets at the extremely low price of $3.50. Read!—

Quebec, Feb. 4, 1915,
Messrs. Ritchie Co., Limited,
Belleville, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—

In time of war everybody has to make sacrifices, Retailers, Wholesalers, Manufacturers, etc., and more so the Manufacturer who is doing an export business.

We ourselves make a lot of high grade Corsets especially in silk for export trade. Unfortunately, this year our exportations have considerably decreased on account of the war, and we have on hand at present about 200 dozen SILK CORSETS for export, where usually we would not have any at all; so we have decided to clear them out at a sacrifice.

We have divided the above mentioned 200 dozen in 5 and 10 dozen lots between 25 of our best clients throughout the country. We believe you could handle one of these 10 dozen lots yourself with advantage, and by selling them at about, say, $3.50 a pair you can help your Corset Department and at the same time give your customers a great bargain.

Kindly let us know by return mail if this proposition is acceptable to you.

Yours truly,

Preparing For the Retreat

Arrangements Made for Reception of Troops in Border Towns—Great Events Pending

ROTTERDAM March 16.—(Special.)—There is considerable excitement and speculation in the Dutch frontier province of Zeeland as to what will happen in Belgium during the next few days. Everybody along this interesting strip of country is being convinced that great events are pending on the Belgium side of the frontier. Every town and village and commune during the week-end has been hastily prepared for the reception of troops, and the people are eagerly asking whether it is not the beginning o. preparations for a retreat rather than the advance of new troops, which if they were coming from Germany, would be sent west and not billeted in eastern Flanders. Now that the allies have commenced the offensive at Maldeghem, where the garrison was formerly 200, and accommodation is being made for 600 men. In the neighborhood of Eecloo arrangements are being made for the reception of a big force. At Eecloo, as in other villages, even churches are being cleared to receive troops. In Middleskerke, West Capelle, Knocke and Soyst similar activity is noticeable.

BEER KEG CHASED HIM THROUGH GLASS

Propelled by Runaway Cask Grenier Found Himself Among Cravats He Was Admiring

MONTREAL, March 15.—Two men were injured Saturday afternoon in what might be termed a compound accident. Also $200 damage was done. Elie Senegan was peacefully driving his express wagon, which was loaded with beer kegs, down the St. Catherine street hill from Bleury street, when a tram crashed into his vehicle. The shock threw Senegan from his seat and also dislodged a keg of beer.

Eugene Grenier of 586 St. Denis street, was thinking of Easter cravats and looking into the window of the Royal Store at the corner of St. George and St. Catherine streets. He did not hear the crash of the collision, nor did he see the keg of beer which, rapidly gathering momentum, down the hill, sped towards him.

The first thing Grenier knew he had gone through the Royal Store window, right among the ties he had been admiring. Beside him reposed the keg of beer. Grenier and Senegan were treated in the General Hospital.

Turks in Capital Are Very Uneasy

Natives on Housetops Scan Waters of Marmora Daily for Advancing Foe

"News reaches here from Constantinople setting forth that the Young Turks are beginning to find their position difficult and are preparing for flight.

"The Germans, a great number of whom have sent their families to places of safety, continue their efforts to convince the Turks that the Dardanelles are impregnable, but the inhabitants, worried by omens, are showing much uneasiness. Every morning they mount the house tops and scan the waves of the Sea of Marmora and of the Bosphorus to see if any hostile fleet is in sight.

"The Sultan Selim, formerly the German cruiser Goeben, undoubtedly is out of commission. There is a rent in her armor eighteen yards long, said to have been caused by a Turkish mine."

JAPANESE TROOPS ON WAY TO MANCHURIA

But Feeling in Tokio is that War With China Will be Averted

TOKIO, March 15.—The first contingent of troops has started for Manchuria. General Hon Fo, of the 7th division, which will follow, has conferred with Lieutenant General Oka, Minister of War, and will be received by the Emperor today. Port Arthur is reported to be a busy spot.

Temporary barracks have been erected along the Manchurian railway. Despite reports of activities in the Chinese army, the feeling in Tokio at present is that the negotiations between Japan and China will be completed without a resort to arms.

FIVE-MINUTE FIGHT FINISHES THE DRESDEN

Raider Caught Off Chilean Coast by Three British Warships—Set on Fire and Magazine Exploded

LONDON, March 16.—(Special)—The sinking of the Dresden was announced by the British Admiralty last night in the following statement:

"On the 14th of March, at 9 a.m., H. M. S. Glasgow, Captain John Luce, R.N.; H. M. Auxiliary Cruiser Orama, Captain John R. Segrave, R.N., and H.M.S. Kent, Captain John D. Allen, C.B., R.N., caught the Dresden near Juan Fernandez Island.

"An action ensued, and after five minutes' fighting the Dresden hauled down her colors and displayed the white flag. She was much damaged and set on fire, and after she had been burning for some time her magazine exploded and she sank.

"The crew were saved. Fifteen badly wounded Germans are being landed at Valparaiso.

"There were no British casualties and no damage to the ships."

Britain Refuses American Request

LONDON, March 16.—(Special)—Great Britain yesterday formally refused the American proposal that she should permit food to reach German civilians on condition that Germany should withdraw her submarine blockade. The reply was handed to Ambassador Page almost simultaneously with the publication of the British decree establishing a virtual blockade of German ports.

The British reply to the second American note in which inquiry was made for further information in regard to the measures to be taken by the Allies to cut off the trade of Germany was handed to Ambassador Page at the same time.

The text of these replies has not been made public.

AIRMEN AMONG NUMBER

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 16.—The last eight official casualty lists, No. 166 to No. 173, contain 33,143 names, bringing the grand total of killed, wounded and missing to 1,050,029 men, according to a despatch to the Evening News from Copenhagen. The last four lists include the names of eleven airmen killed, four wounded, and two taken prisoners. These do not take into account 160 Bavarian, 136 Wurtemburg, 119 Saxon, and 20 naval lists.

BELLEVILLE SOLDIERS ESPECIALLY MENTIONED FOR BRAVERY

NEWS FROM CAPT. O'FLYNN

Mrs. O'Flynn received letters from Capt. O'Flynn at the front, the first one bearing the censor's mark and post stamp of the 21st of February. The last received from him before this was dated the 18th of February, so that in the interval the Belleville boys had been in the trenches. He says:

"We have been in the trenches and have been relieved for 24 hours. We go back tonight for a short time. I will write again when I come out. It was interesting in the trenches, particularly to one who had never been through it before. It is wonderful to see the calm way the British officers and men take everything. They have a job to do and they are doing it, and that is all there is about it. It has a soothing influence on those who are new at the game. It is amusing to hear the Germans shout 'Put up your head!' The combatants joke each other all the time. One would imagine that they were playing a game rather than seeking each other's lives. This is not the case where I am, as the trenches are not near enough together. Today is Sunday and Major Beatty, our chaplain, held service this afternoon. It was a fine service. The men behaved admirably in the trenches. They are all anxious to play their part in this great conflict. The British officers spoke very well of our men. You can never know how much your letters are appreciated. We always look forward to the receiving of the Canadian mail. Do not be surprised if you do not hear from me, as it is impossible to write sometimes and may be more so as we make progress. However, rest assured that every chance I get I will drop you a note even if it is only a card, and be sure and do not worry as "no news is good news." My health is good and Dick (Lieut. Ponton) is also feeling fine. We are in the same company and are in the same billet. The Belleville boys are all feeling fine."

The second letter came by the same boat. The post office stamp was affixed the 25th of February. Part of the letter was as follows: "We are back in our billets once again after taking our turn in the trenches. Dick and I are both feeling fine and there were no casualties among the Belleville boys. Two of the Belleville boys, Prince and Styles, did some fine work under shell fire. They brought some wounded men to safety, and one of the English colonels stated that he would recommend that they be mentioned in despatches. They are both stretcher-bearers. They showed great coolness and we are quite proud of them. A great many of the casualties now are because of carelessness, and if a man is careful the chances are all in his favor. The old proverb 'Familiarity breeds contempt,' is particularly in evidence here, and a little more care would often prevent numerous mishaps. My men are all unharmed yet and I hope will continue so. However, in a game of this kind one can never tell what or when the trouble will be. I will write as often as possible even if it is only a few lines to let you know I am feeling all O.K."

Throughout the whole of the Captain's letters they are cheerful and bright. He pays every tribute to the men and particularly to the regulars of the British army. He sends best wishes to his many friends, with special messages to some. He referred to the old members of the Council and sent his best wishes especially to Mayor Panter, who had always shown him such courtesy while he was in the Council.

GERMAN VICTORIES AS REPORTED FROM THE CITY OF BERLIN

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 16.—The German War Office reported that the English position on a height near Steloi, south of Ypres has been taken by the Germans. The fighting for the possession of this location has been going on since the day before yesterday.

In the Champagne district several partial attacks delivered by the French troops broke down in face of the German fire. The French losses were heavy. To the north of Beausejour German troops took possession of several French trenches. The engagement began yesterday in the Argonne and continues today. Also in the Vosges there are several places where fighting is still goin on.

On the Orzye to the northeast of Przasysz Russian attacks everywhere have been repulsed. There was an especially violent engagement for the possession of Jednorozek. Two thousand Russians were taken prisoners. South of the Vistula there is nothing to report.

French Actress Aboard Floride Tells Her Story

Says German Officers of Eitel Deceived Captain by British Tactics

NEW YORK, March 15.—How a Frenchwoman feels when she is captured at sea and taken on board a German warship was related today by Mlle. Jeanne Marny, of the Opera Comique, Paris, who was on the French liner Floride when that vessel was taken by the Prinz Eitel Friederich on February 19th off the coast of Brazil. She arrived in New York today on the Old Dominion steamship Jefferson, accompanied by her friend, Marinette Tretty.

Both actresses are about 26 years old and sailed together on the Floride from Bordeaux to join the opera stock company at the San Marco Theatre, Buenos Aires.

"It was a great shock," she said, "after taking our coffee and rolls on the morning of Tuesday, February 19, when a strange steamer was sighted coming straight toward our ship. The officer on the bridge said he thought she looked like a German warship and then we were all frightened and the sick women among the Portuguese emigrants in the steerage cried and others knelt and prayed.

"Then Captain Moussin came from the bridge and said it was alright, because he had got a wireless message in English telling him to wait for the other ship to come up, as she was a British cruiser and wanted to see what passengers he had on.

"The German officers deceived us all up to the last moment and after hailing our captain from the bridge when we stopped, sent a boat in charge of an officer, who pretended to speak nothing but English when he came on board.

"The German ship was black everywhere and we could not see anyone on deck as she waited close by, with the smoke pouring from her two funnels. Our passengers thought it was alright until one of the officers of the Floride came along and said it was a German warship and that we were all prisoners of war and would be taken to the other ship.

"I felt so sorry for the poor, sick Portuguese women, because they could not understand what had happened, and thought they were all going to be thrown into the sea with their children to feed the sharks we had seen swimming about that morning. They expressed much joy when they heard that an American liner had been started to Buenos Aires direct and said they would go to the French Line tomorrow to make arrangements, as they expected that company, which owned the Floride, to pay their way."

Missing Farmer's Son Found in France With the Canadian Army

MANDAN, N.D., March 15.—"I'm with the Canadian soldiers in France, farm life's not exciting enough", is the information received by the father of Ray Crandall, and the mystery of the disappearance of a former local school basketball star is thus solved. Crandall disappeared last fall.

A letter says that he and another boy left the threshing fields near New Salem, going to Portal, N.D., and being stopped by the authorities and sent back to Minot. They tried to cross the line again, but were stopped a second time and sent to Grand Forks. Then they crossed the line at night and walked to Winnipeg and joined the army.

The father of Crandall is a farmer near Golden Valley, and he made a long search without result. The boy is 22.

BAYONETS USED BY CANADIANS TO DRIVE THE ENEMY BACK

First Contingent Distinguished Itself at Neuve Chapelle, When Every Man Fought Like a Hero and All Were Highly Praised.

NORTHERN FRANCE, March 16.—Special—In one of the greatest British advances of the war when the Germans were driven back nearly a mile at ——the Canadians distinguished themselves. They were fighting alongside British and Indian battalions and they displayed wonderful ability, coolness and daring equaling that of the famous first line regiments.

When put to the test of using the bayonet they showed superiority over the enemy by capturing trench after trench and flinging the enemy's force back to Neuve Chapelle.

When the goal was reached they effectively repulsed heavy counter-attacks.

"Every officer was proud to lead such splendid fighters", said an officer in the Queen's Own, who was slightly wounded. "They swept everything before them, fighting gallantly, and almost as cool as though they were in Salisbury instead of in Flanders. True, we suffered considerably, but nothing compared with what we did to the Germans. The Canadians are great soldiers. Every man a hero."

This officer, whose name the censor would not permit me to cable, described the gallantry of the first contingent and the Princess Patricias. He was slightly wounded at Neuve Chapelle during the advance five days ago.

"Every man used his bayonet to perfection", he said, "and fought with the greatest enthusiasm. The Canadians occupied one flank, with the Patricias between them and the British.

"They charged desperately in a long attack, and never once were repulsed, capturing and occupying one German trench, and then charging and taking the next.

"The artillery always fired effectively, time and again shelling the enemy out of his position.

"Between the trenches there was mud and slime, and in some places holes which had been made by huge shells, and filled with water, into which men fell and were pulled out by their comrades."

The Canadians' first bayonet charge was on the day before the notable British victory. Battalions from Toronto and districts, including the Patricias, charged over 350 yards of ground, but were twice repulsed by a superior force. Pte. Arthur Herbert of Georgetown, states that his first taste of real action was on Wednesday last. "Fighting in the trenches was easy", he said, "but this was fierce. In the trenches the only danger is in entering and leaving, or looking over te parapet, when snipers get busy. If anyone says the Germans are poor shots he's crazy.

"On Wednesday all our bunch was ordered to charge the left trench in sections. By fighting a short distance and then flopping down in the mud we advanced, blazing away, at 300 yards. Then we used the bayonet on the Germans coming out to meet us. Others who were coming up in the rear then turned their machine guns on us, so we retired slightly. Soon we returned to the attack, but their main force refused to come out. I broke my bayonet and had to use my rifle butt. The next day we went at them hard, and they never stopped retiring until they reached Neuve Chapelle. Our men enjoyed the charge. It was just what they wanted."

The splendid conduct of the Canadians was greatly praised by the British as well as by our own Canadian officers.

Former criticism of the Canadians being lacking in discipline was shown to be absolutely unfounded, and is now forgotten.

Chief Eastern Line Taken

Russians Carry Strong Defences Three Miles From Heart of Fortress—Positions Stormed

PETROGRAD, March 16—Special—All the middle Carpathian passes are still locked in a snow blizzard and the Austrians are making desperate efforts to extricate themselves from the choked ravines among the river sources flowing into the valley stretching to the region of Przemysl, the Stryj River and Lemberg which are stormswept. In this region also the Russians promptly seized their advantage amid the hurricane and snow to charge into the chief eastern defence of Przemysl, only three miles from the heart of the fortress. The position there is held by a strong force of infantry and artillery, but the vehemence of the Russian onslaught was such that an entire battalion surrendered at the first charge. The others maintained a confused resistance, frequently shooting their comrades. Then they fled in a panic, leaving many guns imbedded in the snowdrifts. The siege ring is now drawn much tighter.

The Germans in the north evidently dread the possibility of a thaw. Their large forces on the border of Poland have been practically halted. The weather would permit of a general battle with movement of artillery and heavy cavalry, but the season has reached the time when a complete thaw is probable. This would prove a disaster, if it caught the Germans in a half developed movement near the swamps near Narew.

QUIET IN BUKOWINA

BUCHAREST, March 16.—Special—The staff of the Russian army in Bukowina is installed in the Village of Bojan and Russian troops occupy the left bank of the Pruth as far as Czernowitz, the Austrians being on the opposite side of the valley. The Pruth is the scene of desultory cannonading, but up to to-day neither belligerent has attemted to cross the river. An offensive is only possible higher up the river where the declivities are not so marked and the bed of the stream is hallower. Some Austrian troops of the second order are holding the line from Tsurenicz to Ernovitz and have constructed defensive works surrounded by wire entanglements. Fighting continues north of Nadvorna, where the Russians have lately taken some thousand prisoners. General Laurentieff with part of his division is engaged here and the results of this fighting so far have been favorable to the Russians and will decide the fate of Czernowitz.

GETTING READY TO STRIKE

Italy's Army and Navy Waiting for War Signal

ROME, March 15.—The moment of supreme decision approaches. Soldiers are already near the Austro-Italian frontier, drilling daily, and looking at the snow on the top of the mountains, the melting of which will probaely mark the day of the march forward.

All the regiments of artillery are testing the new cannon, proclaimed to be superior to any other field guns existing.

At the end of this month 10,000 reserve officers will reach their posts. Twenty thousand non-commissioned officers have been recalled to the colors.

The entire fleet is in readiness, and its sailors look to the Duke of the Abruzzi, on his flagship, the new dreadnought Count Cavour, as a naval hero who will continue the traditions from Duilius to Andrea Doria.

THE IMMIGRATION INVASION
CANADIAN CLUB ADDRESS
BY J. S. WOODSWORTH

There was a slim attendance at the Canadian Club supper at the Y. M. C. A. last night, but those members who were present did ample justice to the good things provided by the ladies' auxiliary committee. Six-fifteen is evidently a bad hour for the business men and mechanic generally to attend these suppers and the Club will either have to change the hour or dispense with the supper. As usual, several members came in for the address of the evening. The President, Mr. J. L. Hess, presided with genial verse and complimented the Club on making up by good looks what was lacking in numbers, and also on the presence of four ministers—the largest number of "the cloth" present on any one Club night this season. (A voice—"We need them.") The speaker of the evening, Mr. James S. Woodsworth, M.A., took for his subject "The problem of the immigrant after the war." Mr. Woodsworth is a recognized authority in the field of immigrant study and racial problems, and has specialized on the subject from a Canadian viewpoint. His book—"Strangers Within our Gates, or, Coming Canadians", has gone through three editions, and enjoyed a very large circulation; and is considered a reliable text-book on immigration.

Mr. Woodsworth illustrated his address by a large chart erected on fishing poles, which set out in a diagram the percentages of immigration from all points of the compass into Canada for the 14 years ending with March, 1914. Two very pertinent questions were printed in large bold type as a slogan or challenge.

Our immigrants:

(1) What shall we do with them?

(2) What will they do with us?

Mr. Woodsworth showed by the figures on his chart that only 38 per cent. of this stream of immigration is of British origin, and the remainder is divided among immigrants from the United States, 34 per cent., many of whom, however, are of foreign extraction, and 27 per cent. are the natives of Southeastern Europe and the Orient. The average Canadian, he opined, knows very little about our immigrants. He classifies all men as whites or foreigners. The foreigners he thinks of as the men who dig the sewers, build the railroads, and get into trouble at the police court. They are all supposed to dress in outlandish garb, to speak a barbarian tongue, and to smell abominably. The speaker sought to answer the question as to how these immigrants of various nationalities and different degrees of civilization may be assimilated and made worthy citizens of Canada. The various traits of the immigrants were portrayed in a vivacious and humorous way, including the story of an immigrant as told by himself. His own viewpoint: The Norwegians, Icelanders, Germans, French, Russians and Doukhobors, Lithuanians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Hungarians, Hebrews, Italians and the Levantine races and orientals, the negroes and the Indians—all this seething mass of strangers are in the great melting pot of Canada. That is our problem. We must assimilate, educate, control and Christianize these peoples or they will eventually become the balance of power in Canada, and be our evil genius and menace. The racial, economic, social and political ideas of these foreigners must be studied sympathetically, and they must be led to feel that we are their friends and brothers with whom they are to live in love and harmony. The city as the hive of the foreigner was adverted to, and inspection and cleanliness and the breaking up of feudal parties and alien customs was suggested and plans outlined. Undesirable immigration must be restricted, the money qualification is not all. There should be a literacy test and a moral standard enjoined. Canada stands to gain a new influx of foreigners after this war and we must be ready to cope with the situation in all parts and provinces of the country. Our immigration department has made excellent arrangements, but more far-reaching measures are absolutely necessary. We have a commission on conservation of natural resources; why not a commission on conservation of human resources. The immigrant who is normal and intelligent is imbued with a high idealism, love of art, music and literature, patient industry, deep religious devotion. We must educate and train their children, and further modifications in our public school system become necessary, such as a form of bi-lingualism. But this must be done so as not to interfere with the unifying influences of the school. English should be the language of our schools and should be taught thoroughly. The race-map of Western Canada looks like a crazy patchwork quilt. Europe has been transferred to Canada. Here we have all the divisions of race, language and social customs, and all the inherited animosities of centuries. What Europe has failed to do in a thousand years Canada must attempt.

A hearty vote of thanks to the speaker was passed on motion of Mr. C. M. Reid and Mr. John Elliott, and the meeting closed with the National Anthem.

Either Way—
Drugs Are Harmful!

If a tea or coffee drinker, have you stopped to think that, with every cup, you are taking from 1½ to 3 grains of caffeine, a slow, but powerful drug?

According to medical authorities, caffeine is a cause of nervousness, heart trouble, indigestion, constipation and other ailments. It's a cumulative drug, and what's more, a habit-forming drug.

Sometime, when the drug gets in its licks, you'll realize the harm it does; but wouldn't it be better to avoid trouble—stop both tea and coffee now and use Postum.

It is a pure food-drink, made from selected wheat and a little wholesome molasses, carefully roasted, ground and skilfully blended. This gives Postum a snappy delicious flavor, but it is absolutely free from caffeine, or any other harmful ingredient.

Instant Postum—a soluble form—no boiling required—made instantly in the cup with hot water—30c and 50c a tin.

The difference is only in the form. Both kinds are equally wholesome and delicious and the cost per cup is about the same. Be sure to ask for the kind you want.

Every Seven Days Allan Liner Sails

Will Maintain Weekly Service to Liverpool and Glasgow This Year—Other Vessels to Havre

MONTREAL, Mar 15.—In its summer mail service from Montreal to Liverpool, the Allan Line will have such fine steamships as the Grampian and the Hesperian leaving this port every two weeks. In the service between Montreal and Glasgow, a fortnightly service has been arranged as well.

The first Allan liner to leave Montreal this season will be the Pretorian on May 8th for Glasgow, but it will also be that steamer's last visit to this port for the season, as it is intended to put it on the Glasgow-Boston service through the remainder of the 1915 season. The service from Montreal to Glasgow will be kept up by the Scandinavian and Corsician, the Scandinavian sailing from here first on May 22, and Corsician on June 5th, and these two vessels alternating the service throughout the summer at dates exactly fourteen days apart.

In the Liverpool service, the Grampian will sail on May 14th and the Hesperian on May 28th, and this service will be maintained by these two vessels on dates exactly two weeks apart.

The Sardinian, Pomeranian and Carthaginian will make round trips throughout the season, calling at Glasgow, Liverpool, St. John's, Nfld., Halifax, N.S.; and Philadelphia, but the Sardinian will not carry passengers.

No announcement has been made as yet as to what the service will be to Havre and London. There will be one, but the names of the vessels which will sustain it, and the dates of their sailing, will be announced later.

The great liners Alsatian and Calgarian, the Ionian, Scotian, Tunisian Victorian and Virginian are still in the service of the British Admiralty. The signal honor has been paid the Allan Line of naming the Alsatian as the flagship of the mercantile cruiser squadron.

SUNKIST ORANGE PIE

Make pastry of one cup of flour, one-third teaspoon each of baking powder and salt, and thick cream to moisten (about one-third of a cupful if soft flour is used). Roll out quite thin, spread with two tablespoons of creamed butter, fold over, roll out again and place in either a perforated or wire pie pan. Flute the edges nicely, pour in the filling and bake in a moderately hot oven.

For the filling cream three tablespoons of butter with a scant cup of sugar and add two egg yolks and one white, well beaten together. Stir in the juice and grated rind of one Sunkist Orange and the juice of half a Sunkist Lemon, and a bit of salt.

When the pie is done and partly cooled, cover it with a meringue of two egg whites beaten stiff and five tablespoons of fine sugar added gradually. Sift sugar over the top after spreading and bake in a slow over about 15 minutes.

ACID STOMACHS ARE DANGEROUS

Common Sense Advice by a Distinguished Specialist.

"Acid" stomachs are dangerous because acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach, thus hindering and preventing the proper action of the stomach, and leading to probably nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble from which people suffer. Ordinary medicines and medical treatments are useless in such cases, for they leave the source of the trouble, the acid in the stomach as dangerous as ever. The acid must be neutralized and its formation prevented, and the best thing for this purpose is a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, a simple antacid, taken in a little warm or cold water after eating, which not only neutralizes the acid, but also prevents the fermentation from which acidity is developed. Foods which ordinarily cause distress may be eaten with impunity if the meal is followed with a little bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist, and should always be kept handy.

You can end a cold mighty quick—cure it completely—by Catarrhozone. Any sort of Catarrh, whether in nose, throat or bronchial tubes, can be driven forever out of the system by simply breathing in the healing vapor of Catarrhozone.

It's in the nostrils and air passages that Catarrh germs breed. The germ-killing vapor of Catarrhozone means instant death to those germs—means that a healing process is started throughout all the sore membranes, thereby effectually ridding the system of the real cause of the trouble.

Catarrhozone promptly opens up clogged nostrils, takes that irritating pain out of the nose, prevents the formation of hard painful crusts. If there is a nasty discharge it disappears with a few hours' use of CATARRHOZONE INHALER. If a bad cold keeps you sneezing, if you have dull frontal pains over the eyes, you'll get the speediest cure possible with Catarrhozone.

Years of wonderful success in Europe and America have proved CATARRHOZONE a specific for all catarrhal, throat, bronchial and breathing organ troubles. Simple, pleasant safe and sure. Use the tried and proven remedy. Any dealer anywhere can supply Catarrhozone, large complete outfit $1.00; small size 50c.; trial size 25c.

Mr. Woodsworth at High School

Excellent Discourse on Series of Subjects—The High Cost of Living, Etc.

A goodly number were present last night, to her Mr. Woodsworth lecture in the High School. His subject was "The Improvement of the Poorer Classes in Canada."

Mr. Reid opened the address, and introduced the speaker of the evening. Mr. Woodsworth spoke at some length on the duty of Canada in regard to foreigners.

"We have entered," Mr. Woodsworth said, "upon a new time, a time that will revolutionize everything. We have had positions of leadship thrust upon us, and we don't know how to act.

Some people say that Canada has always been a mixed nation, and always will be; but no. There are ladies enough in this city, and every city, to change its foreign population into English speaking citizens. The conditions in Italian and Austrian settlements are terrible, crowded and filthy. There are 8,000 unemployed in Winnipeg. We haven't seen the need of a labor bureau, nor school to teach farming to immigrants, from the big cities. Its criminal to let men from the slums of London, go out on the prairies with no knowledge of country life. There is no use in saying there are no slums. There are the starting placces of slums in every Canadian town I have visited. How will you help that?

"Another thing is the recreational needs of a community. A few years ago there were in Winnipeg 72 hotels, 6 theatres, 19 churches, 2 parks, 3 schools and four charitable institutions. Where would a stranger go. Schools are open for children only. It will be a big change of the better when we get inside the schools. We are beginning now to use them as social centres. School girls and boys should have some practical knowlege, cooking and housekeeping for girls and fruit growing and trades for boys. There are only a few men who will take apprentices now, when they can get trained men cheaply from among the immigants. "Our boys are "bellhopping" and selling papers.

Our school life should now be extended. Only about 25% pass the Entrance examinations. How about the others that pay the taxes? Should they have nothing for their money? Use them for entertainments and so on.

"In some of the big cities they have moving picture machines installed in the schools. Some people say, 'Oh the expense.' But it is far more expensive to pay high salaries to several teachers to teach what can be taught much more easily and pleasantly by machinery. I was once an official in the People's Forum, an 'International Debating Society.' German, Frenchman, Russian and Turk sat side by side, talking over the big questions of the day. That is what makes good citizens.

"A number of years ago, Montreal, in one year had 5,355 deaths of babies, of less than one year. Two-thirds of these were preventable. Fort William saved 42 lives, at an average of $5 each. To bury these it would have cost $50 each. Which is the better? At a health meeting, some time ago, we decideed to have a cleaning up week. I mentioned putting up a poster with a diagram of the city, and the number of deaths in each ward marked on it. The movement passed all right, but before it was seconded, a man got up and said "Oh, no. You would knock real estate." In a few years, a man like that will be hounded out of the community. A man that won't pay out one or two extra dollars to save babies' lives is not a good citizen.

"I once read a burial service on Sunday, over the body of a baby. There was an epidemic passing over the city at that time, and the grave-digger was getting ahead of his work. He had six extra graves dug. The babies were not dead yet, but would be soon. It is not fair to say that God caused all those 147 infants to die in that month, it was bad milk and evil surrounding. Yet when I showed some "health" films, on a Sunday, the city was horrified, but if it is religious to bury babies on a Sunday, and irreligious to save babies' lives, on a Sunday, then I would rather be irreligious.

A big question of today is "Hereditary or Environment." Take two men for examples. Both are soldiers and respectable young men. One of them marries a weak-minded girl and has a son, who is quite bright. He marries into a decent family, but by drink they lower themselves, and of their 13 children, all, but one are mentally or physically defective. They all marry, and in two more generations there are nearly seven-eighths of the numerous descendents of the soldier, who are weak minded or deformed. The other soldier's case is just the opposite. He marries a handsome, clever girl, and their three children are intelligent and handsome. They are enabled to make good marriages, and their children and grand-children grow up to be respected farmers. These defectives are an awful burden to the country and we are having them shipped over to us by thousands of ships every year. There are no proper means of stopping it, and we don't want them, for we have enough of our own.

Another thing is the cost of living. The average mechanic's wage in Canada is between $500 and $800, and an average family needs $1,000 to live decently. Either wages must go up, or the cost of living come down. The poor people economize by saving on rent, and crowd into one room on a flat. They do away with milk, meat and eggs and become anaemic, unhealthy creatures. Then, who do these wretched tenements belong to? To society ladies, ladies who take the rent money they get from their starving tenants and drop it in a slot for starving Belgians, or for some good charitable missionary society.

We should all work together. In small towns there is nearly aways a number of churches and society. A new minister comes along and is very enthusiastic over a literary society. "Yes, we'll have it right in the basement of our church." The night arrives and he has part of his own congregation present. You should have something of common interest on neutral ground. Each church works by itself, and they are all pulling different ways. But a better time is coming. We are getting the idea of working for the good of the community and not for individual societies.

Parties should unite for a common welfare. We are divided on nearly every point from politics to religion. If we are going to overcome old divisions, the school is the place to do it; it is neutral ground and moreover, will give the children an interest in school they didn't have before. Instead of standing off, waving flags, the ladies should do something. Put in more playgrounds and fewer policemen. It is cheaper and better. It all leads to a truer religion, a religion that expresses itself in the care of widows and orphans."

Mr. MacLaurin moved a vote of thanks, that was seconded by Mr. Mallory. Mr. Reid spoke a few words, mentioning that we have slums in Belleville also. A silver collection was taken up, then Mr. Reid, the chairman, dismissed the meeting.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

BELLEVILLE

The Commanding Officer has been pleased to make the following provisional promotion: To be acting Company Sergt. Major, No. A12150 Pte. G. A. Wilfred, from 30-12-14.

The following regimental series numbers have been assigned to the Battalion in the Canadian Overseas Expeditionary Forces: A12001 to 14000 inclusive. All numbers heretofore assigned are amended by the addition of A12000 to each; thus, No. 1 becomes A12001, No. 10 becomes A12010, and so on. All numbers subsequently assigned will follow in their proper serial order and the full official number will be used in all records and returns in all cases.

Officers commanding companies will at once make the necessary alterations in regard to these numbers already issued to their men, sending a certificate to the Orderly Room when this order has been complied with.

A provisional school (infantry) has been authorized in connection with the Battalion with the object of enabling officers and N. C. O's to qualify for promotion up to the rank of Field Officer. The school will commence on the 1st of April and will last six weeks. Officers and N. C. O's desirous of taking this course will submit their names (through the officers commanding their companies) to the Adjutant at once. Those officers and N. C. O's who are not yet posted to companies will submit their applications direct to the Adjutant.

Orderly Officer tomorrow: Lieut. W. P. Eastwood. Next for duty: Captain H. Sauva.

With reference to Battalion order No. 6, paragraph 4, of the 4th inst., rations will in future be issued at 7.40 a.m. instead of 8 a.m.

A Board of Enquiry composed as under will assemble at the Hospital at 1.30 p.m., 16th inst., for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the injuries received by No. 191 Pte. G. Brill, "D" Coy.:—President, Captain J. L. McLean; Members, Lt. P. R. White, Lt. L. W. Hopkins. All witnesses will be warned to attend.

KINGSTON

A sample khaki shawl has been received by Lt.-Col Hughes for the use of the Piper's band.

Private Renfrew, who deserted and was arrested, was brought back to the city on Saturday and placed in the cells by Lt.-Col. Hughes to await court-martial on the serious offence of deserting during active service.

Twenty-nine men of the 26th Battery C.E.F., are quartered in Regiopolis College, in command of Capt. K. Carruthers. Others are expected today, and within the week the entire battery will be mobilized here. Major Hall, who will command the new battery, will be in the city today to take command.

Instructions have been received to enlist men for the Royal Flying Corps in Canada. All applicants for enlistment must be British born, medically fit, good vision, and in possession of an aviator's certificate from either the Aero Club of America, or a similar institution obtained since the first of January, 1913.

Boxing Contest at the Armouries

Three Sparring Events at the Armouries Attract Many Spectators

That considerable interest was manifested in the boxing contest which took place at the armouries last night was evidenced by the large attendance. Previous to the event of the evening—a ten-round bout between Jack McCracken and "Kid" Murphy, both of Toronto, two bouts took place between local boxers.

The first bout was between Lawrence Goyer and Frank Roblin, two juveniles, who demonstrated that they were clever boxers, considering their age.

The second bout was between T. Cameron and G. Robinson, both local parties. Four rounds were fought and they were certainly an excellent exhibition of the fistic art.

The chief bout was between Jack McCracken and Joe Murphy of Toronto, who for ten rounds fought for supremacy, but the result was a draw, as they went the 10 rounds without either obtaining a decision. The rounds were well contested and were as follows:

1. Murphy led, McCracken countered; both finished up shooting left to body; McCracken playing on defensive.

2. McCracken using a nice left, did much damage; both boys fighting good, nothing to choose, and the end of the round both boys fighting strong.

3. McCracken led but was met with a stiff uppercut from Murphy. McCracken played a foxy fight and on the defensive all this round, looking for a chance tor Murphy's body.

4. Both boys came to this round looking fine. McCracken landed a short arm left to body; both boys fighting strong; McCracken's round.

5. They started in to put each other out; Murphy sending a nasty left to Mac's jaw, forcing him to clinch; McCracken sending a straight right to body, forcing Murphy to slow up.

6. Both boys sparred for wind; Murphy led with a nasty left; McCracken sent in a terrific body punch; both boys finished strong. McCracken's round.

7. McCracken looking fine. Murphy to force fight led with a left jab. McCracken knocked him through the ropes with a left hook. Round finished up with fast in-fighting.

9. McCracken looks in best condition, sending a right hook to Murphy's chin, rocking him. Murphy, knowing where he stands, tries body punches, but finds McCracken too foxy for him, sending a terrific body punch and making Murphy slow up.

10. Both boys fighting strong. Murphy sending a nasty left; McCracken countered, sending a stiff right to the body; both boys tried hard in this round to land a knockout, but one was as foxy as the other and watched carefully. McCracken forced the fighting in this round.

The bout was declared a draw by the referee, Mr. Frank Coye who was a most capable official.

THE BRITISH PREFERENCE

How do the war taxes affect the British Preference?

Liberals claim that they have seriously affected British importations, while Conservatives show that the rate of preference remains practically the same but in the increase in duties Britain gains a still further advantage over foreign competitors for our trade.

Suppose the general tariff is 30 per cent., and the British preference preference 20 per cent. Then the British manufacturer has an advantage over foreign competitors in our market of ten per cent.

But the Government increases the general tariff by 7½ per cent., and the British preference by only 5 per cent. That is to say, the impost on foreign goods becomes 37½ per cent., and on British goods, 25 per cent.

Then the British manufacturer's advantage in our market is 12½ per cent.

Therefore the British advantage in the Canadian market is better by 2½ per cent. than it was before.

Suppose for instance a merchant in Canada purchased $1,000 worth of goods outside of this country. Suppose the general tariff on these goods was 30 per cent. and the preferential tariff would be 20 per cent. Before the war taxes were imposed these goods bought in the United States, France, Germany, or any other foreign country would pay customs duties amounting to $300 but if purchased in Britain would pay $200, or a difference of $100 in favor of the British goods.

Now the foreign goods would pay 37½ per cent. or $375, and the British goods $250, or a preference of $125 in favor of the British production.

Under the old tariff the preference given to British goods over foreign make was $100; under the new tariff $125.

Thus in so far as foreign competition is concerned the new tariff is more favorable to British goods than the preference given under the former customs tax.

How do the war taxes affect British competition with that of our own production? Britain is a free trade country and its manufacturers obtain all their raw material without customs tax. The new tariff increases the taxes on British goods 5 per cent. but at the same time increases the tax on the Canadian manufacturers' raw material 7½ per cent. British goods that formerly paid $20 customs duties on $100 worth of goods will now pay $25. The Canadian manufacturer does not receive this additional protection but less 7½ per cent. increased customs duties on the raw material consumed in making the goods.

Thus the British manufacturer pays higher duties coming into Canada but his raw material remains unchanged. The Canadian manufacturer receives 5 per cent. additional protection against British goods but he pays an additional 7½ per [illegible] on the raw material. So that so far as the competition between domestic and British goods is concerned there is little change in the protection given the domestic goods or the preference given British goods.

The new war budget gives an additional advantage in our markets to Britain over foreign importers and varies but slightly the relative positions of domestic and British goods as affected by tariff impositions.

THE WAR BUDGET

In his war budget Hon. W. T. White has put into effect a new principle in the distribution of taxes—one that place on the wealth of the country a greater proportionate share and relieves the masses of a part of the burden. To the artisan and farmer is granted immunity from a considerable part of the new war taxes.

The new war taxes are of two classes—special and customs. It is expected that about 30 per cent. will come from special taxes and the remainder from the new customs impositions. The special taxes are imposed chiefly on banks, corporations and individuals whose wealth affords them means of special privileges. Little or nothing of the special tax revenue will be contributed by the artisan, laborer or farmer. The customs tax is general in its application.

In the distribution of the war tax we find that 30 per cent. is directed solely against the wealth of the country. The wealthy men of Canada with thus pay all of the 30 per cent. and in addition their proportionate share of the remaining 70 per cent., while the artisan, laborer and farmer will contribute only their share of the 70 per cent. Under the new taxes, therefore, the burden is placed where it best can be borne and the masses are freed in a great measure from contributing to the extraordinary revenue required for the prosecution of the war.

CURRENT COMMENT

London Chronicle: "If the German Government as long ago as last September held that all grain for Ireland was contraband, by what possible reasoning can they claim that all grain for Germany should not be made contraband also?"

Lord Kitchener, in a speech referring to the Canadian division, said: "They have shown their metal and received the warm commendation of Field Marshal Sir John French for the high spirit and bravery with which they have performed their part."

When the author of "Peter Pan" addressed an audience of 1,000 girls at Smith College during his American tour, a friend asked him how he had found the experience.

"Well," replied he, "to tell you the truth, I'd much rather talk 1,000 times to one girl than talk one time to 1,000 girls." Peter Pan is not alone in that view of the case.

It is generally assumed that the policy of the King of Greece has been affected by the fact that his wife is a sister to the Kaiser. But both she and her husband are cousins of King George, while the Greek monarch is also a cousin of the Czar. Generally speaking, it may be taken for granted that royal relationships count for little or nothing in determining a country's course.

Toronto Globe: "The men who rushed goods into Canada in anticipation of customs increases will now levy the increases on their customers. The increases should be made retroactive, so that the money will be turned over to the public treasury." This is the kind of clap trap that is dealt out to the readers of the Globe. Anyone knows that such a provision would be impractical to carry out.

In certain legal proceedings at Chicago it was declared that of one day's sales of wheat on the Board of Trade of over 15,000,000 bushels only 265,000 bushels involved an actual transfer of the grain. The big business was speculative, men buying what they did not expect to get from men who did not have it to deliver. High prices based on this sort of thing may be maintained or they may not. Wind lifts things sometimes, and sometimes when it dies down they fall as far as they rose. This is speculation, pure and simple, which often ends in ruin, the speculator not having the goods to deliver when demanded.

Refuses to Pay Italy's Price

Franz Joseph Insists that Von Bulow's Negotions Be Broken Off

ROME, March 14.—A Trieste correspondent reports that Emperor Francis Joseph yesterday received in audience Baron von Burian, the minister of foreign affairs, who subsequently presided over a cabinet council and conferred with the German ambassador. Baron von Burian communicated to the Emperor Prince von Bulow's proposal for averting Italy's intervention by the immediate cession of the Trentino and rectification of the Italo-Austrian frontier. Despite the urgent solicitation of the Kaiser, the Emperor absolutely refused to sanction any cession of territory to Italy and insisted on Prince von Bulow's negotiations with the Italian Government being broken off.

Since this decision is irrevocable, and has been approved by the ministers, including Baron von Burian himself, who formerly was in favor of Prince von Bulow's proposal, a special Foreign Office messenger has been sent to Rome as the bearer of the Emperor's refusal. The latter will shorty be announced in the press, and the motives will then be explained.

Meanwhile Germany is said to have been called upon to send Bavarian troops to Tyrol, where the concentration has already been started, and the fortifications of the Trentino are expected to be fully manned within a week.

All the State and municipal employees of Trieste, including the police, are compelled to take oath that in case the Government is changed and a foreign power occupies the city by force of arms, they will refuse to continue their service and will leave the city.

Says Russian Fleet Shows New Power

English Writer Declares the Renaissance Predicted Seems Now at Hand

During the past three months little has been heard about the activities of the Russian Navy, with the exception now and then of some action in the Black Sea against the notoriously weak naval organization of the Turks. In The Army and Navy Gazette of London this lack of news from Russia's sea arm is commented upon.

"Now that the Baltic has become close with ice", says The Gazette, "we are not likely to hear much more of the movements of the Russian fleet in those waters. It may be that this circumstance has some connection with the reported withdrawal of the greater part of the German fleet from Kiel. On the other hand, Libau is an ice-free port, and it should always be possible for submarines to operate from that base.

"Moreover, reports about the movements of the German fleet in the Baltic have never been authenticated and have sometimes been put about to purposely mislead. In the second week of November a very similar story to that which has now come from Copenhagen was current in Rime. We were told of a transfer of ships from Kiel to Wilhelmshaven and of increased activity in the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal.

"On the whole, Russia may be well satisfied with the work which has been done by her Baltic fleet since the war began. It has won no great battles, but it has at least obliged the enemy to maintan a strong force in the Baltic. It has also to its score several ships of the enemy, though it is true there is some uncertainty about the means by which they were destroyed.

"There was, of course, the loss of the Madgeburg and the casualty list published at the time in Berlin seemed to point to other vessels destroyed about the same date. There was also the mystery of the seven destroyers and torpedo boats which arrived at Kiel in a damaged condition, the reason for which has never been explained. The Bayan was also credited with having sunk a small German cruiser and two torpedo boats while engaged in mine-laying and the Hertha was said to have been the cruiser destroyed. This, however, can hardly have been the case, for an admiralty communique issued at Petrograd on December 26 referred to the sinking of the Hertha and a German mine-layer. The only other German loss in the Baltic which has received confirmation is that of the Friedrich Karl, which was destroyed by a mine.

"As against these German losses the only ship of the Russian Baltic Fleet which has been destroyed is the cruiser Pallada, which was torpedoed by a submarine at about the same time as the British cruiser Hawke.

"The threat of Russian movements has certainly interfered with German activity in the Baltic and we know officially that the efforts of Admiral von Essen's fleet have been incessant. With the return of spring it should be largely reinforced and should be able to make its presence even more effectual.

"The activity of the Russian fleet in the Black Sea was limited at first by its having no hostile object and it was not until Turkey came into the war that its opportunity arrived. It was evidence of its preparedness that as soon as hostilities were announced it put to sea and in spite of the superior speed of the Goeben and the three light cruisers, which Turkey possessed, it was able to do good work.

"It is highly probable that had not the two German cruisers so unfortunately escaped into the Dardanelles at the beginning of the war, Turkey might never have come into the struggle, and it looks as if it is going to become still more unfortunate for Turkey that they made appearance in her waters.

"The Russians are showing great activity, especially in the destruction of transports and stores. In many ways the Black Sea fleet is assisting and it may not be long before it appears in the Sea of Marmora. Meanwhile its effect upon the campaign in the Caucasus must be considerable, as no Turkish reinforcements can reach the scene of action oversea.

"As it is in the Black Sea, so it is in the Baltic, time is on the side of the Russians, for they have not only several dreadnoughts but a number of excellent destroyers which should soon be ready for action. In such operations as the Russian fleets have been engaged in they must certainly be said to have reached an enhanced efficiency. The renaissance of the Russian navy that many predicted before the war appears now at hand."

Not One French Sailor Yet Hit

Turkish Gunners Have Failed as Yet to Hurt any Frenchmen

PARIS, March 15.—Telegraphing from Athens, the correspondent of the Havas Agency says the French hospital ship Canada has arrived to take on provisions and that she will leave immediately for the Dardanelles.

It is reported that there are 60 convalescents on board the Canada, but none from gunshot wounds. In this connection the statement is made here that since the beginning of the fighting in the Dardanelles not a single French sailor has been struck. It is a fact, nevertheless, that the aim of the Turkish gunners is improving.

From several sources news is reaching Athens, the correspondent continues, that the agitation by the Mussulmans against the Young Turks and the Germans is increasing.

The Allied fleet appears about ready to haul Turkey on the rug.

SURGEONS LEFT FORCEPS IN SPOT VACATED BY PATIENT'S APPENDIX; HE MADE PROTEST

MONTREAL, March 15.—When Scott Moffatt, whose home is in Campbellton, N.B., left a Montreal hospital one day just about three years ago, he carried away with him, in the place formerly occupied by his appendix, a pair of forceps. He left the hospital again last week, this time with the forceps in his pocket.

It was during 1912 that Moffatt was operated upon—successfully, according to the surgeons. The patient was feeling better when he left the institution that he had in months; the wound was healed and the appendix forgotten.

A few months ago, Moffatt again began to suffer pains in the part of his anatomy formerly occupied by the organ which had caused him trouble. It finally became necessary for him to re-enter the hospital, and again occupy the operating table.

Again the surgeons operated. The appendix had certainly been removed; there, imbedded in the flesh that had gathered around them, were the forceps, four inches in length. The New Brunswick man left the hospital one day last week, taking the instrument with him, as a souvenir.

Admitting that the case is an extraordinary one, the doctors say, however, that it is easily explained. It is suggested that the forceps were probably used to stop the flow of blood from a bleeding artery. Then, the appendix was removed, and the wound was sewed up, the forceps being forgotten.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

FASTINGS—FEASTINGS PROPER AND IMPROPER

"When Ye Fast Be Not Hypocritical."

Right and Wrong Views of Fasting—The Bible's Teaching—The Spirit of Fasting—Spiritual Feasting at the Same Time—Hygienic Value of Fasting—Spiritual Advantages.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Nashville, Tenn., March 14.—Pastor Russell gave two addresses here today. We report the one on Matthew 6:16, "When ye fast, be not of a sad countenance." He said in part:

The Lenten season—the forty days' fast preceding the anniversary of Jesus' death—has long been a fixed rule with some Christian people. Although not of Divine command and like every other good thing, it is misunderstood and perverted by the majority, because they are not spiritually minded. To many of these it is a command, the neglect of which would bring upon them the disapprobation of friends, and the observance of which would bring them some favor from God or some relaxation from proper punishment for their sins—they know not exactly what, but hope that it will mean ultimate gain somehow.

Of such perfunctory fasting, displeasing to God and valueless to the individual—hypocritical fasting—we give an illustration. An acquaintance who professed to observe Lent was instructed that he should drink but one cup of coffee during the Fast. He made some kind of compromise with his conscience by which he got his coffee in a bowl. He got the same amount of coffee as when he took two cups, but thought the Lord would not notice the cheat, and would reward him for such hypocritical fasting.

Nothing is more contemptible in the Lord's sight than a hypocrite. Honesty is the one quality which all who would be pleasing to God must possess, no matter how weak or fallen they may be by heredity. In His preaching Jesus condemned hypocrisy more than any other sin on the calendar—perhaps as much as all other sins together. The first lesson with Christians, with everybody, should be honesty—not only in monetary affairs, but in everything, including words and thoughts.

Although nothing in the Bible suggests a Lenten season, the Apostles commend fasting. St. Paul wrote, "Approving ourselves in fastings," and again, "in fastings often." (2 Corinthians 6:4, 5; 11:27.) Evidently fasting is in the nature of self-sacrifice—not a thing commanded, but a voluntary offering of the soul to God, with a view to greater efficiency in God's service or to greater control over our imperfect mortal bodies in the interests of our spiritual new nature.

Indeed, much may be said in favor of fasting during the Lenten season. On hygienic grounds alone it would be of advantage, particularly to all well-to-do and well-fed; if during the spring-time they would fast, or restrain themselves from eating as liberally of meats, sweets, pastry, etc., as they were inclined to eat during colder weather—eating less than their appetites crave. Boils, pimples, liver derangements, fevers and doctor bills would be greatly lessened if this course were pursued. This is the practical side of the question, which may have had to do with the original institution of the Lenten custom.

The Christian, however, may advantageously take a much deeper, spiritual meaning out of Lent. He may remember the Saviour's experiences for the forty days preceding His crucifixion. He may remember that it was just before His crucifixion that Jesus instituted the Lord's Supper, and indicated that date as being the proper one for its annual commemoration amongst His followers, as was the custom in the early Church. He may remember sympathetically the Redeemer's trials at this season of the year, and also remember that all the followers of Jesus convenant, agree, to share His Cup of suffering, of ignominy, of misunderstanding, of abuse, of death. He may remember that, as this was the special time of trial for Jesus, so it seems also to have been from the very first a time of special trial, testing, sifting, amongst His followers.

All these various considerations might well move the true people of God to the observance of a fast during a period preceding the anniversary of their Redeemer's death. In observing such a fast—such a restraint of appetite—from a desire to draw especially near to God, they would certainly be contributing a share toward that end, in harmony with the Scriptural declaration, "Draw nigh unto Me, and I will draw nigh unto you."

We have no suggestions to offer respecting the kind of food or the quantity that should be eaten. We believe that there are people in such a physically weak condition that it would be absolutely wrong for them to abstain from such nourishments as they may be able to assimilate. Heart and head should combine in determining this matter of fasting.

Daniel the Prophet gives us a hint when he tells us that for three whole weeks he ate no pleasant bread, while he especially sought the Lord in prayer respecting matters which perplexed him. In his official position he was surrounded with the best the kingdom provided. But he confined himself strictly to the things which his system absolutely needed for the maintenance of mental and physical strength; he ate nothing simply for its good flavor, he ate nothing superabundantly, to clog his system, to make him sluggish in mind and body, and to incapacitate him for his routine work and, additionally, for his special prayers for wisdom. We can all take a good lesson from this Scriptural example.

Jesus did not teach His disciples to follow the custom of fasting. The matter was remarked, some saying, "John the Baptist and his disciples fast," and the Pharisees, etc., fast, "but Jesus' disciples fast not." In answer to the question, Why not? Jesus replied that it was not the appropriate time. Instead of a fast, they were having a feast. The Bridegroom was with them. They knew no sorrow, no care. All their wants were provided for; they were drinking at the Fountain of Divine Truth and grace; they were eating freely of the wonderful words of eternal life, and accordingly they did not fast, as others.

This does not mean, however, that they lived sumptuously; for we remember that on two occasions, after Jesus had fed a multitude on plain bread and fish, miraculously increased, He directed His disciples to gather up the fragments; and these they carried with them as their own food supply for many days. This was a practical fasting, though not an outward one. Jesus declared that the days would come when the Bridegroom would be gone; and He said, "In those days they shall fast." (Matthew 9:15.) Their days of fasting and prayer began as soon as the Lord was crucified, and have continued ever since, whether outwardly observed in a Lenten fashion, or whether known only to themselves in their own hearts. All the followers of Jesus have practiced fasting, self-denial; else surely they would not have prospered in spirituality.

It is a mistake to suppose that fasting applies merely to food; it really applies to everything. In its broadest sense, it signifies self-denial of the desires of the flesh, to the intent that the spiritual nature may be the more thoroughly strengthened. The Apostle clearly shows this in his suggestion that husbands and wives occasionally live apart, that they may give themselves the more thoroughly to prayer and the consideration of spiritual things. (1 Corinthians 7:5.) The true Christian will really live a life of self-denial every day. He will remember the Apostle's words, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the desires of the flesh ye shall live." Such mortification of the flesh, such self-denials of the various appetites or inclinations of the flesh in the interest of the new nature, are all fastings.

The ideal condition for Christians, of course, would be to maintain a perpetual fast—to live always in so abstemious a manner as would keep them spiritually in the best condition and make them the most efficient in the Lord's service. Where this highest ideal seems impossible or unattainable, then the next thing in order would be as close an approach to this as seems possible—not of Divine command, for there is none, but of his own free will—sacrificing himself, his fleshly appetites and propensities, in the interest of his own spiritual development ane that of his service of the Lord.

"Appear not unto men to fast." Our Lord's instructions were that His followers should not make a show of their fasting—should not boast of their self-sacrifice and self-denials. Those matters should be between God and themselves. Instead of making their countenance sad-looking and appearing to men to crave sympathy, they should contrariwise take special care that none might notice outwardly—washing their faces, anointing their heads and generally looking cheerful, happy. Indeed, the true Christian, who fasts in the proper manner and with the proper sentiment, will not need to feign happiness; for his portion will be the joy of the Lord, and "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding will rule in his heart."

The Scriptural proposition seems to be that the Lord's people will fast, or practice self-restraint, along the lines of physical conditions, food, etc., in order that they may feast along the lines of spiritual conditions and refreshments. The whole tenor of Scripture is to the effect that the followers of Christ are spiritually advantaged by allowing the mind of the Spirit, the holy mind, the Holy Spirit of God, to rule in their mortal bodies—to the restraining of their natural inclinations, tastes, preferences, appetites, which the Scriptures declare are all vitiated more or less by heredity—by our share in the alienation from God and the curse, in which we share naturally.

St. Paul voices this sentiment in the words, "The flesh desires against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." Thus, as the Bible tells us, the Christian is continually at warfare, not with carnal weapons, and not with his neighbors or family, but with himself—his new nature warring a good warfare against his old nature. In this conflict he is to come off an overcomer; and his victory will not be complete until he is actually dead according to the flesh, until, as a New Creature, he shall have experienced the blessings of the resurrection to the perfection of the spiritual nature.

The unregenerate might not unreasonably gain the impression that if this presentation be true, a Christian's life would be a very unhappy one—continually battling with himself, continually watching, practicing self-denial and striving against the natural tendencies of sin. But such a conclusion would be very erroneous; for really the Christian alone has the true secret of a happy life. Even the worldly recognize the fact that they need to practice self-restraint, and that whosoever would sow to the flesh and live after the desires of his fallen nature would be sure to go from bad to worse, and end his career ignobly.

Hence we find noble men and noble women amongst the unregenerate, not begotten again of the Holy Spirit, but nevertheless manifesting strong characters and great moderation in the affairs of life. They practice self-restraints, not toward God, but for self-interest, learning by experience and observation the necessity for this if life would be made a blessing to themselves or to others. Such characters should be, and are, highly respected, honorable. But the unfavorably-born, unfavorably environed are not so likely to reach noble standards as are the better-born, better-environed.

Hence those who become Christians of the true type have an advantage every way over others. They do all as unto the Lord. Although they also perceive the advantages coming to themselves along natural lines through self-restraints, they see and appreciate still more the life everlasting beyond and the Divine favor leading thereto. This Message, coming to all who have ears to hear it through the Bible, has a power and gives encouragement to the weak as well as to the strong, to the naturally mean as well as to the nobler. It assures them of Divine mercy and interest in their welfare—that God's love has provided a satisfaction for His justice on behalf of all, so that the merit of Christ, imputed to each according to need, makes it possible to respond to the Gospel Call—onward and upward as New Creatures.

So great is the joy, the peace, the happiness, which comes with the realization that we have been accepted into God's family and are joint-heirs with His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, that nothing else can compare with it. No wonder St. Paul describes such, saying that to them "old things have passed away, and all things have become new"! (2 Corinthians 5:17.) Instead of earthly hopes for earthly wealth, name and fame, they have Heavenly hopes for Heavenly riches, glory and honor. Instead of aspirations of but a temporary kind for political preferment and honor of men, these have before their minds God's promises—exceeding great and precious. These assure them that faithfulness in present trials and difficulties, and the proving of their loyalty to God and the principles of His righteousness, will through Christ bring them eventually to glory, honor and immortality—to participation with Jesus in His Millennial Kingdom.

With such hopes, such prospects, such promises, life is worth living; all things are indeed new. Those attaining this vantage-ground can, with the Apostle, count all earthly things comparatively valueless. To these, fastings, self-denials, self-restraints, even privations and persecutions, have no terror. They rejoice in these, assured by the Bible that they are signs of their relationship to God, and that He is dealing with them as with sons whom He is educating, fitting, polishing, and testing, preparatory to receiving them to the Heavenly glory.

This class have a charmed life, regardless of what the world may think. Theirs is the peace of God which passeth all understanding; for they have the Divine assurance that since they have come into God's family through the appointed Doorway, the Lord Jesus Christ, "All things are theirs, richly to enjoy"; and again that "all things shall work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His Purpose." These realize that God, having begun a good work in them, is both able and willing to perfect it until the Day of Christ. (Philippians 1:6.) These are seeking to make their calling and election sure; and so great is their appreciation and their increasing knowledge that the trials and difficulties by the way—the fastings, self-denials and oppositions of the Adversary—are but light afflictions, not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in them.

Even the prayers of this class gradually change. No longer do they think of praying merely for food, raiment and earthly things. Rather, they accept whatever may be God's providence for them with thanksgiving. Their prayers are mostly offerings of praise, mentions of Divine mercies already received, expressions of confidence in God, and requests for more of His Spirit, whatever this may mean in the way of greater trials or difficulties or persecutions; for they desire that the will of God may be completed in them.

In conclusion, we recommend true fasting, true disciplining, true coercion of the will of the flesh, on the part of all men, as necessary for their mental, moral and intellectual maintenance and development. And especially do we commend abstinences, self-denials, restraints, to those who have consecrated their lives to God, to walk in the footsteps of Jesus. But we reprehend all hypocrisy and sham, whether associated with Lent or fasting or any other matter, as being an abomination in the sight of God and discreditable to noble men and women, and particularly inappropriate to those who would follow the Lamb of God—the Saviour.

We brag about freeing the black slaves, but nobody seems to be doing anything for the woman who becomes the mother of seven or eight children.

There are various ways of concealing one's identity, but marrying a prima donna seems to be the most successful.

Berlin's War Breakfast.

Berlin ate its first "war breakfast" recently. For the first time Berliners were compelled to go without their freshly-baked coffee Brodchen (rolls). The new "war bread" laws prohibit the baking of fresh bread rolls or cakes, so that householders have to content themselves not only with "stale" goods, but also with Brodchen baked of a composition of wheat, rye, and potato flour, which is darker in color and less tasty in flavor.

Inasmuch as sitting cross-legged is about the only pleasure the men have left, it is confidently expected that the legislature will pass a law against it at its next session.

KIDNEY TROUBLE AFFECTED HIS SPINE

Suffered For Forty Years Until He Used "Fruit-a-tives"

BRONTE, ONT., OCT. 31st. 1913.

"For about forty years, I was troubled with Lame Back brought on by Kidney and Bladder Trouble. I was never confined to my bed with the trouble, but it affected my spine and I had to rest for a time. I took advertised remedies which never did me any good. Then I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised and decided to try them. They did me more good than any other remedy.

My son suffered from the same trouble and frequently had to leave off working, but "Fruit-a-tives" remedied it for him. I would strongly advise anyone suffering from Kidney and Bladder Trouble to use "Fruit-a-tives".

"WAR"

A SERIAL STORY BY BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

To-day we met the enemy for the first time, having marched through conquered territory until now, with the Danes retreating fast. Everywhere are the ruins and remnants of battle. The landscape is torn with shell and piled with graves. So the victors march on to new victories. To-day we took the enemy's position and leaving a burning village behind us. While friend and foe were absorbed in the tumult, I could only think of you, and that perhaps you were lost. The enemy withstood us but two hours, and we did not pursue. We collected our wounded and cared for them as well as we could. The dead, some among them still possibly alive, we buried, but the wounded and injured we must leave behind to bleed slowly to death and starve. And we, hurrah, we must push on into the jolly, dashing war.

Our next will probably be a pitched battle, for two great army corps are about to clash. Then the loss will run into thousands, and the artillery will mow them down. What a strange way of doing things! It would be better if the two enemies each had a weapon, which with one blow would wipe out either side. Perhaps such blasts would tend to put a stop to war. If both forces were equally deadly, then force could no longer be employed to settle disputes, for both disputants would be wiped out.

Why do I write thus to you, when I ought to be glorifying our engagements and triumphs? Because, like you, I long for the unvarnished truth, and hate the usual lying phrases when death is near. With thousands voicing the opposite, I must speak out before I fall a sacrifice to war—that I hate it. If every man who feels it would say so, Heaven would hear our cry, and even the thundering cannon roar would be drowned out by the new battle-cry of panting, exhausted humanity: Let us make war on war!

The above was written yesterday. I snatched a few hours of sleep on a sack of straw. In half an hour the field mail is taken. With little rest we are already up for the march—poor fellows. It is, indeed little rest after the bloody work to prepare them for still bloodier sights. I have just returned from looking over the wounded, whom we must leave. How gladly I would have put a bullet into some of them, who must drag out a miserable agonized death. My horse is saddled. Farewell, my Martha, if you are still alive.

One or two letters I found of a later date:—

The day is ours. I am unhurt. The first is good news for papa and the last for you. I cannot forget that for thousands the same day has brought untellable grief.

Another letter:—

Imagine my astonishment. Riding near me at the head of a detachment was Aunt Cornelia's only son, Gottfried. The youngster is beside himself with enthusiasm, but how his poor mother must suffer! That evening I sent for him to come to my tent. "Is it not splendid," he cried, "to be fighting in the same cause? How lucky I am to be called out in my first year of service! I shall win the cross of honor." "And my aunt, how does she like it?" "Oh, just as all women—she tried to damp my spirits with tears, but I am enchanted, delighted! Awful, I grant, but magnificent. It is gratifying to feel that I am filling man's highest duty, with God's help, for king and country. To meet death so closely, to challenge him face to face, and yet not be touched, it fills me with the glory of the old epics, as if the muse of history were leading us on to victory. I feel such an indignation at the enemy who dares defy us Germans, and it is a thrilling sensation to gratify this hate, to destroy without being a murderer, this fearless exposure of one's life."

So the boy rattled on, and I let him. Was not my first campaign the same experience? Epic? Yes, that is the very word with which we so carefully train our school boys into soldiers. We throw it into their excitable young brains, which makes quiet domestic bliss seem stupid nonsense, when they are longing for heroics. With me this attitude has so completely vanished, that I could hardly realize Gottfried's state of mind. I had so early realized it all as so inhuman, that it was no longer a revelation from the kingdom of Lucifer but gross barbarity and bestiality. Only he who is drunk with the passion for blood and destruction can triumphantly split open the defenceless head of an enemy. I never knew the "joy of battle," believe me, my dear wife, I never did.

Gottfried is delighted that we are fighting together as brothers in the same just cause (as if every cause were not called right by the powers commanding). "We Germans are brothers!'" "Yes, that was proved by the 'Thirty Years' and the Seven Years' Wars," I suggested ironically. Gottfried paid no attention. "Together we will conquer every enemy." "Yes, until the Prussians declare war against the Austrians." "Not to be thought of! Impossible! What, when we have fought and bled together?" "I warn you, nothing is impossible in political matters. The friendships of dynastical rulers are as changeable as the ephemeral fly."

I write this, not because I imagine you in all your ill condition will be able to read it, but because I have a premonition that I shall not outlive this campaign, and I want to leave my convictions behind me. The sincere reflections of honest, humane soldiers should not be falsified or sink into the silent grave with them, unspoken and unrevealed. I have here spoken it, this quiets my conscience, I can die in peace.

This latest letter was five days old five unspeakable days of dread. Though Frederick was yet unhurt, my anxieties left me no comfort. My father was obliged to return to Grumitz, and Aunt Marie remained to keep me consoled with her orthodox ideas of destiny, providence, and divine mercy—small comfort with so few letters coming from the seat of war. My father made inquiries, but could get no information, although Frederick was not in the list of the dead. Thus the days dragged on.

One afternoon I lay half dreaming on the sofa, where I had begged to be left alone. My weakness and anxiety had so overpowered my imagination and reasonableness that I was full of fleeting visionary sensations, and springing up in terror at some slight movement in the room. I suddenly thought I saw Frederick in the doorway.

"Oh, my Frederick, my lost one.' I groaned.

What? could it be his real voice? then real arms were thrown around me eagerly.

The dream came true. I was enfolded in my husband's loving embrace.

CHAPTER III.

After our first expressions of joy had subsided, Frederick told us how he had been left wounded in a peasant's hut, the regiment marching on and reporting him "missing." This report had not reached us, and when he was sufficiently recovered he hastened home without waiting to write, for the war was practically at an end. We spent the summer again at father's country seat, where the entire family assembled, including brother Otto, home from the Military Academy, and Cousin Conrad, whose regiment lay not far away.

I was determined to persuade my husband to quit the service, for we had grown so one in our feelings and interests that what was mine was surely his also, and why, if new wars were again to threaten, need we go through such horrors again?

Besides, Rudolf was now eleven years old, and it should be our delight, in our retirement, to educate and train this little man according to our highest ideals. He had never been given over to nurses and tutors, for it was my pride to watch every phase of his development. In his growing appetite for knowledge we had never permitted ourselves to tell him a falsehood, but his questions were not always answered fully enough to suit him. He accompanied us on our daily walks, and often his questions demanded the unknowable, so we answered, "We do not know."

This did not satisfy him, and he used to put these questions to others of whom he received quite decided answers. One day he remarked triumphantly, "You do not know how old the moon is, but I do. It is six thousand years old—remember that." Frederick and I looked at each other silently, and a whole volume of protest lay in that glance and that silence.

I seriously objected to the soldier games which his grandfather and uncle played with him. Thus the ideas of cutting down the enemy were infused in him without my knowledge. One day Frederick and I came upon him when he was mercilessly beating two puppies with a riding whip.

"You cheating little Italian," he said, lashing the one puppy. And striking the other he called loudly. "You saucy Dane." Frederick snatched the whip from his hand: "And you heartless little Austrian," he said, laying on two or three blows. Rudolf began to blubber, and the Italian and Dane ran joyfully away.

"I hope you are not angry that I struck your boy, Martha; I hate the lash, but I cannot endure seeing an animal abused."

"Quite right."

"Only people can be hurt, then?" whimpered the boy.

"That is still worse."

"But you went out to beat the Italians and Danes."

"They were our enemies."

"Then one may hate those?"

Turning away, Frederick said: "And to-morrow the priest will tell him that we must love our enemies. Such logic!" Then to Rudolf: "No, it is not because we hate them that we strike, but because they strike us."

"Why do they want to strike us?"

"Because we—no, go and play, Rudi," he interrupted himself, "there is no way out of the tangle. You must never do it again, and we will forgive you."

We often had distinguished visitors from Vienna. They discussed the political situations, and thus I was enabled to follow the entire Danish engagement to the end. After all these victories it must be decided what would be done with all these Duchies. Would the famous Augustenburg receive his portion? Not at all, for an entirely new pretender claimed it. It was not enough that there was a "Glucksburg" and a "Gotrop" and whatever other lines of succession to lay claim, but Russia presented a new candidate. Against Augustenburg Russia pitted an "Oldenburg." But finally there were no burgs at all to have the Duchies, but they were to be divided among the allies, and the expenses of the war was to be borne by the defeated. This was hard to understand. The land had been devastated, its harvests trampled under, its sons were mouldering in their graves, and now it must pay the costs. Was not rather some reparation due to them?

One day I opened the conversation "What news in regard to Schleswig-Holstein?'

"The latest news is, that von Beust has addressed a demand to the Assembly, asking by what right the Allies can accept the surrender of these provinces from a king whose sovereignty has not been recognized by them."

"And it is a very reasonable question," I remarked.

"You do not understand these matters, child," said my father. "It is not reasonable, but an impertinent trick on von Beust's part. Do not the Duchies belong to us because we have conquered them? We should not have concluded peace, but conquered the whole of Denmark and turned it over to the German Alliance."

"Why do that, papa, you are such a patriotic Austrian, what do you care for the German Federation?"

"Have you forgotten that our Hapsburgs were German Emperors once, and may become so again?"

"What if some of the great Germans cherished a like dream?" suggested Frederick.

As Bresser said, "Let us hope that the settling of this affair will not be a source of discord between the powers. For every war has within it the seed of future wars, as one act of violence has led to another since the beginning."

Some days later a bit of news was reported: King William of Prussia visited our Emperor at Schönbrun. They met with embraces, the Prussian eagle was hoisted, and the Prussian national airs were played, with triumphal hurrahs from the people. I was very happy, for it put to shame the evil prophecies that the two powers might get into a quarrel again. My father rejoiced, for he saw in this alliance a means of reconquering lost Lombardy.

"Will you tell me," I cried out to the assembled guests one day, "why do not all the European States form an alliance? Would not that be the simplest way?"

The gentlemen shrugged their shoulders, smiled superior smiles and did not answer. I probably had said one of those silly things with which ladies are apt to venture into the realms of higher politics.

The autumn was at hand; peace had been signed, and Frederick's retirement from the army could now be carried out. But man proposes and circumstances dispose for him. As a sequel of the war many banking houses failed, and with the rest I lost my private fortune. Shot and shell blast not only the ramparts and forts but also the entire social fabric of family and finance.

My kindest of fathers, however, came to the rescue and saw that I could want for nothing, yet the retirement of my husband from the military had become impossible, for we could not entirely depend on my father. Frederick was too proud for that, and so our beautiful castle in the air was shattered. But one comfort remained: there was nowhere a black spot on the horizon, and peace might last for many years.

CHAPTER IV.

Spring found me in the neighborhood of Vienna. Here I could see Frederick daily. My sisters and aunt were off for Marienbad, and from there Lilli wrote me:—

I confess I am beginning to be interested in Cousin Conrad.

And another letter from Aunt Marie:—

My Dear Child—It has been a tiresome winter in society, and I shall be glad when Lilli and Rosa are married off. They had opportunities enough. It is a tiresome, thankless task to chaperone two pleasure-seeking girls.

I am rejoiced to hear that you are well once more. (I had suffered from a serious fever.) Your husband had been very much alarmed. But, thank God, your time had not yet come. The service which I had said at the Ursalines no doubt aided in bringing about your recovery. Kiss little Rudolf for me. Tell him he must learn all he can. I am sending him a few books: The Pious Child, and his Guardian Angel—a beautiful story—and The Heroes of our Country, a collection of war stories for boys. We cannot begin too early to teach them such glorious ideals. Your brother Otto was barely five when he first learned of Alexander and Cæsar. It delights me to see how heroic and enthusiastic he is. I am sorry your plan is to stay in Vienna this summer to be nearer Frederick. But you should think of your dear father as well, who would love to have you at Grumitz. Take my word for it, you married people should not be so constantly together, but allow each other some little liberty. That Heaven may protect you all is my constant prayer.

AUNT MARIE

P.S.—Your husband has relatives in Prussia. (Happily he is not so arrogant as his countrymen.) Please ask him what they are saying there about the present political situation. It is rather critical.

This letter was the first insinuation to me that some complication was in view. Having been ill, I had neglected to keep myself informed on the current news, and I asked my husband: "You dear Prussian, less arrogant than the rest, what does Aunt Marie mean? Is there really a political situation just now?"

"Yes, there always is, as there always is weather, some political situation—which is as changeable and treacherous as the weather. They are still arguing about these complicated Duchies who talk of freeing themselves of these arrogant Prussians—'rather Danish than Prussian!' they cry."

BIG DEMAND FOR HIDES

Tremendous Number Required by Automobile Makers Each Year

As an indication of the tremendous size of the automobile industry, it is interesting to note that in one year approximately 1,000,000 hides are used for upholstery purposes.

The ordinary roadster body requires little more than two complete hides, and the touring body about three hides. The average per car, therefore, is 2½ hides. The average area per hide is about 50 square feet, so that 50,000,000 square feet of leather is used

From the time the hide is stripped from the animal, it requires from ten weeks to six months completely to prepare it for use, the time varying with the quality of the leather.

Each hide is split into four grades, which are known as hand buffs, machine buffs, deep buffs and splits.

The hand buffs are the best, and are the part nearest the hair. This is the quality that is most used in the best motor car factories.

Buttermilk Gems

Add a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a teaspoonful of water to a pint of thick, sour buttermilk, stir in quickly sufficient flour to make a batter that will drop from the spoon. Grease gem pans or muffin rings, fill them partly full with this mixture, and bake quickly in a hot oven. If the batter is thin enough to pour it may be baked on the griddle.

Laundering Muslin Collars

There is only one valid objection to muslin collars. They are fragile. Like maline, moisture reduces them to shapelessness. Wrinkles are as obvious on them as they are on linen shirtwaists.

Fortunately, laundering restores them to their original state of dainty loveliness, if the laundering is of the right sort.

These collars depend for their shape on their stiffness. Sometimes they are stiff enough if they are ironed wet. But usually they need a little starch.

Here is a recipe for the right sort of starch to use for these collars of linen and organdy that are the earmark of the new fashions:

Add a piece of paraffin the size of an egg and a piece of white or castile soap the size of a hazelnut to a quart of boiling water. Mix the starch with cold water in a bowl, using whatever proportion of starch to a quart of water that the particular brand of starch calls for to make a thin starch. Add the cold mixture to the boiling mixture and let it boil up two or three times. Then add a little bluing in liquid form.

DIFFERENCES SETTLED

Conservatives in British Columbia Get Together

OTTAWA March 15—Division which it has been stated has existed in the ranks of the Conservative party in British Columbia has now it is understood, been removed.

According to what has been learned here the date of the general election for the province will be announced in a few days. The elections will find the Conservative party with an united front which will dispose of Liberal expectations of accession to power or even of a substantially increased majority. If, on the other hand the breach had not been healed, the Opposition was anticipating enough seats to make the Government's tenure of office precarious.

Sir Richard McBride will, it is understood, shortly issue a manifesto setting forth his position and that of the party before appealing to the people.

A million men are engaged in a great battle in Poland. How much more satisfactory if the same numbers were engaged in a constructive instead of a destructive work.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

Condensed News Items for Busy Readers.

THE MARKET

A few of our country friends were to-day in attendance upon the market. Prices for all produce offered for sale were good, and equal to those of Saturday last.

A MARCH OUT

The members of the 39th Battalion, who have enlisted for the 3rd contingent of the oversea contingent, this morning had a march out, covering a considerable distance. The men showed proficiency in drill and their marching was all that could have been desired.

LAID AT REST

The remains of the late Mr. William Morrison, who died here on Saturday, were yesterday taken to Roslin for interment. The burial services of the Anglican church were held in St. Paul's church at Roslin, after which the remains were consigned to the tomb in the cemetery at Roslin. A number from the city attended the obsequies. The bearers were J. Colden, Wm. Colden, James Welsh, L. Soules, Chas. Emmerson and J. Settles.

WORD FROM THE FRONT

Mr. Charles Asselstine of the Crystal Hotel, this morning received a brief communication from Charles Gibson, who went from here as a member of the Fifteenth Regiment in the first contingent. He states that he was well and a letter would follow. The communication is dated from France on Februray 25th, but owing to the censor having erased certain dates and places, it was rather difficult to ascertain the facts. The fact that he was well and apparently in good health will be learned with pleasure by his numerous friends in this city.

NERVOUS ORIGIN OF DISEASE

Lining up the vertebrae, establishing free movement between them, thus getting a better blood supply into the nerve centers in the spinal cord, and freeing the spinal nerves from pressure.

There are twenty-six bones which make up the spine. They are called vertebrae, nerves and blood vessels pass in and out, between each of these vertebrae. It can easily be understood that any displacement, however slight, puts pressure on these vessels and nerves, thus causing disturbance to the part of the body these nerves supply. For instance, the eleventh dorsal vertebrae, if rigid, tender, or put slightly out of position, is certain to cause kidney trouble. Any structural displacement of the group from the fifth to the ninth dorsal vertebrae, is sure to cause stomach trouble. Very many diseases can be traced to some spinal injury, caused by falls, blows, twists, heavy lifting, etc.

Osteopathy cures by removing the cause. A careful spinal examination is made, the trouble is located and corrected. Spinal examination free.

Dr. J. P. Kimmel, Osteopathic Physician, 28 Victoria Avenue, Phone 209.

The Belleville Club of Winnipeg

Last Saturday night (March 6th) former Bellevillians in Winnipeg turned out "en masse" to the above event and were not disappointed, for it was the most sociable and enjoyable and therefore the most successful affair yet held by the Club. The North West Commercial Travellers' Hall was secured for the occasion and it was packed the doors. During the first hour and a half a splendid concert was given, as follows:

PROGRAMME.

Introductory Remarks—President H. E. Turner.
At the Piano—Mr. J. S. Yuille.
Vocal—Miss Hancock.
Vocal—Miss Waterer.
Reading—Miss Hall.
Vocal—Mrs. D. B. Snider.
Piano Duet—Torence Turner and Ar. Noakes.
Vocal—Miss Blanche Turner.
Trio—Messrs. W. Lennox, F. W. Wooton and Will Cruse.
Vocal—Mrs. J. E. Thomson.
At the Piano—Mr. J. S. Yuille.
God Save the King.

On the platform were President H. E. Turner, Honorary President R. H. Shanks, and Vice-President Geo. H. Allen.

While refreshments were being served in the dining room by Caterer Morrison and his able staff, the hall was cleared for dancing, and about 80 couples stayed to trip the light fantastic, but as it was Saturday night, all merriment had to cease at 11.55 in order to be out of the hall before midnight, one and all saying it was the best evening yet spent in our Club. Some of the more settled ones did not dance, but took full enjoyment out of the cards, many games of which were in progress in the adjoining card rooms.

The great success of the entertainment was due to the energetic and untiring efforts of the Arrangements Committee, as follows,—Bert Wallace, chairman; Will Lennox, Deb. Snider, Jasper Doolittle, Frank Wooton and Ed. Coulson.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Turner, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Shanks, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Wallace, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dobbs, Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Doolittle, Mr. and Mrs. Deb. Snider, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Coulson, Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Young, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Cruse, Mr. and Mrs. Cole, Mr. and Mrs. Clapp, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Price, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Night Clerk Is Slain In Hotel

Believed to Have Been Victim of New York Gangsters' Vengeance

NEW YORK, March 15.—Gangsters murdered Charles Miller, night clerk of the Hotel Atlan, at 159 West 24th Street, between Broadway and Seventh avenue, firing five shots into his body while he was alone at the hotel office at six o'clock this morning. The gunmen escaped, but not before the elevator operator ran his car to the floor when alarmed by the shots and saw them running from the street door. Miller died an hour later in the New York hospital while Detectives Ditsch, Devanney and Hynes, of the Second Branch Bureau, were trying to get some clue from him, as to who his murderers were.

Miller, almost strangled by the flow of blood from his desperate wounds, motioned to one of the officers to lift him up from the pillow of his cot and managed to gasp just before he died:

"There were two men—never saw before."

The cash register behind the office counter had been opened and at first robbery was thought to have been the motive for the killing. Later the manager of the hotel, Charles Gillespie, said he had taken out the night's receipts half an hour before the shooting, when one of the supposed gunmen had entered the place. The man saw him counting the cash and he must have known that only change was left. The police then concluded that Miller had been the victim of personal vengeance. It was about 5.30 when a man interrupted Gillespie with this query: "Is there a cop here?"

Gillespie supposed the intruder's question referred to whether the place was under the ban of the police, and he thought nothing more of the visitor until after the shooting. He was able to give a good description of the man. From this and the fleeting glimpse of the gunman by George Watson, the elevator operator, the detectives believed they recognized one of the gunmen as a member of a Chinatown gang.

Apparently Miller was mortally wounded when two shots were fired in the abdomen as the men entered the hall. He seemingly attempted to run across the corridor into an alcove near the door and two more bullets pierced his back and a fifth struck his arm. Two bullets passed through his body and were found imbedded in the wall.

An empty five-chamber revolver of 38 calibre was found beside the hotel counter. Miller was 43 years old and was married.

An acquaintance of Miller said that he had incurred the enmity of several gangsters some months ago, when one of them attempted to hold up the clerk late at night and was severely beaten by Miller.

The murdered man was a giant in strength and at one time was a well known amateur wrestler.

ST. ANDREW BY THE SEA

Nature has done much for St. Andrews. No prettier place can be visited by the tourist or the summer vacationist. It is the most popular of Canadian Seaside Resorts and it is now chosen by large numbers of summer visitors from New York and Boston who desire to get away from the overcrowded resorts of the United States.

There are excellent sea bathing facilities at half a dozen places in the neighborhood.

The Canadian Pacific has rebuilt the large Algonquin Hotel, while the "Inn" affords accommodation for those who desire the quietness of cottage life.

First Division of House Expected Tomorrow Night at Close of Budget Debate

OTTAWA, March 15.—The big guns of the House will be again heard this week on the Budget debate which is now drawing to an end. Sir George Foster will have the floor this afternoon and the House is looking for a great effort from the veteran orator and statesman. He will be replied to by either Mr. George P. Graham or Mr. E. M. MacDonald. Hon. Arthur Meighen and Mr. R. B. Bennett may also both speak.

The debate will close tomorrow with Sir Robert Borden winding up the Government and Sir Wilfrid Laurier for the Opposition. The division of the House—the first since the outbreak of war—is expected about midnight, Tuesday.

With the Budget debate prolonged to this date and both sides in fighting mood, there is no chance of the House proroguing at Easter, and the session will last at least until May.

Belgian Army Consolidates Gains

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 16.—This afternoon's official report says the Belgian army has consolidated its gains of the past few days. The British army, after having retaken Steloi, has also recaptured trenches to the southeast of the same point, which have been completely demolished by artillery.

In the Champagne district fresh progress has been made to the northwest of Souain. In the forest of Lepretre we have recaptured from the Germans the remainder of the trenches won by them yesterday morning, or to be precise, the site of these trenches for defensive works has been completely shattered by mine explosions. On the southern slope of the great Reich Ackerkopf an attack by the enemy yesterday morning carried a trench. We have retaken it and made some prisoners.

The allies appear to be greatly "struck" on Constantinople.

Verily, the blockade of the British coast is a "paper" one.

A Letter That is Self Explanatory

The following offer, although received over a month ago, was needless to say immediately accepted. We withheld the announcement until after the formel openings and now we place them on sale at the price suggested by the manufacturers in the following letter. It is indeed a great chance for our customers to secure a $6 pair of Silk Corsets at the extremely low price of $3.50. Read!—

Quebec, Feb. 4, 1915.

Messrs. Ritchie Co., Limited,
Belleville, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—

In time of war everybody has to make sacrifices, Retailers, Wholesalers, Manufacturers, etc., and more so the Manufacturer who is doing an export business.

We ourselves make a lot of high grade Corsets especially in silk for export trade. Unfortunately, this year our exportations have considerably decreased on account of the war, and we have on hand at present about 200 dozen SILK CORSETS for export, where usually we would not have any at all; so we have decided to clear them out at a sacrifice.

We have divided the above mentioned 200 dozen in 5 and 10 dozen lots between 25 of our best clients throughout the country. We believe you could handle one of these 10 dozen lots yourself with advantage, and by selling them at about, say, $3.50 a pair you can help your Corset Department and at the same time give your customers a great bargain.

Kindly let us know by return mail if this proposition is acceptable to you.

Yours truly,

Child Mangled Under Car Wheels

Father Picked up His Little Daughter Before He Knew Her

TORONTO, March 15.—Five-year-old Nora MacInnes, whose parents reside at 90 Alexander street, was killed almost instantly today when she was ground under the wheels of a southbound Church street car, opposite the Church Street Public School and within a short distance from her home. Her father, attracted to the scene by the scene by the crowd of people that had gathered, pushed his way through and helped to extricate the mangled remains of the poor little child from underneath the blood-spattered wheels. It was not until he got a look at the her face that Mr. MacInnes recognized his own girl. The grief-stricken father, with the child in his arms, rushed into a nearby drug store and sent for a doctor. When the latter arrived upon the scene he found life extinct in the child. The body was taken to the morgue, where an inquest will be held. Acting detective Koster has been assigned to case to ascertain whether there was any negligence on the part of the street car crew. As far as can be ascertained the child was playing on the sidewalk and ran out on to the road just as the car bore down. The motorman dropped the fender, which picked up the girl, but dropped her and she rolled underneath the wheels.

Are One In Common Cause

MANCHESTER, March 15.—John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalist party, in a speech to 5,000 persons yesterday, pointed out that he had often addressed meetings of Irishmen in Manchester, but never before an assemblage of Irishmen and Englishmen "firmly united in a common purpose."

"Ireland has been admitted to her proper place in the British Empire, with which she has as much to do in building as England," Mr. Redmond continued. "She has already taken her proper place, with perfect and absolute good faith and loyalty."

Official figures covering the period up to February 15th, he said, showed that 99,700 Irishmen from Ireland had joined the colors, 115,000 from other parts of the United Kingdom, and enough to bring the total up to a quarter of a million. Furthermore, the recruiting of Irishmen was proceeding steadily.

250,000 Irishmen Now With Colors

Mr. Redmond Proud of Record His Countrymen Have Set

LONDON March 15.—John Redmond making his first speech here since the outbreak of the war, said that last year was the first since the great famine when the population of Ireland had actually increased. He had been told by responsible men in Canada and other Dominions that an enormous proportion of the contingents were composed of Irishmen. The Irish race had now with the colors at least a quarter of a million of her sons. Sir John French came of good Irish stock; Admiral Beatty came from the County of Wexford; Admiral Carden from Tipperary.

Five Hundred War Prisoners at Work in Ontario

TORONTO, March 15.—Major F. F. Clarke, 12th York Rangers in command of prisoners of war at Kapuskasing, half-way between Cochrane and Hearst, on the Transcontinental, in Northern Ontario, was in Toronto yesterday. He stated there are now 500 prisoners in the camp, about 140 of whom are Turks and the rest Austrians. They are engaged clearing land, cutting sawlogs and making pulp wood, and are credited with 25 cents for each day's work.

The prisoners are guarded by 150 soldiers drawn from different Toronto regiments. Up to date, five men have slipped away from the camp. Every one of them returned within a day or two and begged to be taken back.

Blame Monoplane For Beachey's Death

Kept His Word and Fell Into the Bay When Trouble Came

SAN FRANCISCO March 15.—Structural defects in his new monoplane, not inability to control the craft, are believed by local aviators to have been responsible for the death of Lincoln Beachey, who, while flying over the Panama-Pacific exposition grounds yesterday, fell into San Francisco Bay and was drowned. The wings of the aeroplane had crumped under the pressure of "banking" after an almost perpendicular glide of 2,000 feet.

Yesterday was the first time that Beachey had made a public flight in the new monoplane, his previous flights here having been in a biplane over which he had perfect control. The aviator was extremely grave as he took his seat in the machine and according to his mechanicians he seemed to have a premonition of trouble, but was determined to please the crowd of 50,000 people.

Beachey's aged mother, Mrs. Amy Beachey, who lives in this city, collapsed when told of her son's death, and is under the care of physicians. Beachey made the statement several days ago that if he should find himself falling, he would head his machine out to sea so as not to fall on the exposition crowd. He kept his word, his fall being about fifty yards from shore. The body was found by a sailor on the battleship Oregon, who made two descents in a diving suit. Miss Ethel Shoemaker, Beachey's finance, was not told of his death until today. She believed him to have been only injured.

Quebec Man Sold Plans to German Spy

Gave Further Information When Requested After Breaking Out of War—English Police Enquire

QUEBEC, March 16.—In connection with the arrest and subsequent condemnation of Lawrence Victor Cobb, a former member of the 48th Highlanders, of Toronto, first Canadian overseas contingent, who was sentenced to six months at hard labor at Southampton for forgery. Chief Constable Jones of Southampton has written to Chief Trudel, of this city, stating that Cobb is a German-American, an alleged pro-German, and also a confirmed criminal.

Chief Constable Jones intimates that at the expiration of his present sentence the prisoner will be tried on another charge. The chief constable of Southampton also forwarded to Chief Trudel a copy of a letter found in Cobb's possession when he was arrested. The letter is a reply sent to Cobb from Laureat Leclere, of St. Joseph Street, who, five years ago, sold to Cobb the plans and devices of a dirigible which he had invented. The communication replies to questions which were supposedly asked by Cobb. Leclere stated that he was enclosing to Cobb sketches explaining the speed regulation of his machine in motion. Continuing, Leclere expressed his gratification that his air craft had been called "Zeppelin" now and for all time. Here in Quebec, he wrote, the people did not believe he had invented a dirigible and yet he had sold the plans for it five years ago. He went on to tell Cobb that he had been obliged to abandon his inventions for some time, owing to illness, and that he felt in duty bound by his contract to give the information required. Leclere also asked Cobb for some news of one Von Kluck, and in closing his letter he declared that he never thought that his machine would be employed to drop murderous bombs on his country. He also asked Cobb to keep his letter secret.

ACTED IN GOOD FAITH.

Summoned by Chief of Police Trudell, Leclere admitted here today that he had corresponded with Cobb, who wanted further information about the dirigible which he (Leclere) had sold to Cobb five years ago for the ridiculous sum of fifty dollars. Leclere said that he was then a poor man, with no means to exploit his invention, and when he was approached by a man named Cobb, whom he supposed to be an American, he readily sold his plans and devices, as everyone in Quebec laughed at him. He felt bound by his contract to give all the particulars necessary, and that was what prompted him to write to Cobb, whom he l[illegible] seen at Valcartier. He gave Chief Trudel some of the plans, and said that he would bring him the rest tomorrow.

Chief Trudel said tonight that he considered that Leclere had acted in good faith, and he would report accordingly to the police authorities at Southampton. Leclere, who is a mechanic by trade, secures employment chiefly in automobile garages.

Huns Afraid of Cold Steel

Fled From Charging Canadians Screaming; Some Begged for Life

LONDON, March 16.—Describing how the Canadians captured the trench recently mentioned by Sir John French, Corporal John R. Bolt, Princess Patricias, says the heroic huns were afraid of the cold steel and fled, screaming like little children. Others fell to their knees and pleaded for mercy, "which", adds the writer, "in true British fashion was granted them." "Just before dawn on that memorable day", he says, "we were ordered to force one German trench in front of us.

"As we climbed over the papapet the enemy by means of their magnesium flares spotted us and immediately opened a withering machine-gun fire. We lost men. On we kept, plodding through the quagmire of mud and when we jumped over the enemy's parapet into their trenches we had to tramp over dead bodies.

"The scene was awful. In the captured trench we discovered plenty of food and clothing, and also some patent hand warmers, which serves to show that they are fairly comfortable."

ELECTION ANTICIPATED BEFORE SUMMER'S END

Premier Borden and Bennett of Calgary Virtually Sounded Tocsin in Spirited Speeches—Quick Dissolution of Parliament Likely if Obstruction Tried

OTTAWA, March 17.—(Special.)—There will be a federal election before the hay is cut in Ontario. Parliament today was full of the electricity of coming conflict. Sir Robert Borden spoke in fighting mood and R. B. Bennett of Calgary simply set all the heather ablaze in the Conservative trenches when his eloquent invective was poured out against the Liberals last evening. The opposition made answer as best they could, and it looks as if they had decided that they can't head off an election, and, therefore that they might as well get the business of the house over at the earliest possible moment and trust to events to postpone the election. If they hold up business it might bring on a dissolution and a quick election. So that all the signs point to an early election and a still earlier closing of the house.

Crisis is Reached

The testing of the opposition will come today with the meeting of the public accounts committee, to which has been referred all the war contract scandals. If the Liberal members expect to go home for good at Easter and start canvassing their constituencies, as now appears to be generally understood, the scandal charges will fizzle out or blow up almost immediately.

CHILD WAS SCALDED IN WATER BOILER

Climbed on Chair and Fell in—Condition Serious

TORONTO March 16.—Five-year-old Louis Garbatch, 54 Leonard avenue, fell into a boiler of hot water yesterday and was so terribly scalded that little or no hope is held out for his recovery. He is at the Western Hospital. The water had been prepared for household uses and was in a boiler on the floor of the kitchen. The child was playing nearby and climbed up on a chair to look at the water. He lost his balance and fell in. His head was the only portion of his body that escaped being scalded.

Aeroplane Visits Worry Kingston

Three Last Week and Another Yesterday; "Sinister End in View"

QINGSTON, Ont., March 16.—During the past four days four aeroplanes have been seen operating in this vicinity. Last Friday three were seen flying over Rideau Lake and yesterday afternoon another was discovered in the same place, flying toward Kingston. As there are no aeroplanes of the Militia Department in this vicinity those which have been seen flying about here are thought to have some sinister end in view either the destruction of property or the surveilance of the troops now in training here for overseas service.

CALLED OUT BRIGADE TO RESCUE HER CAT

Firemen Made Run and got Pussy Down Safely

TORONTO, March 16.—In response to a still alarm the firemen from Keele and Dundas street halls yesterday took a run to the corner of Perth avenue and Bloor street. Instead of finding a fire however they came upon a woman anxiously watching a diminutive and much frightened pussy some thirty feet up a telephone pole. "It ran up there and cannot come down," was the woman's plaintive excuse for calling out the reels. The firemen good-naturedly planted a ladder against the pole and after much scratching and mewing pussy was finally brought down, to the great delight of its mistress.

GERMANS PUT FENCE AROUND THEIR ARMY

Ten Foot Barrier of Barbed Wire Runs Through All Alsace

BERNE, March 16.—A barbed wire fence ten feet high, along which sentries are posted at frequent intervals, now encompasses the entire zone of German military operations in Alsace Notices have been posted, stating that anyone approaching within sixty feet of the fence, or attempting to smuggle letters, will be shot at sight. All foreigners who have been permitted to remain in the district are compelled to report daily to the commander.

MAIN AUSTRIAN POSITION TAKEN IN THE CARPATHIANS

PETROGRAD, March 17.—(Special)—Despite the obstacles of deep snow, blizzards and intense cold, the Russian troops in continuing their offensive in the Smolnik region of the Carpathians, carried the last Austrian position, right in the centre of their chief offensive area, and forced them to retreat in the direction of Baligrod. The Russians took 2400 prisoners, including 36 officers and 17 machine guns. This important success will compel the enemy to readjust his lines several miles back and gives the Russians initial advantages in organizing their columns for an invasion of Hungary when the time is ripe. The Austrians also lost a number of trenches towards the Usok Pass.

The opening stages of a big battle to the east of the Stanislau-Kolomca Railway are being fought with opening success by the Russians, whose infantry, marching through snow, breast-high, captured the Austrian fortifications near Tarnowice and Polno, with over 2000 prisoners and 20 officers.

Close Round Przemysl

The Russians are closing round Przemysl, where, having captured the chief eastern defences, they carried the northern heights within rifle shot of the forts protecting the town.

Headway is being made by the Russian troops against the Germans on both banks of the Orzyc River, on the Przasnysz front. A stubborn battle was fought with the Germans, who lost possession of the Villages of Sterna and Yednorozec, and suffered a repulse of a vigorous counter-attack. The Russians captured in this fighting a heavy gun, three light field pieces, seven machine guns and 700 prisoners.

Parties of the enemy attempting to advance from Kopelowo were destroyed. An offensive of the Germans in the Pilica district was defeated. The Russians report partial success north of the Przanysz-Groudousk line.

A fresh Russian advance in northwestern Bukowina is reported. It is stated that bad weather makes progress slow. The Russians carried certain Austrian trenches at the point of the bayonet, the Austrians retreating with heavy losses.

ALL FORTS AT THE NARROWS APPEAR TO BE DESTROYED

LONDON, March 17.—(Special)—The Chronicle's naval correspondent says: "If it is true that the Amethyst has passed the Narrows of the Dardanelles and reached Nagara Point, her performance is very significant. It would seem to indicate that the mine fields have been swept clear as far as that point. Moreover the cruiser would hardly venture through the straits if the forts were intact.

"We are therefore justified in concluding that the operations against the forts of the Narrows have been successful, and the cruise of the Amethyst may have given the admiral valuable information as to the actual extent of the damage which had been effected. The conviction grows that, however necessary it may be to employ troops in this theatre of war, the fleet alone is capable of forcing the Dardanelles."

Britain Has Guns Superior To Germany

Government's Ordnance Experts Talks of Naval and Military Arrangements

NEW YORK, March 16.—Sir Trevor Dawson, managing director of Vickers, Limited, of London, and one of the British Government experts on ordnance, arrived from Liverpool today on the White Star liner Adriatic on a mission to Washington and Canada. He was met at the pier by Lord Castlemaine and Col. F. Orr-Lewis, of the Royal Horse Artillery, who arrived in New York some days ago.

In an interview with a press reporter, Sir Trevor said that the production of small arms and equipment for the new army was proceeding rapidly in a satisfactory manner. He did not believe that there was likely to be any trouble with the workmen in Sheffield, Barrow or Birmingham. It was a good thing, however, he said, that the Government had now the power to take over any factory that could be used for ordnance purposes.

When asked about the new gun used by the British artillery at Neuve-Chapelle, Sir Trevor replied that it was a 9 4-10-inch gun, which fired a shell weighing 355 pounds at a range of 12,000 yards, and was most effective.

"Personally", he said, "I believe that the British naval and military guns are superior to anything the Germans have, as their big 42-centimetre howitzer is unwieldly and cannot be transported or handled like our new gun or the French gun."

The 15-inch guns on the Queen Elizabeth, now bombarding the forts of the Dardanelles, are the finest naval guns in the world. She has eight of them, besides the 13.5-inch guns. The former have a range of fully 20,000 yards with a shell weighing over 1,500 pounds, and the latter carry 1,200-pound shells over 12,500 yards. They will all give a good account of themselves.

When asked if he was going to see Charles W. Schwab while he was here, Sir Trevor said that he hoped to, but could not discuss plans. He is vice-president of the Canada Steamship Lines, and will inspect the Fnes during his stay in Canada, he said.

Used Flatirons to Crush Skulls

Terre Haute Maniac Kills Two Children and Mother, Two Others Dying

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., March 16.—A maniac used two flatirons some time last night to crush the skulls of Mrs. William Balding and her five children, two of whom were found dead at ten o'clock this mornig and the other unconscious. Mrs. Balding died this afternoon. The surgeons said all would die before morning.

Apparently the murderer struck the blows while all slept, for there was no indication that any one of them had turned over after going to sleep last night. Thomas, aged 10, and Celeste, aged 8, the two found dead, had been sleeping on the floor in one of the three rooms of the house. Clifford, aged 12, was on a davenport in another room. The mother was in bed in the third room with Walter, one year old, still clasped in her arms, and Irene, three years old, lying across the foot of the bed. One of the flatirons was found in one room and the other in another room. Both were covered with dry blood.

The father is a lineman, working in a long-distance construction gang. He was at Centralia, Illinois, yesterday and last night, as reported by his foreman. His last letter told his wife how she could move to a place a few miles from the city.

Mr. and Mrs. Zeb. Harper, the latter a sister of Mrs. Balding, called at the house last evening. The people heard that a certain man some time ago tried to make an assault on Mrs. Balding.

OPERA COMPANY GOES BANKRUPT

CHICAGO, March 16.—The National Opera Company of Canada, which failed to complete its engagement in Denver in February, 1914, file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy here today. Liabilities of $150,945.84 were scheduled and, according to the petition, there are no assets.

ITALY'S COURSE TO BE CHANGED IN TWO WEEKS

ROME, March 17.—Special—I am not allowed to be more explicit, but I am authorized to state that within a fortnight Italy's attitude will be charged. An imposing popular demonstration urging intervention was held yesterday in Milan. Huge crowds gathered in the cathedral square, singing patriotic songs and shouting, "Down with Austria." The troops and police were powerless to disperse the crowd. A few socialists who shouted long live neutrality were nearly lynched. Republican Deputy Cheesa, who addressed the citizens, said that the time had come to deliver Italians from Austrian rule and to widen their country's boundary. The police repeatedly charged the crowds, but they were unable to prevent the procession from marching to the offices of the newspaper Popolo Italia, where the editor delivered a speech. He said that the Italians wanted war against Austria and Germany and no negotiations would prevent it as the people were determined to impose their own will. The speeches were greeted with cheering, which continued until midnight.

Vienna Looks for War.

A Trieste correspondent reports that the prevailing conviction at Vienna is that war with Italy is inevitable in the near future, as Von Buelow's negotiations are doomed to failure. Strangely enough, while Germany's interference is resented, the Austrians do not hide their indignation that Germany should have dared to offer a cession of territory which the veteran emperor is bound to defend. The prospects of war with Italy are not causing the slightest aprehension, but it is almost invoked as being likely to hasten peace. The Austrians refuse to give up the desired territory, but they would be reconciled to its loss provided the war ended, as they realize the impossibility of further resistance, which only entails sufferings and sacrifices without the hope of victory

Troops are guarding day and night the railroad tunnels on the Giovi mountains, near Genoa, where the police recently arrested several Germans disguised as workingmen who were suspected of attempting to blow up the tunnels in case of mobilization.

BRITISH LOSE TWO MORE BOATS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 17.—An official announcement was made today that the British steamers Atlanta and Fingal have been torpedoed. Both are small ships. The Atlanta, 519 tons, of Glasgow, was torpedoed by a German submarine off Inishtark on the west coast of the county of Galway, Ireland, about noon on March 14th. The crew was landed on Inishturk Island and the vessel is now in the harbor. The steamer Fingal, 661 tons net, of Lieth, was torpedoed and sunk at 10 a.m. March 15th off the Northumberland coast. Twenty-one members of her crew were landed at North Shields, but six lives are reported lost, including the Chief Mate and stewards.

North Shields, March 17.—The survivors of the Fingal were landed here today. The casualties on board were due to the fact that the vessel went down before the starboard boat could be freed. The port boat picked up the captain and several others, but six men lost their lives. The Fingal was proceeding in a northerly direction with fine weather when struck by a German torpedo. She at once began to settle and went down quickly.

VICTORY CLAIMED BY BERLIN REPORT

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 17.—The following is a German War Office official report: The contest for the possession of an eminence on the southern slope of Lorette Heights, to the northwest of Arras, has been decided in favor of the Germans. In the Champagne district to the west of Perthes and to the north of Lemesnil, the French yesterday delivered several unsuccessful attacks. North of Lemesnil the attacks were renewed with stronger forces and the engagement still continues. In the Argonne the fighting has not yet come to an end. The French forces have been driven back from a slope to the southwest of Vauquois, occupied by them. Two French attacks in Lepetre forest northwest of Ponta-a-Mousson, resulted in failure. In the Vosges there have been nothing more than artillery duels. Russian advances against Tauroggen in the province of Kovno, Russia, northeast of Tilsit, and Laugszargen in East Prussia, just across the border from Tauroggen, have been repulsed.

STEAMSHIP ATTACKED BY GERMAN AEROPLANE

(Canadian Press Special)

SOUTH SHIELDS, March 17.—The British steamship Blonde, arriving here today, reports that she was attacked in the North Sea by a German aeroplane which dropped bombs on the deck of the vessel. One member of the crew was killed.

FALL OF PRZEMYSL IN A FEW DAYS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 17.—A Reuter correspondent in Petrograd wires that the capture of Przemysl is considered only a matter of a few days.

Belgian Army Repulse Enemy

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 17.—This afternoon's official statement says: On the Yser the Belgian army has made fresh progress and has repelled German counter attacks.

On the British front there has been fairly violent artillery firing.

To the north of Arras the enemy unsuccessfully attempted late in the afternoon to deliver another counter attack on trenches on a spur of the hill of Notre Dame de Lorette. Soissons and Rheims were again bombarded, two shells striking Rheims cathedral.

In the Champagne district north of Lemesnil and west of Hill 196, we have taken possession along a front of some 300 metres of an important eminence held by the enemy.

In the Argonne district several German counter attacks between Rolano and Four de Paris have been repulsed. There has been an artillery duel in the Woevre. One of our aviators dropped bombs on the barracks at Colmar.

German Liner Made Escape

Interned Macedonia Vanished Over Night From Canary Island Port

LONDON, March 17.—Special—A despatch to The Daily Mail from Las Palmas, Canary Islands, dated Monday, says:

"The interned German liner Macedonia disappeared from this port during the night. The Macedonia was towed here by a Spanish cruiser last November from Palma and was moored in the inner harbor, where the authorities removed parts of her machinery.

"It is presumed that the confiscated ports were duplicated, thus enabling the vessel to slip out of the harbor. The Macedonia carries a wireless and has a cargo supposed to be composed of war stores."

AMETHYST SURPRISED NINETEEN MEN KILLED

LONDON, March 17, 2.06 a.m.—A Tenedos despatch to The Daily Telegraph, dated March 15, says:

"The British cruiser Amethyst was fired upon by field artillery brought to bear from an unexpected spot. She was hit by several shells at close range and had 19 men killed and several wounded. The vessel is damaged, but her fighting efficiency is unimpaired."

An Athens despatch to The Telegraph says that 22 men were killed on the Amethyst and 30 wounded.

A.O.U.W. IN SESSION IN QUEEN CITY

(Canadian Press Special)

TORONTO, March 17.—The A. O. U. W. met in annual session here today, W. C. Mikel, K.C., Grand Master Workman, in the chair. A proposal to reduce the lodge representation was defeated. The election of officers will be held tomorrow.

Verily, the blockade of the British coast is a "paper" one.

Straits Must be Russia's When The War Ends

No Other Solution Possible of Acceptance, Says Prince Eugene Trukethey

PETROGRAD, March 16.—The Russky Viedomosti prints a signed article by Prince Eugene Trukethkey on Constantinople and the Dardanelles, in which the Prince says:

"Our friends and our foes alike ought to know what is the point of view of the Russian nation as well as what is said by diplomacy, the one and only solution which accords with the state interest of Russia—namely, Constantinople and the straits must be Russian. Every other solution, whatever its nature, is impossible of acceptance by us, because every other would only make the position for us worse than it was before the war began.

"French newspapers some time ago talked of neutralizing the Dardanelles, but when they know the Russian views they will doubtless change their opinions. We have seen in the case of Belgium how neutrality is respected nowadays and the Turk at any rate, was several degrees stronger than a scrap of paper.

"The neutralization of the straits or the handing of them over to a minor power—for example, Bulgaria—only means that Russia would be cut off from the sea at the outbreak of war and would probably have enemy warships at work around the Black Sea coast line.

"This war is a war waged in common by all three allies. When it is ended we must not inquire who has dealt Germany the heaviest blows or who inflicted on her the last defeat; who has enabled Belgium to be restored, or who has stood the main attack of the Turkish army. Nor, on the other hand, must the Allies raise the question of who forced the Dardanelles.

"Let the present war restore the territorial integrity of France. Let England be rewarded for her heroic efforts at the cost of Germany and Turkey. But let the vital interests of Russia also be secured.

"Nothing less than the independence of Russia is bound up with this question of the straits. Russia can and must guarantee the free passage of the Dardanelles to the mercantile marine of all the world; but she must have power by force of arms to prevent the warships of any other power from navigating the waters of the Sea of Marmora and the Black Sea. There is only one way by this may be secured and at the time open the exit to the high seas for Russia, an object which Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, has declared has British sympathies.

The straits must belong to Russia. No other solution is possible.'

HUSBAND AND WIFE TOGETHER IN DEATH

Mr. John Hasson Outlives Wife by Only Thirty-Six Hours

TORONTO, March 16.—Mr. and Mrs. John Hasson, the husband 84 years old, the wife ten years younger passed away within 36 hours of one another. Mrs. Hasson died quietly at her home, 374 Adelaide street west, last Saturday evening, and 36 hours later her husband followed her.

The funeral of Mrs. Hasson was held from St. Mary's Church on Monday. Her body is being held in a vault at St. Michael's Cemetery waiting the arrival of that of her husband, when they will be buried together.

The couple had six children, but they all died years ago, leaving them practicaly alone.

SELLING FORBIDDEN DRUGS

WINDSOR, March 17.—Special—Clever work by Provincial Officers Nash and Smith has resulted in the apprehension of Ross Elijah, twenty-one, and Lloyd Cole, twenty-three, both residents of Indianapolis, who it is believed are the same men who have been doing a large business in peddling drugs throughout western Ontario for the past two months. The men were arrested as they were about to board a suburban car at Leamington last evening for Windsor.

Both were brought here and locked up. A search of the grips they carried revealed a large quantity of tablets believed to be heroin. The police say two men answering the description of Cole and Elijah did an extensive business in Chatham selling the stuff to students in a business college here.

To-morrow the prisoners will be taken to Leamington for a hearing.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, March 16.—Business in grain over the cable today was dull, there being no firm cables received from foreign buyers. In sympathy with the advance in prices for oats in Winnipeg, a stronger feeling prevailed on the spot, and prices were marked up 1c to 2c per bushel, but the demand from all sources was slow and trade quiet. The tone of the market for spring wheat flour is stronger, and the prospects are that if present prices for wheat in Winnipeg are maintained values will be advanced in the near future. Millfeed is in fair demand. Butter quiet and easy. Cheese firm. Eggs easy and slightly lower.

CORSICAN HOISTED STARS AND STRIPES

MONTREAL, March 16.—The Stars and Stripes floated from the mast of the liner Corsician while she was steaming down the Mersey on her way from Liverpool to Halifax on her last voyage because two German submarines were waiting in the waters hard by, according to one of the passengers of the Corsician, David McKay of the C.P.R. freight department of Winnipeg, who arrived here last night from Halifax.x

The American flag was hauled down, he says, as soon as the steamship cleared the Mersey and dropped her pilot.

PATRIOTIC CAMPAIGN TO BE INSTITUTED

Wednesday and Thursday of Next Week Selected as the Dates —Object is to Raise Funds for the Patriotic Association —A Large Organization Committee of Prominent Citizens Appointed

A meeting of citizens for the purpose of organizing a campaign in this city for funds for the Canadian Patriotic Association was held last evening in the lecture room at the Armouries. Whilst the attendance was not as large as the worthy object warranted, those present were representative citizens. Amongst others present were the following: Rev. Dr. Baker, Mayor Panter, ex-Mayor J. F. Wills, R. Tannahill, Col. Lazier, Dr. Farley, H. Sneyd, T. Ritchie, S. Robertson, E. F. Milburn, Walter Alford, Dr. Clinton, Col. Stewart, Col. Ponton, Rev. A. S. Kerr, Dr. Coughlin, R. Templeton, T. H. Coppin, Col. Marsh, Wm. McGie, Ald. McFee, Rev. A. M. Hubly, J. Elliott, Dr. Marshall, Walter Lingham, A. Mott, D. V. Sinclair, Dr. MacColl, Jas. Roy, Fred Smith, A. R. Walker, J. Barlow, L. P. Hughes, O. Scott, J. Moffit.

On motion Co. Lazier was voted to the chair and Mr. H. Sneyd was selected as secretary.

Col. Lazier, in his opening remarks, stated that Belleville had not done what it should have done in this patriotic movement. Funds were not sufficient to meet all the financial obligations which were necessary to be met. Hon. H. Corby had given a generous grant and other sums had been subscribed, but they were inadequate to meet all emergencies which arise and will arise. This meeting was called for the purpose of ascertaining what could be done and also to consider the proposition of having a campaign in the city to raise funds.

Mr. R. Tannahill stated that the Patriotic Association was doing all it could and had done all it could for those who were fighting for the Empire. All over the Dominion branches of the Canadian Patriotic Association had been formed and were doing good work. In this city a number were being assisted while their bread-winners are fighting. The sums collected are not equal to the emergencies which will arise. He suggested a campaign and that ex-Mayor Wills be at the head of it.

Mr. H. Sneyd stated that Hon. H. Corby and Mr. E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P., were doing all in their power to procure for Friday night in this city Hon. Mr. Meighen and Dr. Clark, M. P. for Red Deer to give addresses at the meeting. This would not be a political meeting, but otherwise, as the speakers would be prominent men of both political parties. Those who were receiving aid from the fund were dependent on those at the front or who had enlisted to fight for the Empire. The speaker stated that in other cities a large amount had been raised for the patriotic fund.

Rev. Dr. Baker, Principal of Albert College, was of the opinion that all citizens should be called upon to subscribe to this fund. He felt confident that all would respond to this fund.

Ex-Mayor Wills said his heart was in this movement. He would assist in every way possible in the movement for the furthering of the cause of the patriotic fund. He would do all in his power to assist in any campaign which might be organized for the patriotic fund. The press and pulpit could do much in this matter. It is our duty to see that every person entitled to aid is properly looked after.

Mr. Sinclair said he would do all he could to assist in this matter.

Mayor Panter stated that Mr. Walter Alford would make a good man to assist in the proposed campaign.

Mr. Sneyd said that up to the present Belleville had done its duty and had given voluntarily to the patriotic fund. In the approaching campaign he had no doubt that Belleville would do its duty.

Col. Ponton was in hearty accord with ex-Mayor Wills being at the head of this campaign. We have excellent men at the head, namely, Messrs. R. Tannahill and H. Sneyd. Ex-Mayor Willis was the proper person to be at the head of a movement to effect a canvass of the city. We should have an organization and have those associated with it who would work and give an impetus and impulse to the work. It was most essential that those left behind, who were dependent upon such a fund, should be well looked after. Many of the Canadian soldiers at present were going through a great struggle. Kingston, Peterborough and other pdaces had given generously to the patriotic fund and Belleville will not be behind. All citizens should be urged to attend the Friday night meeting at the opera house.

Mr. Sneyd stated that Mr. H. B. Ames and others from Ottawa would be present at the Friday night meeting.

Ex-Mayor Wills stated that this was a time when every man should come to the front and do all he could in this matter. We should send our soldiers off with the assurance that their families will be protected. We have done our duty up to the present, but it is getting beyond our means. We will do our duty, and he hoped all would be on the firing line for the right. Ministers can and should assist in this campaign. It is for our friends to assist those dependent upon soldiers who are fighting for the Empire.

Mr. Thomas Ritchie stated that no better man could be selected as the head of this movement than ex-Mayor Wills. He was the right man in the right place. The speaker said that Belleville would not be behind the many other cities in responding with its contribution to the patriotic fund.

Mr. Tannahill said there were many in Belleville who had not been approached and these would no doubt assist in this campaign to help in this patriotic fund.

Col. Ponton said this was a campaign for all, and the press and pulpit could do much to assist in this matter and give an impetus to the movement.

Mr. W. C. Bean, an organizer of Woodstock, who has been instrumental in starting similar campaigns in Peterborough, Brockville and other places, was present and spoke briefly, outlining a plan of campaign.

Ex-Mayor Wills suggested that as there were seven wards in the city, a committee of 21 should be appointed, three for each ward in the city. The The working man as well as the wealthy man, no doubt, was willing and prepared to give to the fund.

After some further informal discussion a general organization committee was appointed and this committee met to prepare the plan of campaign which will be carried out on Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

The meeting then adjourned.

Obsequies

MISS BOYLE

After the burial services of the Anglican church had been said over the remains of the late Miss Boyle at Christ Church, yesterday afternoon, the body was laid away in its last resting place at Belleville cemetery. A number of relatives and friends were in attendance at the obsequies.

MRS. A. DROUGHAN

Yesterday requiem mass was celebrated over the remains of the late Mrs. Droughan, who passed away in this city. Rev. Father Killeen, Parish Priest of St. Michael's church, officiated. The body was shipped to Smith's Falls for interment. The bearers here were Messrs. J. Copeland, F. Allore, M. Lynch, W. J. Smith, J. Logue and F. Dolan.

MISS ANNIE CRAIG

The remains of the late Miss Annie Craig, who died at Brooklyn, N.Y., and which were brought to this city, were this morning interred in the family plot at Belleville cemetery. The funeral took place from Tickell & Sons' undertaking establishment. Previous to the body being brought here burial services were held. Mr. James McLaren, Miss Frances McLaren and Miss Stanley of Ottawa, accompanied the remains here and were in attendance at the burial. Deceased was a daughter of the late Mr. Joseph Craig of this city, and for a number of years she resided here, where she was well and favorably known. The bearers were Messrs C. M. Reid, H. Bryant, T. Benedict and H. Gerow.

The Irish Rink Wins From World

The Veteran Skip, Mr. Frank Dolan Once More Leads all Comers

There is an event which takes place on the 17th of March (St. Patrick's Day) in which at least one Belleville man is deeply interested. That man is Mr. Frank Dolan, the veteran skip of the Belleville Curling Club, and the event is a curling match between his rink and a rink representing the world. For 36 years Mr. Dolan has been able to skip a rink on the Patron Saint's anniversary, and to his credit be it said that he has only lost two games. This is a record of which he is justly proud, and he has every reason to be so. The ice being in excellent condition, the game was played this morning, and the veteran wearer of the green once more demonstrated his superiority of play by defeating his opposing rink by seven shots. In the early part of the match it looked as if The World would win, as that rink had a decided lead, but the spirit of St. Patrick evidently hovered over the Irish rink, and they gradually overcame the lead and won out by a good margin. It was a fine game and was witnessed by a goodly number of spectators. The players and scores were as follows:—

Irish—	The World—
G. Kerr	F. Fletcher
W. A. Dolan	A. Symons
W. N. Belair	C. J. White
F. Dolan	C. J. Symons
Skip..........21	Skip 17

Why Try to Fool Your Stomach?

Some folks have an idea that if they eat big meals, their brains and bodies will be strong.

Strength and energy don't come from gorging the stomach, but depend upon eating the right kind of food.

For nourishment of brain and body, Nature abundantly supplies in her field grains the elements needed.

The famous wheat and barley food contains in splendid proportion all the nutriment of the grains, retaining the mineral salts —phosphate of potosh, etc., stored under their outer coat, and which are especially necessary for keeping brain, nerves, and muscles in working trim.

Grape-Nuts

Grape-Nuts food is in the form of crisp, nut-like granules—delicious with cream or good milk—easy to digest—economical—

The perfect food for sound nourishment!

Fair Warning About Your Eyes

You CAN abuse them.
You CAN trifle with Nature.
But listen!
You CAN'T handle soft pitch with bare hands without smirching them.
You CAN'T take a diet of poison and expect to live. Can't be done.
You CAN'T see comfortably without glasses if your eyes are defective — the more you try, the more discomfort.

The wearing of scientifically constructed Glasses will end your eye trouble. And we construct them on the premises.

A Clean Mouth Promotes Health

Oral hygiene is quite properly focusing the attention of the medical profession as well as the laity. A noted authority is quoted as saying: "There is not one single thing more important in the whole range of hygiene than hygiene of the mouth."

In the process of sterilizing the mouth—destroying disease germs—dependence may be placed on Absorbine Jr. This germicidal liniment has made good under severe laboratory tests and its use as a germ destroyer and preventive is becoming quite general. It is unlike the usual germicide because it is non-poisonous and is safe and harmless to use.

Prof. J. D. Hird, Biological-Chemist, Washington, D.C., after an extensive laboratory examination of Absorbine, Jr., reports: "Four or five drops of Absorbine, Jr., to an ounce of water is sufficient to thoroughly cleanse the mouth and teeth of injurious bacteria, without injurious action on the teeth." (Complete report mailed upon request).

Of Interest to Belleville Buyers

There will be a special exhibit of British manufactures in London, England, from the 16th to 21st of May, 1915, to which the special attention of Belleville purchasers is directed. The important feature of the exhibit will be the productions of the manufacturers of Great Britain, which were formerly produced exclusively in Germany and Austria Hungary. The mother of nations is, as usual equal to the emergency, fertile and fruitful of resource.

What, by the way, has become of the old-fashioned father who whipped his son when the latter disobey him?

Gordon's Son With Kingstonians

He Held a Protestant Service in a Roman Catholic Church

(Kingston Whig)

In a letter to a member of the Whig staff, dated Feb. 25th, Lieut. A. D. McConnell, of No. 1 Canadian Field Ambulane writes interestingly of happenings in which his fellow Kingstonians participated. In part he says:

"We have at last got to the scene of action. We were brought by transport ship to a port on the continent and by a circuitous route in box cars to where we now are.

"We are billeted in quaint farm houses, which combine barns, stables and houses en bloc, surrounding a very odiferous court yard. Our lads call the fragrance arising therefrom eau-de-cologne." We are at present running a hospital 'somewhere in France,' and our officers and men are going in relays into the trenches. Our boys stand their baptism of fire very well, only the foolhardy ones suffering casualties. One foolish lad saw a German helmet in front of the trench, and, it looking good to him crawled out to get it, and was immediately riddled.

"This ground has all been fought over, as is evidenced by the ruined buildings and old trenches. The people here (natives) have become so accustomed to bursting shells and other terrifying features of war that women are seen sowing grain in fields interspersed with reserve trenches under a hail of shells from the enemy's big guns! One of our officers known in Kingston, whose name I must not mention, was getting a hair cut in a barber shop in the shell zone. During the operation a shell burst in the street outside the shop, "Liens! a shell," said the barber. Then heturned to a boy of ten and said: "Get the women in the cellar." After these instructions he went on coolly at his task.

The Kingston lads are all happy, but even now look forward to home coming. We now have one more Kingstonian added to our strength. The son of Principal Gordon is attached to us as chaplain. He has won his way into the hearts of the men by accompanying them on the marches and duties. He had the rather unique experience of taking us to a Catholic church nearby, and holding a Protestant service by invitation and kindness of the parish priest.

JAMES TAYLOR WRITES HOME

Mrs. W. Taylor of 35 Myres street, this city, has just received the following letter from her son, who is at the front with the first contingent:

Dear Mother,—Just a line hoping this finds you well, as it leaves me the same. I am writing you these few lines from the trenches we are in for twenty-four hours, so we are having a warm time. The German trenches are only 90 yards in front of us, but it is just a game of keeping your head down. You cannot even get your eyes on one to have a shot at him. It is only firing at the front of their trench and they do the same with you. They have been shelling us with shrapnel. They were dropping them about a yard or two yards behind our trench, but none of us were hit with any. It is just like a spring morning in the trench all the time, the bullets whistling past like the birds singing. The worst time there is here is at night when it gets dark. They have snipers all over the place; you can hardly move your head. Well, I must close now. Write soon. Remember me to all at home; also Esther.

From your loving son,

JIM.

FROM CHARLIE SPRAGUE

LITTLE DAUGHTER VERY DELICATE

Mother Tells How Vinol Made Her Delicate Child One of the Healthiest.

Fayetteville, N. C.—"My little daughter was in delicate and very poor health and had so little strength it caused us a great deal of uneasiness. I noticed an advertisement of Vinol and decided to try it. The results were simply marvelous as her appetite improved at once, she gained so much in weight and looks that my friends all commented on the change. She is now one of the healthiest children in town and does not need medicine of any kind. All mothers who have delicate children should try Vinol."—Mrs. GORDON JESSUP, Fayetteville, N. C.

Vinol is a wonderful appetizer and you can see delicate, ailing children improve day by day under its use, for it is the tissue building and medicinal elements of cod's livers, aided by the blood making, strength creating properties of tonic iron which makes Vinol so superior to other tonics to build up health and strength for delicate children, feeble old people and weak, run-down, nervous debilitated men and women.

We wish every mother who has a delicate child would try Vinol on our agreement to return their money if it fails to give satisfaction.

TRADE AND NEUTRAL POWERS

It has been contended by many, who have not given the subject that study and attention its importance demands, that the trade of neutral powers has not, to any great extent, been affected. This view of the question is not borne out by facts. An examination of the trade returns of neutral powers proves the contrary.

Though it was supposed that as European commerce had been paralyzed as the result of the war, that the commerce of the United States and other neutral countries would be enormously increased and enlarged, has that been the case? Quite the contrary. Take the case of the United States, and what do we find? First, the imposing of additional taxes upon its people, to the extent of $100,000,000 as a war tax to meet an anticipated falling off of revenue, as the result of the falling off of her trade relations with the world. A contemporary points out that "While Japan is actually in the war, intercourse with her, so far as the United States is concerned, is as free as ever. Yet we find that United States exports to Japan sank by nearly thirteen millions. Similarly, commerce between this country and the United States is as uninterrupted as ever—the Canadian "war budget" of last summer making no very radical changes in the tariff—yet in spite of this the United States sold $37,000,000 less goods in the seven months preceding January than she did in the corresponding seven months of the year previous.

The lack of an adequate merchant marine under the Stars and Stripes, the bottling up of German cargo boats and the transfer to the Admiralty for the transportation of troops of large numbers of British merchantmen may help to explain why the United States has been unable to make use of the damming up of the usual channels of European trade leading around the world to start the streams flowing from her own ports; but it does not account for the case of Canada. That will be put down to the slimness of our private "war budgets" and a new popularity of "made in Canada" goods.

"There is no war in South America and in spite of the fact that hostilities have completely paralyzed the big German trade with Argentina, the United States finds that she has sold $1,200,000 worth of goods less in that market last January than she did a year ago. Similarly United States trade with Brazil fell off at the rate of a million a month during the last seven months. China took $5,000,000 worth less of American goods in the same period."

The war has affected the trade of the whole world, hence the sooner these neutral powers throw in their lot with the Allies, the sooner will the war be brought to a close, and legitimate trade between nations again established.

THE NEW BLOCKADE ORDER

The British Government has decided to act favorably on the suggestion of the United States to permit a partial restoration of normal trade conditions between foreign nations and Germany, and has issued a proclamation on behalf of all the Allies declaring what will be done to further restrict sea trade with the enemy. In some respects the situation so far has been peculiar. Largely in the interest of the United States cotton was excluded from the list of articles declared contraband and cotton laden ships have been sailing with some regularity to German ports from this continent, and in some cases returning with partial cargoes of German goods. Ships so engaged have been subject to stoppage, detention and search, however, and none of them could count upon making an uninterrupted voyage. Hereafter no vessel of any neutral country will be allowed to proceed on a voyage to a German port. The Admiralty will hold up, search, and, on occasion, bring into a British port any ship, will take off its cargo, seize it if it is contraband, take it for military use if it is not, paying for it of course in the latter case, or otherwise deal with it, without much consideration for the owner. Ships bound for a neutral port but with goods on board for an enemy may be dealt with in practically the same way, as also may ships bound anywhither having on board goods of German origin. Al this is less severe than the German policy as set out in the submarine blockade orders, and which contemplated the sinking without notice of all ships, British or French or neutral, found in British waters bound to or from a French or British port. The new proclamation threatens the life of no one on a neutral vessel, and, on certain conditions, may not require the confiscation of the cargoes. It is fairly sure, says the Montreal Gazette, however, that with the British and French fleets to enforce it, the new policy will be effective in operation. It will seriously injure some neutral nations, the United States among the others. For one thing, a large outlet for Southern cotton will be shut off. Holland, Denmark, Norway and Sweden, which have hardly been hit by the interruption of trade, will suffer still more. None of the latter, however, are in a position to back its protest with force, and it is presumed that the United States will not proceed to extremities, with its objections. Morally such a situation is impossible to justify. The fact that a number of European countries are at war with each other is no reason why one of the belligerents should threaten and try to sink the ships of neutral states engaged in lawful commerce with the other, or why another belligerent should capture the ships and disturb the business arrangements of people in neutral lands. There is precedent in blockade relations, however, for more than Great Britain has proclaimed as her intentions, and few powers are in a position to quarrel with what is proposed. The situation will probably be accepted, as the Lancashire people accepted the blockade of the southern cotton ports by the North during the United States Civil War, as something that will hasten the end and help to bring peace. It will, of course, further restrict Germany's industry, and weaken her people's power of bearing the war's burden; and that is the reason for creating the hard and far-reaching order of things announced yesterday.

CURRENT COMMENT

Lord Kitchener says the good health of the troops at the front is a striking testimony to the value of inoculation. Does any sane man dare dispute this opinion?

The death of Lincoln Beachey, the aviator, comes to remind us that, despite the liberal use of aviation in the European war, it is still a very perilous occupation.

London Daily News: "What the war is rapidly proving is that the very highest form of conscript service cannot avail against volunteers armed with enthusiasm for their cause. It is this which justifies the declaration that conscription is dead, and that the Prussian Junker has killed it.

Toronto News: "If Vice-Admiral Carden has really prophesied that the Allies will be before Constantinople by Easter he must expect to be there still earlier. But it is not the habit of British naval officers to make public statements either about what they have done, or about what they hope to do. They merely do it."

Hunting for a needle in a haystack is not such an easy task that the finding of the needle is not creditable to the searchers. The sinking of the German cruiser Dresden was not a glorious naval victory, because the British outnumbered the Germans three to one; but it was a very creditable performance just the same, because the seas are wide and a single cruiser takes up but little space.

While the British Order-in-Council establishing a blockade of Germany leaves much to the imagination as to how that blockade will be made effective, and as to how much of the high seas will come within the war zone, it is unmistakably definite and uncompromising in its main essential. This is that Britain, instead of bargaining with Germany for calling off the "submarine blockade," will take up Germany's challenge and fight her to a finish.

Speaking in the House of Lords yesterday, Lord Kitchener dwelt with emphasis on the need of war munitions. He admitted that this matter is causing him great anxiety. He said that he considered the men engaged in supplying war munitions were serving their country as well as the men in the field. He made the very interesting announcement that, on the successful termination of hostilities a medal would be issued to workers on munitions of war.

Stories From The Trenches

A gunner in a mountain battery from India, now serving at the front, writes to his brother at Peckham:

"We were sitting round a fire not far from the trenches when one of the company told us a story of two of his companions. It was as follows:

"Two infantrymen—Jack and Tom—were in the trenches. Jack complained about the wornout state of his boots, and the other remarked, 'Don't stand there looking so miserable. Go out and kill a German, and take his boots!' Up jumped Jack out of the trench. Two hours passed, but he did not return. Just when Tom had given up hope of seeing him again his mate returned.

"'Where have you been all this time? I thought you had been killed', said Tom.

Extracts from other letters are given below:

Own Baronial Halls.

"You must know that the natives here understand that we are but amateur soldiers, and have jumped to the conclusion that we are all of independent means, and own baronial halls and shooting boxes in England. It was obviously with this impression that Mongal (his name) first appropriated me. He announced that he was going to be my servant. 'But', I expostulated, 'I am not looking for a servant.' That did not seem to effect Mongal.

"Now Mongat was a most intelligent looking merchant, sensitive withal, and I hesitated to hurt his feelings. At last he announced that he would be my valet for the same remuneration that I paid my valet in England. Ye gods! Then it was that I perceived my loophole. 'I never paid a valet of mine more than half a rupee (8d) a week', I said with perfect truth.

"To my surprise this challenge was accepted with joyous acclamation, and Mongal announced that henceforth he was mine, and he blessed heaven for sending across his path so munificent a master. In desperation I said that I never engaged servants without references. This seemed to nonplus him for a time, but eventually he turned up with testimonials all testifying to his honesty, sobriety and other virtues unknown to the Hindu. One was from a past master of his, a captain, saying, laconically, 'Mongal is a d—— good fellow.'

Battery Resembles Shrubbery

"And so it came about that Mongal became duly installed, and occasionally I have to flee to escape his too willing attentions. He wakes me with a cup of specially made tea (no sugar) and decorously retires while I robe. At first he was most anxious to dress me, but he has grown out of that"—From a soldier of the 6th East Surrey Regiment in India.

"The methods we use to hide our guns are wonderful. We think nothing of bagging an apple tree from an orchard and transplanting it by the side of a gun. Our battery resembles nothing more than a shrubbery at times. The C. O. of one of our heavy batteries personally reconnoitres his batteries from an aeroplane, and so well are his guns concealed that although he is aware of their position, he frequently is unable to locate his own guns.

"By the way, talking about the German artillery, one of our latest additions is known by the men as 'Mother', and throws a shell a hundredweight and a half heavier than their 'Jack Johnsons'"—From a Sergeant in the R.F.A.

"The other night, while going to the trenches, a bullet just shaved my coat and hit the ammunition carried by the man behind. This caused such a brilliant flash that in an instant 'Sniper Bill' got to work, and the bullets were soon flying round us. The man who was hit was a corporal, and he died next morning. The rest of us reached the trench safely, and we soon had our revenge."—Pte. E. J. Aldous, 4th Suffolks, to a relative.

Orders Arrest of German Attache

Russia Accuses Von Pappenheim of Plot to Cut Trans-Siberian Railroad

PEKING, March 15.—The Chinese Government has lodged a protest with the German Legation concerning the activities of Capt. Rabe von Pappenheim, German Military Attache at Peking, and has ordered his arrest.

At the Russian Legation it was said that Capt. von Pappenheim, who went to Manchuria some time ago, ostensibly on a hunting expedition, in reality was endeavoring to incite the natives to cut the Trans-Siberian Railway.

A Peking dispatch on Friday said that Capt. von Pappenheim had set forth for Manchuria in company with eight Germans who escaped from Tsing-tao after its capture by the Japanese. The party, it was said, was equipped with twenty camels and a large supply of explosives, and was endeavoring to blow up tunnels along Russia's Trans-Siberian Railway.

Sunkist Orange Recipes

YE OLD TIME ORANGE LAYER CAKE

Cream one-third cup of butter with a cup of sugar until very light, then beat in three eggs singly, making mixture quite smooth each time. Sift a cup of flour with half a cup of corn starch, two and a half teaspoons of baking powder and a little salt. Add this gradually to first mixture alternately with two-thirds of a cup of water, beating thoroughly until batter is light and smooth. Bake in two deep layer pans about twenty-five minutes. When ready to serve cover each layer with thinly sliced Sunkist Oranges well sugared and dust the finished cake with powdered sugar, or with grated cocoanut if liked. The fruit juice will soak into the cake and ruin its delicacy if it be put together long before serving time; but it is delicious when fresh.

Much Lost by Poor Market Methods

Canada's failure properly to market her great supply of first class produce was insisted on by W. Sanford Evans,, of Winnipeg, before the Canadian Club of Montreal, yesterday. Mr. Evans pointed out, by way of illustration, that in the five years 1909-13, the wheat producers of Canada have sold the bulk of their crop at a lower average basis of price than have the producers of wheat in any other country in the world.

"And this is not due to manipulation or speculation, but to the manner in which we dump upon the market, within the space of a few short weeks, more high class wheat than the world will take within that space of time without concession of price", said Mr. Evans. "Yet is it not true that we have been giving national discussion to almost every element of the wheat problem excepting the factors directly affecting price."

To illustrate his point Mr. Evans had a chart showing the great disparity between the total fluctuation of wheat prices in the world market and the variations of ocean and rail freights and insurance.

Mr. Evans was full of optimism as to the future of Canada, but insisted that proseperity must be worked for. Rewards will not fall into our laps and there was every need for business statesmanship. Production was one of Canada's greatest problems, and one of the most important phases of the production question was that of marketing. Big production was not necessarily profitable production; there might easily be misdirected production or erratic expansion leading to the overstraining of the world's credit system.

There were two phases of the marketing problem, one a question of produce, to what an extent and where, and the second, equipment or market machinery, places to sell, to store and property to transport.

"Canada is very deficient in the proper machinery of marketing," said Mr. Evans. "And there is the greatest waste and loss in consequence."

He pointed out that if there were at any time a great fluctuation in prices it meant that there was some mistake either in the volume produced or in the times and methods of marketing. A knowledge of the varying conditions of marketing and the provision of proper faculties is the best practical way of encouraging production.

Very often the producer received the lowest prices for his commodity, the consumer was not well informed or able to finance or store supplies at the cheapest point and it was very doubtful that the middleman greatly profited. Our first thought should be for the producer, not merely the grower of agricultural products, but every man or woman who adds value by the function he or she performs.

Turning to the wheat problem Mr. Evans declared that there was three, four or five times as much money involved in the fluctuations of prices as there was in the variation of freights or insurance. We have been giving much more attention to insurance than to prices, in other words.

"Our market is unregulated, and not only does price suffer on the goods sold, but there is an enormous quantity of the total of the minor products of the farm which are never sold at all and are wasted because proper system and proper facilities do not exist. In all this I am not expressing any criticism of our farmers. The problem is too big and too complicated for any individuals or for any one class, and in many respects the farmers are under the compulsion of various necessities, but at least they must share with the general public the responsibility for inattention to some aspects of the problem, and the general public should assume with the farmers the responsibility for seriously grappling with this problem," Mr. Evans concluded.

MARCH WINDS

The winds of March will shortly race insanely through the land, and blow the whiskers from your face, and fill your eyes with sand. Ah, then you ought to smile and sing, and chortle all day long, for winds like those bespeak the Spring, the rose, the thrush's song. What if the zephyr takes your tile, and rolls it through the town, and you pursue it, mile on mile, until you run it down? What if that zephyr splits your coat, and slams you through a wall, and soils your shirt and gets your goat and spoils your parasol? It is the harbinger of Spring, it ushers in the day when biddies cluck and jaybirds sing, and all the world is gay. Oh, blow your blamedest, wind of March, get busy, vernal breeze, and bend the elm and rend the larch, and other brand of trees! I brace myself against a post, and cry, "Oh, wind inspired, the season what we love the most will come when you are tired! Exert yourself, and make things hum, oh, woozy wind, blow on! For soft and balmy days will come, when you are spent and gone!" The March wind whistles, howls and shrieks, throughout the dismal day, and knocks the sideboards from my cheeks, and blows my wig away.

WALT. MASON.

Mr. J. K. L. Ross

To be born the son of a very rich man who has made a name for himself as wide as the country in which he lives is about as severe a handicap as Providence can impose. So that it was with this handicap that John Kenneth Leveson Ross began the life of a young man in Montreal a few years ago. The late James Ross, the father of young Ross, was a pioneer of the Canadian Pacific, and, in fact, built one of the mountain sections. He was considered a man of great ability and force of character even among his associates of a day when these qualities were not rare. He was a big man among big men. Jack Ross began well. It was in 1897 that he left McGill with the right to add B.A.Sc. after his name. But the young College graduate gave early and convincing indications of his intentions to become a real man. He went from McGill to the car shops of the Montreal Street Railway and began to "dig in." In a little while he was assistant to the General Manager of the Montreal Street Railway, then acting manager of the City of Birmingham Tramway Company, then assistant manager of the Central London Railway. Then he came back to Canada and dived into coal mines as he had dived into railways elsewhere. James Ross was a "coal" man and it was not long before "Jack" turned up as Assistant General Manager of the Dominion Coal Company. Then he became Commercial Manager of the same big industry. Now we find him described as a "capitalist" in various volumes of the "who's who" variety. The list of his financial connections is a long one, comprising among many others, directorships of the Dominion Bridge Company, the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, Monklands Limited, Cote St. Luc Realties, and last, but by no means least, of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and Mr. Ross is the youngest of the C. P. R. directors.

And there is one thing to be noted about these directorships—they were not accorded him as compliments to his distinguished father. If "Jack" Ross has a weakness that almost amounts to a vice it is his love of deep sea fishing. In 1911, when his yacht was anchored at Picton, N.B., one of the natives remarked, "Belongs to some crazy Montrealer, who spends all his spare time tryin' to cath a tuna. He'll never land one if he hooks it." Which shows that the native in question didn't know Ross. He had been after a tuna with hook and line for three summers, and he was going to get a tuna if it took three or thirty summers more. Whereupon a regular whale of a tuna consented to take his bait and see which was the better man. The struggle lasted about five hours, which was very quick work indeed. It was the biggest fish ever landed in Canada anyway, if not indeed a record-breaker for the Atlantic. That tuna won him an honorary membership in the Tuna Club of Santa Carolina, California.

The death of James Ross left the son one of the wealthiest men in Canada. It was when war broke out that Mr. Ross' splendid generosity was most notably shown. It not being possible for him to go to the front, he gave one-half million dollars to the common cause—perhaps the largest private cash donation at one time given by a British subject. But if Mr. Ross could not go to the firing line he could do, and did, the next best thing. He "did his little bit" to make a Canadian port a safer place for British and Canadian commerce. Mr. Ross has a very powerful and swift motor cruiser, the "Tuna," and the "Tuna" with its master on board went into the service of the Admiralty forthwith and she is now an invaluable patrol boat. The late James Ross was a collector of paintings and objects of art of more than average discernment. Gradually there accumulated in his magnificent home on Peel Street a collection with but few rivals in Montreal, if indeed in America. Of this home and this collection J. K. L. Ross is now the master.

MINISTER STANDS OUT FOR THE DRY CANTEEN

OTTAWA, March 16.—Special—Queried this afternoon with regard to the rumors that the dry canteen would be abolished in Canada, as had been done at Salisbury Plain, Major-General Hughes said: "I am more than ever wedded to the dry canteen. I have never yet been able to see the position that either a civilian or a soldier addicted to liquor can live properly." The Minister expressed himself as well pleased with the conduct of both officers and men of the Canadian forces, having seen them all from the Atlantic to the Pacific on his recent inspection trip.

PAINS QUIT ! BACK SORENESS GOES !

TORTUROUS LUMBAGO CURED BY 'NERVILINE'

THIS WONDERFUL CURATIVE LINIMENT HAS ALMOST MAGICAL POWERS.

You can compare a congestive pain to a little fire. When congestion smoulders, pain comes and goes. Congestion grows into inflammation, but pain, now intense, grows excruciating, and stays, too. There is an absolute antidote of pain—it is Nerviline.

New to you, perhaps is Nerviline, but known well in many lands as the most penetrating and pain-subduing pain remedy ever discovered. Not oily or ill-smelling, but pleasant—it rubs on. Not temporay action, but permanent in its control of pain.

Not an ache or a pain anywhere that it cannot reach. No soreness or strain that it has not the power to relieve.

Nerviline is the only remedy in the world sold under guarantee—if it does not relieve you, you get your money back. Proof enough that Nerviline is a remedy that fill fulfill absolutely every requirement of a pain-reliever, both for internal and external use.

Backache it cures like magic. For rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, neuralgia, stiffness, sprains or strains, it is the only thing. Large bottle, 50 cents; trial size, 25 cents; at druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Girls With Beautiful Faces or Graceful Figures

Canadian girls have a world-wide reputation for beauty, but, at the same time, there are girls in our cities who possess neither beauty of face nor form, because in these instances they suffer from nervousenss, the result of disorders of the womanly organism. At regular intervals they suffer so much that their strength leaves them; they are so prostrated that it takes days for them to recover their strength Of course, such periodic distress has its bad effect on the nervous system. The withered and drawn faces, the dark circles and crow's feet about the eyes, the straight figure without those curves which lend so much to feminine beauty are the unmistakable signs of womanly disorders.

When a girl becomes a woman, when a woman becomes a mother, when women pass through the changes of middle life, are the three periods of life when health and strength are most needed to withstand the pain and distress ofen caused by severe disturbances.

At these critical times women are best fortified by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, an old remedy of proved worth that keeps the entire system in excellent condition.

Mothers, if your daughters are weak, lack ambition, are troubled with headaches, lassitude and are pale and sickly, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is just what they need to surely bring the bloom of health to their cheeks and make them strong and healthy.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and receive confidential advice from a staff of specialists that's free.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

THE UNEMPLOYED

(From Beck's Weekly, Montreal)

There are four things which the Canadian community can do about its present large collection of out-of-works. It can let them starve. It can maintain them by charity. It can ship them to Europe (if Europe will stand for it). And it can provide them with work. Taking it by and and large, it seems as if the latter was really the cheapest of the four. For let us consider the situation briefly.

As regards letting them starve; that method is scarcely humanitarian, but that consideration need not concern us for the moment; we are considering economic problems. Is it advantageous for Canada? Scarcely. Canada is still a great and fertile and richly endowed and largely undeveloped country, whose chief need is men. Letting our out-of-works starve will not merely reduce the supply of men at present on hand, but it will make it very hard for us to secure fresh immigration when business livens up again. Men will not starve quietly. The newspapers insist on talking about it. The news of their deaths gets over to England and Scotland and Ireland and Italy and Sweden, where their relatives are, and has a singularly discouraging effect upon other English and Irish and Swedish who have been thinking about coming to Canada. If we decide to starve our present out-of-works, we may figure with great certainty that the population of Canada will be about stationary for a good many years to come.

As regards shipping them back to Europe—as per the suggestion of the heads of the Trades and Labor Council of Montreal. It is not quite so objectionable as letting them starve, but very nearly so. It reduces the manpower of Canada by just the same amount. It may not give the reputation of Canada, as an immigration-seeking country, quite such a hard jolt, but it will certainly not help it any.

As regards maintaining them by charity, that also is expensive. A family living on charity may not consume quite so much as a family living on work provided by a kindly-disposed Government, but it consumes a lot, and it produces nothing. And far worse than that; it develops in its members that fatal attitude of dependency, of weakness, of unenterprising hopelessness, which is the mark of the pauperized. And the workers themselves (I am not referring to the skilled professional mendicants, who are "working" this war for all that it's worth) do not want charity. Many of them, and the best at that, would about as soon starve as live on charity. They do not claim that society owes them a living; all they claim is that society owes them an opportunity.

There remains the final option, that of providing them with work. Is there no work in Canada that needs to be done? Is the credit, is the wealth of this country so ruined by the war that we dare not undertake any of the tremendously important jobs that we were talking about only a few months ago as being absolutely necessary for the future of the Dominion? Do we now need no roads? Do we now need no new territory opened up. Do we need no new land broken for crops? Do we need no more food supplies? Can we sell no more wheat or cattle or lumber or potatoes to the foreigner—who in all too many cases is so busy fighting that he has no time to raise them for himself?

The only difficulty is in organizing the work and bringing the laborer to it. And here surely is the place for our Governments to show that they are worthy of the people who created them. It is too big a task for individuals. What is really needed is the mobilization of another army, an army of labor. That army must be enlisted to serve wherever its commanders want it to serve, and must be transported to the field of labor just as the fighting army is transported to the battlefield. At the moment, the field of labor is not so much in the cities as it was before the war and is a great deal more largely in the rural sections. But the individual worker cannot go wandering all over the rural parts of Canada looking for the place where he is wanted. Ten to one he cannot even afford to take a train to the railway station which is nearest to the place where his job might be. The Government should do that for him. The country will lose nothing by such an expenditure; a man and a job together are an asset to Canada, but a man without a job and a job without a man are both a liability. When you put two liabilities together and make an asset you are doing good business.

Twins Enlisted As Soldiers

LONDON, March 16.—Two sixteen-year-old American boys, twins, who were so well developed that British enlisting officers accepted them into the army without question, sailed for their home in Bridgeport, Conn., with their dreams of becoming great warriors shattered. It was only by the narrowest margin that they were deprived of their adventure.

The boys, Howard and George Hudson, were visiting an aunt at Bournemouth when they were overcome by the martial enthusiasm. Four months ago they ran away and enlisted in a Sussex regiment, where they were accepted as rather young but grown, men. Since then they have been training for service at the front.

A short time ago their parents learned of what they were doing and communicated with the authorities at Washington. The State Department informed United States Ambassador Page of the circumstances and he had them discharged from the army. Their aunt watched them until they were safely aboard the steamer.

Saw Wife on Movie Film

Abandoned Husband Recognized Her as Red Cross Nurse at Havre

"WAR"

A SERIAL STORY BY
BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

"And what will become of Augustenburg, with his 'undivided right' over these Danish Provinces? I studied all this history with the greatest care, and I have taken my stand for the old inherited right which has stood for hundreds of years. I thought I was sacrificing you to help establish this right."

"It will go hard with your historical claims, my dear Martha," laughed Frederick. Again I began to study the crisis, and discovered that the Vienna treaty had really settled nothing. Schleswig-Holstein loomed more formidably than before. The old claimants renewed their claims before the Alliance, and no one could guess what they were going to do about it. The two great powers were accusing each other of encroachment.

"Now, what are the arrogant Prussians up to?" was the constant suspicion of Austria as well as of the Middle States and the Duchies. Napoleon III. advised Prussia to annex up to the Danish-speaking border, but Prussia pretended to be unwilling. But at last she formulated her claim thus: Prussian troops should remain in occupation on the defensive, and under Prussian leadership; a contingent should represent the Alliance; the harbor of Kiel to be occupied; postal, telegraph, and customs to be under Prussian control. This angered the Austrian Minister of War; the jealous Middle States objected, and although willing that Prussia should hold the harbor of Kiel, could not tolerate her right to recruit soldiers and sailors. And so the quarrel ripened.

Prussia declared she had no design absolutely to annex, but was planning the best interest of all parties. Under opposition Prussia became even more assertive, and voice after voice was raised against this "insolent announcement," public sentiment rising daily against Prussia and Bismarck.

The Middle States demanded to know the secret negotiations carried on between the diplomats of the two powers. The two Emperors betook themselves to their country seats, and messages flew between them thick and fast. Several points were agreed upon. The investment should be shared half and half. Lauenburg should fall to Prussia, and Austria in lieu thereof receive two and a half million thalers. I asked myself, what return could such a sum be to offset all the losses, my financial losses, for instance, and in case of thousands of others their fallen loved ones? Yet I was rejoiced when a new "treaty" was signed; that sounded so reassuring. Later I learned that these documents generally contain the germ of some future causus belli. The breaking of a treaty is only a fresh chance to fly to arms.

The quarrel seemed to be laid aside. The powers occupied the provinces, and I was again obliged to give up my favorite aspiration to see them once more "for ever together undivided," as was decreed in 1460.

But in spite of the treaty, the situation was not relieved. Patient reading of the political press gave me an idea of the shifting condition, but I could hardly believe that war would result. I contented myself with the thought that legal questions could always be settled legally and justly. All these wise ministers, diplomats, judicious councillors, parliamentarians, and polite monarchs, could surely settle such a trivial point. Thus I was actuated more by curiosity than anxiety in my research, which I was carefully jotting into the red book:—

Oct. 1, '65—Imperial Council at Frankfort adopts the following resolutions: 1. The right of Schleswig-Holstein to control itself must remain in force. The Gastein treaty is rejected as a breach of right to the nation. 2. All officials shall refuse to pay over taxes and loans to the Allies.

Oct. 15—The Prussian royal edict approved the decision in regard to hereditary claimant, who renounces all right to the throne for the sum of a half million thalers. By the Vienna treaty the duchies were ceded to the Allies, hence there can be no further claim.

Protests were made on all hands. "Prussian arrogance" became a catchword, and all hands declared, "We must protect ourselves against them." "King William would be another Victor Emanuel." "To reconquer Silesia is Austria's secret intent." "Prussia is paying court to France." "Austria is coquetting with the French." Thus tittle-tattle and recrimination was indulged in by the Cabinets of the great Powers quite as seriously as by the gossips at a village tea.

The entire family returned for the autumn to Vienna.

I was very eager to keep my little Rudolf away from the influence of his grandfather, who was determined to inspire in him military tastes, which were already awakened, probably through a long line of soldier ancestry. My studies of natural science had taught me that such tendencies could be inherited. On my boy's birthday his grandfather brought him a sword. I remonstrated:—

"You know very well that my son shall never be a soldier?"

"Would you tie him to your apron strings? Never mind, good soldier blood will tell; let him grow up, and see what profession he chooses—the noblest of all, I am sure—the military."

"Martha fears he may die in battle," said Aunt Marie. "As though the same fate might not overtake one in bed."

"If a hundred thousand fell in battle," I said, "would the same fate have been theirs in peace?"

Aunt Marie was always ready with an answer. "No, it would have been their destiny to have died in war."

"Suppose they had been bold enough to refuse to go to war," I suggested.

"Impossible," shouted my father, and then the old controversy began.

The Greek fable of the hundred-headed hydra illustrates so perfectly the manner of argument between two convinced opponents. No sooner have you sliced the head off one point and started to attack the second, when the first head has grown on again.

The following were my father's favorite and unconquerable arguments in favor of war:—

1. War was the decree of God Himself (see Bible.)
2. Wars have always been and always will be.
3. Without war population would increase too fast.
4. Permanent peace would corrupt, weaken, relax, and degenerate the race.
5. War best develops self-sacrifice, heroism, and fine character.
6. Human beings will always differ in opinions, interests, and desires, hence perpetual peace is impossible.

None of the above wise sayings can be maintained under argument, but each in turn can be set up as a fresh defence when the preceding one topples. For example, obliged to drop argument No. 4 and admit that peace is more apt to secure happiness, prosperity, and progress, my father would agree, "War is an evil, but (arguments 1 and 2) inevitable." Then I would prove that by international agreement and law, war could be avoided; he would acknowledge that it could, but ought not (No. 5). If the argument for peace upsets the claims of Nos. 4 and 5, and shows that war hardens and brutalizes men, then he would admit it, but quote No. 3. This argument sounds hugely humane and learned, but is the least sincere of all. Wars are not waged for the benefit of posterity. When you have proved the fallacy of 3 the other returns to 1, and so the trick can be carried on till it becomes a labyrinthal puzzle.

The lovers of war reason in a circle where one can always see and follow, but never catch them. That their arguments often proceed from opposite points of view and nullify each other matters nothing to them, and proves that they are arguing a position they have not thought out for themselves, but are bolstering up opinions which have been handed on to them. I did not see this clearly at the time I carried on the argument with my father on peace and war, but I always came away from the combat fatigued and dizzy, and I realized later that it came from whirling in this circle which his lack of logic necessitated.

Vivid Story of French Victory

German Trenches Were Filled With Dead and Many Prisoners Taken

LONDON, March 16.—A striking description of the important French victory at Combres, northeast of St. Mihiel, is contained in a special despatch to the Morning Post, which is dated "on the Meuse, March 9":—

"Despite the miserable weather conditions, heavy and persistent rains, followed by snow and intense cold, no one could possibly be downhearted in the east of France. The entire aspect of the campaign has changed, and from being defenders, the Allies have assumed the role of tireless attackers. It is now the Germans who are clinging desperately to the strongholds that still remain to them and are daily becoming more precarious as the French flanking attacks are being pushed home through the weak spots or on to commanding positions, dominating the German advanced posts.

"As in the west, the French have to face in certain places advanced German positions—salients thrust out into France from which, owing to the configuration of the ground, it is inadvisable, if not impossible, to dislodge the enemy by direct frontal attack.

"There are three of such salients: First, that of St. Mihiel; second, that between Verdun and the Argonne running from Montfaucon down to Varennes; third, that immediately east of Rheims, consisting of the spur of hills which abuts upon the River Vesie opposite Sillery.

"Their advance, however, came up against something in the nature of a blind wall at St. Mihiel, where it was faced by the winding Meuse and by the almost impregnable earthworks on the further bank and hemmed in by powerful fortifications on the hills, commanding the town on either hand, which if they cannot shell the Germans in St. Mihiel itself owing to the extreme steepness of the hills surrounding the narrow valley, can at all events prevent them from spreading in any direction.

CAPTURED HEIGHTS.

"What appears to be the most serious menace to the advanced German position at St. Mihiel comes at present from the western base angle at Fresnes and Woevre. The country down each side of the wedge is so difficult as to render attacking operations very doubtful of success, but if the base is broken the same result will be obtained.

"The line of battle swings wide around Verdun, which is safe from all danger now and turns down into the St. Mihiel wedge about Etain. On its western flank behind Fresnes lie the forest heights of Ambionville. They had belonged to the French for months, but for equally long our most advanced position was at Les Eparges beyond the front at the bottom of the valley, where our trenches were open to severe attack from the open heights beyond held by the Germans.

"Thanks to some of the most brilliant fighting of the campaign, these heights are now in our possession. The Crete de Combres, as it is called, is in reality a plateau. The top of this plateau is not very broad and it descends pretty speedily to the broad plain of the Woevre, not so steeply, though, as it rises from the valley in which Les Eparges lies, for there the hillside presents a series of small cliffs, which, when the final assault was made had to be scaled with ladders in the same way as a fortress.

"This occupation was preceded by some of the most thorough and expensive sapping seen in this war. Mines were dug practically through the hills and when the final explosion, which heralded the infantry attack, occurred, the light was obscured by a tremendous upheaval from the earth as if from a volcano. At the same time the ground was being prepared by a heavy artillery fire. Battery after battery had been concealed in the forest heights and the swept the German positions with an inferno of shell fire. Reply to them was difficult because the French guns were concealed in splendid cover in the valley below.

"On the way up the storming parties passed trench after trench upon the side of the German hill which bore witness to the effectiveness of the French projectiles. The trenches had been fully manned, and being narrow in many cases, were packed with men. Now they were filled with dead, so close together that there was not even room for the bodies to fall.

CALLED HIS MEN DOGS.

"There was little wonder that those who escaped were demoralized and that prisoners were taken wholesale. One officer, who was forced to surrender with a considerable body of men, refused to deliver his sword to any one but a French officer, and, when he did so, exclaimed bitterly, pointing to his men: 'What could a man do with whipped dogs like these?'

At a low estimate, the German losses when the Crete de Combres was carried amounted to four thousand.

"The French troops engaged in this brilliant piece of work, belong to the Troupes de Converture, the first line of defence comprising the corps de elite of the Chasseurs of Pied. The men declare that it was the fiercest fighting they had had and its results are most important.

"Despite the inevitable counter attacks, and these have been severe, the French have forced the enemy across the plateau and at the present moment they are clinging desperately to its edge.

"Once over the edge, the plain of the Woevre is under the French fire, a gently undulating country strewn with small spinneys of fir trees, the valley of Longeau is commanded, and the German way to St. Mihiel is most seriously menaced."

Peculiar Effect of Killing a Man

Writing to a friend in Toronto, a member of the Royal Grenadiers at the front says: "I took my own gun with me tuned to perfection, as you know that shooting is my hobby. On the occasion of my first visit to the trenches, which was only 80 yards from the Germans, I spent the best part of a forenoon in the company of a Bisley chum, getting the range on a point fairly high up, from which spot one of their observers had frequently been seen. I got the elevation beautifully, and on my second visit to the same trench I saw my man to advantage. I was fortunate enough in getting him through the head with my first shot, but the effect of the incident on me was very peculiar. It brought on a most violent fit of sickness, which continued all that night. No doubt the sudden change of environment was too much for the sensitive "tummy" of a naturally timid man. I went back to my billet the next day in the ambulance. After this preliminary canter around the course I don't expect to have any more such qualms.

"Going into a trench with a constant fusilade of fire in the immediate neighborhood is a very novel and almost fascinating experience. As the communicating trenches are flooded the entrance and exit are made above ground under cover of darkness, and under a continued indirect fire of rifles. It is under these dangerous conditions that rations are conveyed to the trenches. Their sniping is wonderful, but I don't think this can apply to their rank and file. I am under the impression that snipers use telescopic sights and do their skilled shooting over and from the rear of their own trenches. I can't be sure of this but hope some day to find out. In any case they must have exceedingly good positions as it is a case of stretcher bearers if one's head apears above the parapet."

Thin People Can Increase Weight

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying. First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol—one tablet with every meal—for two weeks. Then weight and measure again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say, and think, the scales and the tape measure will tell their own story, and most any thin man or woman can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all the new flesh stays put.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food, it turns the fats sugars and starches of what you have eaten, into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepares it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. All this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol stops the waste and does it quickly and makes the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive. J. S. McKeown and other leading druggists in Belleville and vicinity sell it in large boxes—forty tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

LETTER FROM WALTER CRAIG

The following letter was received by Mrs. W. J. Craig, 199 Lingham St., this city, from her son, Walter, who left with the 1st Contingent 15th A. L. I., and who is now in France:

France, Feb. 25, 1915.

Dear Mother,—

I am writing you a few lines to let you know I am well and am hoping this finds you the same. Well, we were in the trenches for 48 hours and are now in billets, getting some rest for the next time. We were so close the first time that we colild hear them talking and singing. I like it fine up to the present and ate the rest of the cake Will sent me in the trenches, and it tasted alright. We lost a couple of the boys, but none from Belleville yet. We are all O.K. and have a good time. Be sure and remember me to all my friends and don't worry about me. I have received all the mail you have sent me so far. Well, Mother, I will have to close for this time. Hoping this finds you well, I remain,

Your loving son,

(No. 8191) WALTER CRAIG.

John Street Guild

A very enjoyable social evening and debate took place last evening, under the auspices of the Guild in John Street Sunday School Hall. The subject of debate "Resolved that a man with money can do more for the happiness of the world than a man of genius was ably supported by Mr. Hugh Rogers, Misses Marjorie Currie and Edith Tyrrel, while the negative was argued by Mr. Arthur Ferguson, Miss Ruth Sinclair and Mr. Raymond Snider. The judges were Miss Moore, Mr. Forin and Mr. A. J. MacLaren, who after careful deliberation gave their decision in favor of the negative. Miss Lillian Armstrong did duty as critic in a pleasant and efficient manner.

Piano solos of superior merit were given by Miss G. Springer and Miss Vera Jackson. Miss Isabel Adams and Gussie Hill received lavish applause for their recitations. A vocal duet was contributed by Mr. and Mrs. Currie. Mr. Timmerman was chosen chairman of the evening's progam and Mr. Arthur Rogers, chairman of the debate. Refreshments and social intercourse occupied the remainder of the evening.

Rupture Expert Here

Seeley, Who Fitted Czar of Russia, Called to Belleville.

F. H. Seeley of Chicago and Philadelphia, the noted truss expert, will be at the Quinte Hotel and will remain in Belleville Thursday only, March 18th. Mr. Seeley says: "The Spermatic Shield as now used and approved by the United States Government will not only retain any case of rupture perfectly, affording immediate and complete relief, but closes the opening in ten days on the average case. This instrument received the only award in England and in Spain, producing results without surgery, harmful injections, medical treatments or prescriptions. Mr. Seeley has documents from the United States Government, Washington, D.C., for inspection. All charity cases without charge, or if any interested call he will be glad to show same without charge or fit them if desired. Any one ruptured should remember the date and take advantage of this opportunity.

NERVOUS ORIGIN OF DISEASE

Lining up the vertebrae, establishing free movement between them, thus getting a better blood supply into the nerve centers in the spinal cord, and freeing the spinal nerves from pressure.

There are twenty-six bones which make up the spine. They are called vertebrae, nerves and blood vessels pass in and out, between each of these vertebrae. It can easily be understood that any displacement, however slight, puts pressure on these vessels and nerves, thus causing disturbance to the part of the body these nerves supply. For instance, the eleventh dorsal vertebrae, if rigid, tender, or put slightly out of position, is certain to cause kidney trouble. Any structural displacement of the group from the fifth to the ninth dorsal vertebrae, is sure to cause stomach trouble. Very many diseases can be traced to some spinal injury, caused by falls, blows, twists, heavy lifting, etc.

Osteopathy cures by removing the cause. A careful spinal examination is made, the trouble is located and corrected. Spinal examination free.

HARDWARES THREE MIDGETS TWO

Last evening, the fans at the arena were treated to one of the fastest games of the season. The ice was in prime condition, and although the game was late in getting started, every minute it was thoroughly enjoyed.

The Midgets had a goal-keeper from Brockville, Whitney, he was a "peach," while the Midget's rover, D. Whalen, was the star of the night. Phillips, in goal for the Hardware, played a good game, while Ted Whalen played a whale of a game.

Very little was done in the first twenty minutes. Each side laid off a man, on account of one of the players having to have his skate fixed. Ted Whalen scored for the Hardware, but Roblin, on a nice rush tied.

The first event in the second period was the penalizing of two Hardware men. Walt Roblin put the Midgets in the lead again, by the only combination of the evening, but before the bell rang the Hardware pulled up parallel again.

They were playing a six man game part of the last period, but the teams were pretty well fagged. A Hardware man was penalized just before they netted the winning goal.

In the first and second periods the Midgets played their opponets off their feet, Sullivan playing a good game at point, always there on checking and doing a bit of rushing.

Hardware—Goal, Phillips; defence, Flagler, J. Goyer; rover, Symons; center, M. Hitchon; wings, F. Goyer, T. Whalen.

DEPT. OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE, OTTAWA.

SEALED TENDERS (in duplicate) for the supply of Coal and Fuel Wood required to heat the Military Buildings at Kingston, Belleville, Port Hope, Cobourg, Peterborough, Ottawa, Brockville, Picton, Lindsay and Renfrew, Ont., for the year ending March 31, 1916, will be received up to Thursday, March 25, next. Each tender is to be marked 'Tender for Fuel,' and addressed to the Director of Contracts, Militia Headquarters, Ottawa.

Printed forms of tender containing full particulars may be obtained from the Director of Contracts, Militia Haedquarters, Ottawa, or at the office of the Officer Commanding, 3rd Division, Kingston, who will furnish all information required.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque, on a Canadian chartered Bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence, for five per cent. of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the party making the tender decline to sign a contract when called upon to do so. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

PIANO FACTORY DESTROYED BY FIRE

TORONTO, March 17.—Fire this morning destroyed the factory of the Mendelssohn Piano Co. on Adelaide street west.

Five British Ships Like The Elizabeth

Will Soon be Commissioned Forming Most Powerful Unit in the World

NEW YORK, March 16.—A broadside of the eight 15-inch guns that make up the main battery of England's new and now famous superdreadnought Queen Elizabeth weighs approximately 13,600 pounds, or a little more than six and one-half tons. Each projectile fired from one of the Queen Elizabeth's great guns weighs about 1,700 pounds, and the cost of shot in powder alone is between $700 and $800 It is estimated that the value of each gun is about $80,000, so that to arm the Queen Elizabeth with this greatest and most destructive of naval batteries cost Great Britain $640,000.

These statistics were compiled by an ordnance officer of the United States Navy, and they indicate the seriousness of the problem that confronts the German-commanded Turks in their efforts to stop the huge warship as it slowly batters its way through the Dardanelles.

The new United States Naval Year Book shows that Great Britain has five ships of the Queen Elizabeth class each of which should be in commission within the next few weeks. These five ships comprise a complete naval division which in offensive power constitutes the greatest and most destructive naval unit the world has ever known.

The ships of the unit, in addition to the Queen Elizabeth, are the Warspite, Barham, Valiant and Malaya, the last named being a gift to Great Britain from the federated Malay States. It is considered certain that the Warspite is already in commission, and it is also probable that the Barham is ready to take her place in the first line of battle. The Valiant and the Malaya are both reported more than 80 per cent. completed and should be ready by the first of next summer at the latest.

This new division of British superdreadnoughts will total in tonnage 137,500. The gerat 15-inch guns are so arranged that all can be fired in either broadside, which means that from this single division of ships could be hurled, if necessary, a combined broadside the projectile weight of which would be approximately 68,000 pounds, or about thirty-four tons. The cost of the smokeless powder that would be necessary in such a broadside would total approximately $28,000.

In the February issue of The Journal of the United States Naval Institute, published at Annapolis by the officers of the navy, there is a quotation from a recent article, dealing with the ships of the Queen Elizabeth class that appeared in a recent issue of The United Service Gazette of Great Britain.

"The warships coming nearest to the great British ships," says the Gazette, "will be the United States battleship New York, and the Rio de Janiero, while the German battleships of the 1912 programme will be much inferior in weight of broadside, estimated by experts to reach as far down as 80 per cent. The 25-knot speed of ships of the Warspite group will make them of the greatest strategical as well as tactical use to naval commanders during a war for a fast squadron of such formidable fighters will give the side to which they are attached a great advantage in nearly all conceivable circumstances. The six-inch guns forming their secondary batteries will be placed in highly protected turrets, and not mounted in batteries behind armored superstructures as in the Iron Duke type.

"There was a great outcry a short time back about the Empress of India experiments having been useless owing to the vessel's sinking before she could be got into harbor and thoroughly examined. We pointed out at the time that this conclusion was premature and that a great deal of information had, as a matter of fact, been gained by visits paid by gunnery experts to the ships between the series of attacks. As a result of these experiments we now see the 6-inch guns of the Warspite placed in turrets, as it was found that the 6-inch guns from one of the Town class of cruiser engaged in the attack on the old Empress played such havoc with her superstructure that it would have been impossible for men to have fought a secondary battery behind it. This result only confirmed the experience of the Japanese in the Sea of Japan, where the Russian crews were thoroughly demoralized by the fire from Admiral Togo's secondary guns."

The main battery of the superdreadnought New York, which is referred to by The United Service Gazette, consists of ten 14-inch guns, each of which fire a projectile weighing 1,400 pounds, or about 300 pounds less than the weight of the projectile hurled from the 15-inch guns of the Queen Elizabeth and the Warspite.

BRITAIN'S HERCULEAN TASK

The Official Eye Witness with the British Army has issued a warning against the suggestion that the Germans are a beaten nation. He says that they are still well organized, have abundant resources, are fed up with illusions, and are still confident of ultimate success. No intimation was needed of the magnitude of the task that is before the Allies, but, if there were, this surely supplies it. In addition there is also vivid indication that the area of the war will spread in the near future, and that countries now experiencing unrest in their attitude of neutrality will break in on one side or the other. This, of course, means further withdrawals from agricultural and industrial activity. It also indicates greater shortage in Europe of all kinds of foodstuffs, grain, vegetables and live stock, and of horses. This depletion will have to be made up from countries that are enjoying the blessings of peace. One of these is Canada. It is our bounden duty to see that Britain shall not, as far as preventable suffer from a lack of foodstuffs or of such other useful material as this country can produce. In other words both men and women are called upon to put forth their best efforts so that when the time arrives any deficiency can readily be met. The accomplishment of this does not necessarily imply extra labor, but it does particularly suggest more care in preparation of the soil and in the selection of seed, and in attention to the breeding and rearing of live stock. Towards this end the conferences promoted in connection with the Patriotism and Production campaign and the bulletins, pamphlets, records and reports that are to be had on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, will greatly help.

Regular $6.00 Brocaded Silk Corsets, $3.50

They are corsets made by the manufacturers of the famous D. & A. Corsets for their export trade. Unfortunately for themselves, but exceedingly fortunate for us and our customers, they had about 200 dozen pairs left on their hands, which they divided into lots of ten dozen each, and offered them to their best clients throughout Canada. We immediately accepted one of these lots and now offer them to our customers at the price suggested by the manufacturers, $3.50 pair. They are of brocaded silk, with silk embroidery and satin bow and lace at top, elastic bands at bottom of corset at back, 5 clasps and 2 hooks, 6 hose supporters, sizes 20 to 26 and regular $6.00 value for only $3.50 pair.

The Millinery Parlors
Are in Full Bloom

THE STYLE SECRETS ARE OUT. The New Millinery Styles were viewed by hundreds of admiring ladies on opening days. Scores bought and had their new Spring Hats laid away; but that does not diminish our extensive showing of New Millinery.

Our workrooms have sent out dozens of new models for your inspection this week, including some of the most stunning that we have yet displayed.

You are invited to see them.

MARRIAGE LICENSES

Marriage Licenses issued by P. Harrison at The Intelligencer Office or at residence, Lewis street.

Mrs. Wiseneighbour says:—

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "Eddy's" Washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday."

Mrs. Newlywed says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat, all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

HEARST HAS REACHED ACME OF NEUTRALITY

Echo de Paris Takes Fling at America's Millionaire Newspaper Publisher—No Profit Taking Sides—So Two Publications Become Out and Out for Teutons, Two Others Eloquently Supporting Allies

"Here's a story of neutrality which is an American story. Its hero is Monsieur Hearst, a notorious citizen of the United States, millionaire, and editor of several newspapers. Both positions ought to satisfy anyone nowadays when millions are generally lacking and American newspapers doing good business, but M. Hearst, who combines both, has not lost the edge of his financial appetite upon that account. No opportunity for making money leaves him indifferent. Everything indicates that he regards this war from a purely commercial standpoint. He owns, in fact, four great publications, the New York American, Deutches Journal, Harper's Bazaar, and the Cosmopolitan Magazine. The latter is represented in England by Nash's Magazine.

"At the outbreak of war Hearst, the millionaire decided it was indispensable to take sides in the conflict devastating Europe, a colorless paper being certain to lose readers. He accordingly adopted the following attitude: two of his papers became markedly Germanophile, while two others eloquently support the Allies. Thus Americans can find at London in Nash's, under the title "German atrocities in Belgium," a photograph they saw at New York before their departure in the Cosmopolitan differently entitled "Massacre effected by the Allies."

"Indeed, Hearst lacks neither ingenuity or business sense, but he overdoes it on the fourth of August, when he prints in the Deutsches Journal that the French attacked Germany before the declaration of war, while the same newspaper on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of September described imaginery atrocities committed by the French and Belgians; when it affirms on the 11th of December that cruel treatment by the English caused the death of forty German prisoners, or publishes on the 20th of December the text of a secret convention between the English and Belgians.

"But that does not matter to Hearst, he sells papers as one sells copper. He has all sorts for all casies. It is the acme of neutrality."

EAST ONTARIO ORANGEMEN IN SESSION

OTTAWA, March 18.—Special—The Grand Lodge of Ontario East opened in annual session here yesterday, with about 200 delegates in attendance. In the absence of the Grand Master, F. W. Forde of Ottawa, E. H. McLean of Bowmanville presided, and read the annual report of the Grand Master. Other addresses were given by the Grand Secretary, F. M. Clarke of Belleville; the Grand Treasurer, Duncan Monroe of Cornwall; T. S. Essery, Past Grand Master of Ontario West; E. H. Newcombe, Grand Master of Manitoba, and others.

The annual report of the Grand Master dealt with the bilingual question, Canada's participation in the war, and home rule.

In regard to the bilingual question the report said:

"Certain fanatics among the French-Canadians have stirred up an agitation with regard to the regulations of the Department of Education on this question, and many school boards have refused to obey them. In this city certain electors have brought actions in the courts to compel the French separate schools to do their duty in this matter, and have obtained a favorable judgment. The case has been appealed, and it is said will be carried to the Privy Council, but I am confident that in the end the Government's contention will be upheld, and eventually these schools will be entirely done away with."

Last night the annual banquet of the Grand Lodge was held. The chief speakers were Major-General Hughes, Minister of Militia; Sir Mackenzie Bowell, A. E. Fripp, K.C., M.P., W. F. Garland, M.P., H. B. Morphy, K.C., M.P., R. H. McElroy, M.P.P., and others. The session continued to-day.

NO INFORMATION LAID AGAINST TETRAULT

PETERBOROUGH, March 17.—Unless the O.H.A. lays information against Joe Tetrault, alias Joe Moinse the Montreal professional hockey player who figured on the forward line of the Peterborough intermediates this season, which resulted in the Petes being suspended by the provincial association, the local authorities will not endeavor to locate him. The O.H.A. wrote to County Crown Attorney Hatton and recommended that Tatroult be apprehended on the charge of fraud. Crown Attorney Hatton informed press representatives a few days ago that he had given the matter over to Chief Thompson, with instructions to locate the player. Today Chief Thompson stated that unless the O.H.A. lays information against Tetrault, no action will be taken. The chief remarked that in his opinion the O.H.A. would like him to go ahead with a "test case." He did not opine that it would be wise for the city to be at the expense of locating Tetrault and bringing him back to Peterborough, because the O.H.A. "thought" he could be prosecuted.

Barney Oldfield In Grand Finish

Averaged 67 Miles Per Hour—A Spectator's Leg Torn off

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Mar. 18.—Special.)—Out of one of the most dramatic and thrilling finishes ever witnessed in California motor racing, Barney Oldfield came to victory today over the new Venice speedway. Without a stop in the 301-mile grand prix, or even a gear shift, the veteran speed master was ready in the final moments to close with the rush of a whirlwind the gaps which fate in its most freakish mood opened before him. Oldfield averaged 67 miles an hour.

Half a minute behind Oldfield was William Carlson. But for one seven-second stop he, too would have made the speed journey from start to finish without a call at the pit. And then came G. E. Ruckstell for third honors, as a climax to a most sensational and determined drive after a long pit stop.

Dave Lewis, a few minutes before the finish, was hailed as the certain winner, and, with only two more laps to go, was forced to stop because of a broken oil-cup. The accident lost him the $3,500 prize.

WOMAN LEAPS FROM WINDOW TO DEATH

TORONTO, March 17.—Elizabeth Miles, 25 years of age, an inmate of the Haven, 320 Seaton street, committed suicide last night, by leaping out of a fourth storey window of the building to the ground. She was dead when found by detectives a short while afterwards. The body is at the Morgue and an inquest will in all probability be held. The dead woman was single and had been in the institution for two years and recently, it is claimed, her mind began to weaken and during the past few weeks she had been seized with violent fits of insanity. Early last night she threw a jug of water over her attendants. A special watch was kept over her but in some manner she evaded the attendants and shortly after 8.30 p.m. was missed. The police were notified and Detectives Elliott and Mulholland were sent to investigate. They searched the ground underneath the woman's window and found her dead body. The woman was Scottish and as far as is known has no relatives here.

"YOU DO NOT FIGHT" SAID WOUNDED PRUSSIAN "YOU MURDER"

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 18.—A report of "Eyewitness" given out today by the Official Bureau, says prisoners who have been all through the war declare they never experienced such a bombardment as that which preceded the assault upon Neuve Chapelle. "You do not fight," said one wounded Prussian officer; "you murder. My regiment never had a chance from the first. Nothing could live under such fire." The resentment of prisoners against the British artillery has frequently been expressed. One officer stated that three German princes, including Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern, a cousin of the Kaiser, were in a regiment at Neuve Chapelle, and he believed all were killed.

Germans Release Canada's Trade Commissioner

C. F. Just, Reaching London, Says Military Decrees Exaggerate Food Shortage

LONDON, March 17.—Mr. C. F. Just, the Canadian trade commissioner at Hamburg, and a brother of Sir Hartmann Just, of the Colonial Office, has just reached London as one of a party of liberated Englishmen. Although detained in Hamburg since the outbreak of the war in August, Mr. Just says he has nothing to complain of as he was on parole with a fair amount of liberty.

As regards the food situation in Germany, the Canadian trade commissioner seemed to think that the military decrees rather exaggerate the suposed shortage. Making regulations on every possible occasion is a feature of the German national life, Mr. Just said.

Another member of the party said it was now recognized by intelligent burghers that Germany was not marching to victory. In fact the people had sobered down and were beginning to realize that the German programme was not being carried out.

HAS NOT HEARD OF THE WAR YET

Small Island off South Africa a Possession Still Ignorant of Conflict

LONDON March 17.—There are still places which have not heard of the world war after nearly seven months of conflict. The Secretary of the Postmaster-General, in a casual report, mentions the fact that Tristan da Cunha, a group of British Islands in the South Atlantic, has not received a mail since the otubreak of the war.

These islands are entirely dependent upon chance communication from South Africa, 1,500 miles away. Often the inhabitants are a year without communication from the outside world. The population is only about eighty in number, mainly descendants of shipwrecked sailors and all English.

Another place that has not heard of the war is Yquitos, in Eastern Peru. Its letters are taken by British mail steamers up the Amazon to Manaos, and thence across South America. Yquitos is only a few hunred miles from Lima, the Pacific capital of Peru, but the wall of the Andes is an almost impassible barrier.

BELGIAN ARMY CROSSES YSER NEAR DIXMUDE

On Other Bank of River For First Time in Six Months—Make Good Headway—Advanced Hundred Yards Over a Length of Six Miles

NORTH OF FRANCE, March 18.—Important events that have been happening at Neuve Chapelle ought not to blind us to the magnificent achievements of the Belgian army during the last few days. The Belgians are making distinct and continuous headway against the Germans. In particular, they scored quite a remarkable success between Nieuport and Dixmude. One of the latest communiques informed us in the usual laconic style of ground that had been gained at Shoerbakke Village, half way between Nieuport and Dixmude. As a matter of fact, since March 12 the Belgians have crossed the Yser between Dixmude and St. Georges and have established themselves in German trenches, abandoned by their former occupants, as a result of the particularly efficient fire of the Belgian artillery. The mere fact that the Belgian infantry succeeded in occupying the German first line trenches on the Yser is a very remarkable military fact, especially so when one considers that these trenches are situated in the midst of floods. The whole region is cut up by innumerable channels, either secondary streams or the many branches of the Yser, or ditches or small drainage canals. To reach the German trenches, therefore, it was necessary to build roads yard by yard for the troops to march along. Naturally this roadmaking has been very dangerous for those engaged in it, exposed as they were continually to German fire. Nevertheless, by sheer perseverance this amazing feat has been accomplished; at this moment a little pathway made of bundles of twigs and planks leads from the former Belgian advance lines to the German trenches, which have just been taken. At a number of points the enemy retired of its own accord without resistance, and at other points the bayonet had to be called into play. This general advance of some hundred yards over a length of five of six miles had a splendid effect on the morale of the Belgian troops, who for the first time since the end of October set foot on Belgian soil on the other side of the Yser. This success is the more encouraging as it was obtained with relatively small loss of life.

Canadian Officer Killed in Fighting

LONDON, March 18.—(Special)—The British casualty list for the five days from March 10 to March 14, inclusives, during which the battles of Neuve Chapelle and St. Eloi were fought, shows that 112 officers were killed or died of wounds, and that 193 officers were wounded or are missing.

The list of casualties among the men has not been published as yet, nor have any figures been given out, but some competent critics place it at about two-thirds of those suffered by the Germans, which Field Marshal Sir John French, the British commander in chief, said were between 17,000 and 18,000.

One Canadian officer was killed in the fighting and three Canadian officers wounded.

Radius of Activity

Notes Made Public—President Wilson About to Launch One More Protest

WASHINGTON, March 18.—(Special)—Six diplomatic notes were made public tonight by the state department constituting the entire correspondence of the last few weeks between the United States and Germany, and between the United States and Great Britain and France, relative to the abandonment of submarine attacks on merchant ships, the shipment of contraband and foodstuffs to civilians in a belligerent country, the use of neutral flags by belligerent merchantmen, the removal of mines, and the proclamation of a virtual blockade by the allies against Germany.

The communications revealed that the United States Government, realising the difficulties of maintaining an effective blockade by a close guard of an enemy coast on account of the newly developed activity of submarines, asked that "a radius of activity" be defined. Great Britain and France replied with the announcement that the blockade would not be conducted "outside of European waters, including the Mediterranean."

The definition of a "radius" of activity" for the allied fleet in European waters, including the Mediterranean, is the first intimation of the geographical limits of the blockade. Its limits were not given more exactly, the allies claim, because Germany was equally indefinite in proclaiming all the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland a "war zone."

Karlsruhe Sank After Explosion

German Cruiser is Said to Have Been Broken in Two—Fate Kept Secret

LONDON, March 18.—(Special)—Reuter's Copenhagen correspondent sends a story of the sinking of the German cruiser Karlsruhe, taken from The Stifts-Tidende, which asserts that it obtained the story from an authoritative source.

According to the story, the crew of the Karlsruhe were having tea one evening when a sudden explosion broke the cruiser in two. One half sank immediately, carrying down part of the crew with it. The other half floated for some time, which enable between 150 and 200 men to be rescued by an accompanying steamer. This steamer reached a German port with the survivors, who were sworn to secrecy concerning the sinking of the cruiser.

ROYAL BLACK PRECEPTORY

OTTAWA, March 18.—(Special)—Officers of the Royal Black Preceptory of Eastern Ontario were today elected as follows: Grand Master H. A. Graham, Kingston; Deputy Grand Master, J. W. Featherston, Ottawa; Assistant Grand Master, T. K. Allan, Kemptville; Chaplain, Rev. John Puttenham, Eganville; Deputy Chaplain, Rev. Geo. Nickle, Napanee; Assistant Deputy Chaplain, J. D. Stanley, Ottawa, and William Reynolds, Foxboro; Censors, W. C. Reid, Belleville, and W. J. Hill, Madoc; Standard-bearers, R. B. Allan and W. G. Burke; Committee—W. Dawson, Napanee; J. B. Lowrie, Frankford, James Moore, Eganville; John Smith, Omemee; G. W. Taylor, Kemptville; E. Atchett, Crookston; George Keene, Queensboro.

CONTINUING TO PROGRESS ON YSER

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 18.—This afternoon's official statement says: The Belgian army continued its progress on the Yser. Its artillery bombarded one of the enemy's convoys on the road from Dixmude to Lessen.

From the Lys to the Oise there was an artillery action. The enemy bombarded in particular a spur of the hill at Notre Dame de Lorette and the villages of Carnoy and Maricourt.

There is nothing new in the operations in the Champagne region.

BASIL BOOTH WAS SHOT AND KILLED

(Canadian Press Special)

UXBRIDGE, Ont., March 18.—Basil Booth, aged 16, was shot and killed last night by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of Guy Williamson, 19 years of age, at Siloam, five miles from here. The boys were hunting.

THE KAISER HAS OPENED A SECRET WAR CHEST

Lack of Gold Made Apparent by Discovery of Old Coins—Sent Back to London—Opinion Expressed Germans in Extreme Straits for Gold Coinage

LONDON, Mar 18.—(Special.)—The Times says that Germany, despite the cheerful statements of her financial experts as to the adequacy of her gold reserves, has apparently been compelled to open the secret war chest, the hoard of gold kept for any warlike emergency, in the strong fortress of Spandau, near Berlin. Originally the war chest, Reichscatz contained thirty million dollars, which was reserved from the indemnity paid by France in 1872, after Franco-Prussian war.

When that sum was placed in the Julius Tower at Spandau, it comprised a considerable proportion of gold in English sovereigns. A considerable number of these coins have now found their way back to one of the big joint stock banks in London, showing that the hoard which for 43 years has lain untouched has now been drawn upon.

The bankers who received the gold by way of Scandinavia, a fact which might suggest that it was used to pay for imports other than armament were at once strucy by the fact that they had received a number of new unworn sovereigns bearing the date of 1872, but the presumption that the money came from the treasure house of Spandau was strengthened by the surprising fact that the original Band of England labels of 1872 were found on some of the bags containing the coins. Apparently this consignment of English gold had lain unopened at Spandau since that year. Bankers yesterday, expressed some surprise that no effort had been made to conceal the place of origin of the gold by the removal of the old Bank of England labels as the knowledge that the war chest is being drawn upon might readily, when it became public, be construed as symtomatic of Germany's position in regard to gold supplies.

AGENT IN SEATTLE IN PLOT TO BRIBE

Consul Muller and Other Alleged Tools of Ambassador Bernstorff—Sought Submarine Tip—Canada's Purchase of Submarines Has Sequel in Four Arrests

SEATTLE, Wash., March 18.—(Special)—Dr. William Muller, imperial German consul at Seattle, and his secretary, B. M. Schultz, were served with notice of arrest today at the consulate. They are charged with conspiracy in attempting to corruptly influence John Murdock, an employe of the Seattle Construction and Drydock Co., by inducing him to sell business secrets of his employers.

Consul Muller and his secretary are accused by the State of Washington of offering Murdock a cash consideration to supply them with information bearing out Ambassador Bernstorff's charge that the Seattle Corporation was shipping "knock-down" submarines to the British Government via British Columbia.

The information against the German representatives, filed by Alfred H. Lundin, county prosecuting attorney, jointly charged them and Dan Tarnisasky, a free lance detective, with conspiracy.

Consul Muller denied tonight that he had any agreement with Murdock or the detective to purchase anything, nor did he arrange to have them steal papers from the construction company. He declared that Tarnisasky approached him with a statement that he had information that submarines were being built here for the British navy, but that he had dealt with the detective only so far as was necessary to determine whether there was any truth in the report. The consul expressed confidence in a prompt dismissal of the charge against him.

Murdock and the detective were arrested last night on a joint grand larceny complaint. The warrants for the arrest of Consul Muller and his secretary were served through their counsel.

In a statement said to have been made to the prosecuting attorney, Murdock said the negotiations for the delivery of the information said to have been sought by Consul Muller were still pending when he was arrested. He had originally demanded $1,520, he said, but later agreed to accept $1,000. He asserted that although he had certain alleged information ready for delivery at a conference, held at the consulate last evening, there was a hitch over money and the conference came to naught.

BIG WARSHIPS CAN DEFY FIRE ALONG THE STRAITS

LONDON, March 18.—(Special.)—A casualty list, issued by the admiralty last night, discloses that in the fighting in the Dardanelles Saturday night the light cruiser Amethyst, which, according to an Athens despatch made a dash through the straits as far as Nagara, had 23 men killed and 19 men severely and 18 men slightly wounded.

The battleship Ocean had two men killed and the battleship Prince George two men wounded, while two trawlers, between them, had three men killed and two wounded.

It is presumed here that Vice-Admiral Carden sent the cruiser on this risky mission to unmask any concealed batteries which the Turks might have located along the straits and which the allied fleets had not destroyed when they bombarded the forts.

Naval experts say that the bows of the Amethyst could be cushioned so that she would receive no damage from coming into contact with mines, and in their opinion her success proves that heavily armored ships could at the present time penetrate the straits as guns which could not sink a light protected cruiser would make little impression on battleships.

GERMANS CHARGE RUSSIANS WITH PILLAGE AND PLUNDER OF VILLAGES

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 18—A German official statement says: In the Eastern theatre Russian attacks on German positions between Pissa and Orzye rivers in Northern Poland, as well as northeast of Przasnysz, continued yesterday without success. West of the Skwa river we took nine hundred prisoners and east of the Skwa one thousand prisoners and four machine guns. The hordes of the Russian Imperial Militia gained a cheap victory by invading the most northern corner of East Prussia in the direction of Nemel. They pillaged and burned villages and estates. As a retaliatory measure towns on Russian territory occupied by us will be compelled to pay large sums. For every village burned down by these Russian hordes on German territory, and for each estate destroyed, these villages or estates on Russian territory occupied by us will be sacrificed to flames. All damaged caused by fire in Nemel will be answered by the destruction by fire of the Russian government buildings at Suwalki and other provincial capitals in German hands.

CAPTAIN HATHERLY KILLED

Master of Mongolian Struck by a Hatch Beam at Halifax

HALIFAX, March 17.—Captain J. W. Hatherly of the Allan liner Mongolian was killed this morning when a hatch beam struck him. The Mongolian is undergoing repairs in drydock, and Captain Hatherly was down in the hold inspecting the work. Captain Hatherly was 48 years of age, and leaves a wife and two children in Glasgow. He had been on the Mongolian two years, and sailed between British ports and Philadelphia.

ANNOUNCEMENT

THE PATRIOTIC MASS MEETING which was to be held at Griffin's Opera House on Friday Evening has been postponed until Tuesday Evening, March 23rd. The Committee in charge have changed the date to accommodate some of the speakers who are to be brought to Belleville to inaugurate the Local Campaign for the Patriotic Fund. The names of the speakers, who are the foremost orators of the Dominion of Canada, will be announced in to-morrow's Intelligencer. Remember the date, MARCH 23rd. Belleville must wake up and get in line with the other Patriotic Cities, of Ontario, so let no able-bodied citizen of Belleville be absent from Griffin's Opera House next Tuesday night.

GOD SAVE THE KING

Within The Military Circle

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

KINGSTON

The four machine guns for the 21st Battalion are being used daily on the ranges, and splendid time is being made in setting up the guns and making them ready for action. Live ammunition was used on Monday.

Mrs. William Leal, Peterborough is the mother of three soldier sons, one with the first contingent in France and two training with the 21st Battalion. Their grandfather, Sergt. Holly, of the 64th Staffordshire Regiment was a veteran of the Indian Mutiny.

The recruiting for the fourth contingent is going along rapidly. The men are being drilled by the officers and are attached to the third contingent battalions. The 38th Battalion has now 1,167 men and the 39th Battalion 1,322 men. The 26th Battery has thirty-four men attested, and the 25th Battery 124 men.

In the orders issued on Monday night, over 700 names of Canadian soldiers who have been discharged are published. There is a great variety of reasons for the dismissals, such as inefficiency, minor, medically unfit, refusing to be inoculated and refusing to be attested. A long list is published of the names of men in England. Only one R.C.H.A. man appears, and he was medically unfit.

Col. Biggar, in a message to the A. D. of S. and T., asks if one farrier-sergeant, one saddle-tree maker, three saddlers, eight shoeing-smiths, four fitters for telegraph can be supplied for overseas service, and if they are acceptable they will be sent to the front immediately.

The canvas shoes issued to the 21st Battalion are intended for deck use on board the transport, so that the men will be able to drill on the decks without much danger of falling.

BELLEVILLE.

Orderly officer for tomorrow—Lieut. P. R. White. Next for duty—Lieut. B. K. Allen.

The undermentioned men, having joined the Battalion on the 15-3-15, are taken on the strength accordingly and posted to "D" Coy.:—

No. A12219 Pte. W. H. Bedard.
No. A12211 Pte. J. D. McEchern.
No. A12194 Pte. J. A. Maguire.

The secret of the quality in "SALADA" packets is in the immensity of the sales. The more people who buy "SALADA," the smaller becomes the necessary profit per pound, and consequently, the greater value it is possible to give you for your money. With the bulk tea merchant the temptation is to make a greater profit at your expense by supplying an inferior tea.

Reach Limit Of Resistance

BUCKHAREST, March 18.—(Special.)—Sharp fighting took place last night, the object of the Russians being to draw the Austrians in the direction of Bojan. The Russians made effective use of their artillery, including powerful mortars, doing terrible destruction in the ranks of the enemy. It would appear as if the limit of the Austrians' resistance has been reached, and there are indications that the enemy is lacking in measures to ensure retreat.

Colonel Watson Lost Orderly

Crushed to Death in Dug-Out While Colonel Was Out Inspecting Trenches

QUEBEC, March 17—Lt.-Col. David Watson, of Quebec, commanding the Second Battalion, into which he recently took over some sixty or seventy Quebec soldiers, formerly of the 12th Battalion, writes to say that his men on the 20th of February had then been four days and nights in the trenches and had earned great praise for the manner in which they had carried out their duties. He also tells how Private Harry Cardew, formerly employed in the Chronicle press room, was killed.

In a letter to date February 20th, Col. Watson says that he is writing in a dug-out which is used as a protection against shell fire. Commenting on the remarkable accuracy and precision of the German gunners, he remarks that there is a building some 75 yards away from the dug-out and that it was shelled by the Germans on the previous evening, some fifty shells having found a billet there one after the other. It was a miracle, says the Colonel, that the hundred men or so who were in the building when the shelling started, had been able to escape unscathed. After he had got them out he had watched the shells from the dug-out in fascinated wonder. Later, when it was dark, he had visited the building and found the roof perforated like a sieve.

Col. Watson then goes on to tell of the life in the trenches, saying that he had been present on the following day when the Canadians had lost one killed, while twelve had been wounded. The bullet which had killed the man had come through the earthen breastwork, death being instantaneous.

"As I write," says the Colonel, "the bullets are zipping overhead and the artillery is just starting up again."

Col. Watson then tells of a visit which he made to Belgium, where he had watched the work of the German howitzers in the distance.

Telling of the death of his orderly, Private Harry Cardew, Col. Watson says that when he returned to his dug-out, after inspecting the trenches, he found Cardew dead there. The metal roof of the dug-out had caved in and killed him instantly.

DEATHS.

BLEECKER—Mrs. Bleecker, wife of Mr. H. G. Bleecker, County Supt. of Roads, died at her home in Sidney last evening, aged 67.
The funeral will be from the family residence in 3rd Concession of Sidney on Saturday 20th inst at 2 p.m.

H. O. WILKINS WOUNDED

F. W. Wilkins, D.T.S., Norwood, received word yesterday of his son, Lieut. H. O. Wilkins, being wounded. The cablegram does not give particulars.

BATTERY RECRUITS

Capt. McL. Forin of this city, who has been instrumental in securing new recruits for the 34th Battery here, left this morning for Kingston in company with a number whom he had secured as members of the battery. The new recruits will be drilled at Kingston, and prepared for active service at the front if they are requested.

LODGE ROOM OPENED

Under the auspices of Belleville Lodge, No. 81, and Mizpah Lodge No. 127 I.O.O.F., an at home was held last evening in the new quarters of the lodges in Alberta Block, Front street. There was a large number of members of both lodges in attendance, in addition to the sisters who are members of the Rebekah Lodge. The latter provided the bountiful spread and it is needless to state that all thoroughly enjoyed same. The evening was a most pleasant one in every respect and nothing was left undone to make all present feel at home. After some preliminary business a dance was indulged in, all who participated in it enjoying themselves.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. (Dr.) Kimmel, who has been visiting in Chicago, has returned home.

Mrs. Robertson and son of Winnipeg, are visiting her sister Mrs. DeLisle, Foster avenue.

Mr. Eli Wickett of Toronto, a former well known resident of this city, was here to-day renewing old acquaintances.

Mr. P. J. Wims is in receipt of a bunch of shamrock from his old school mate and friend, Mr. M. F. Quigley, Ballymote, County Slago, Ireland.

Killed and Wounded in Action

A regrettable error made bad reading of the following article in yesterday's issue of The Intelligencer. We reproduce the item in corrected form.

Word was received in the city this morning that Captain Abell in command of F. Company, to which the Belleville boys are attached, had been wounded in the left foot whilst in action at the front. The Captain is at present in the hospital at Rouen.

It was also learned that two members of F Company had been killed (names not given) but they were not Belleville men.

WEDDING BELLS.

MUNRO—ELLIOTT

The marriage of Miss Winnifred Luella Elliott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Elliott of Port Granby, Ontario, and Dr. Robert Walter Munro of Smithville, Ont., was quietly solemnized on Wednesday afternoon, March 17th, at 3 o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Smith, 62 Alexander street, sister of the bride. Rev. A. R. Sanderson officated. The bride, who was given away by her father, was handsomely gowned in white silk crepe meteor, with trimmings of rose pointe and seed pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and lilly of the valley. As the bride entered the drawing room Mrs. Sanderson played Lohengrin's wedding march, and at the conclusion of the service Mrs J. W. Kinnear sang "O Promise Me." After the recherche luncheon, served in the dining room, Dr. and Mrs. Munro left on the evening train for Ottawa and points east. The bride's costume de voyage was a tailored suit of beet root gabardine cloth, and a sand shade hat. They will reside in Smithville.

DEATH ROLL.

MRS. H. G. BLEECKER

Mrs. Bleecker, wife of Mr. H. G. Bleecker, County Superintendent of Roads, died at her home in Sidney last evening, aged 67 years. Deceased was a lady who was well known and highly esteemed in the neighbor- in which she resided. Mrs. Bleecker had been ill for some time and her demise was by no means unexpected. The heartfelt sympathy of a host of friends will be extended to Mr. Bleecker in this his hour of sore bereavement.

Local Legal

Trial Court—Before Falconbridge C. J:

McAllister v. Dafoe—E. G. Porter, K. C., and F. H. White (Belleville) for plaintiff. F. E. O'Flynn (Belleville) for defendant. Action of ejectment to recover possesion of lots 19 and 20 in 5th concession Herschell, county of Hastings.

Judgment: The defendant is a child of the forest, whose Indian name is Kijikomaniton. This land was patented to his father, a chief, in the reign of King George IV., who gave the patent to his son. It is elementary that a gift of real estate connot be sustained as a donatio mortis causa, for that extends only for personality, so that defendant's only paper title is as one of the five heirs-at-law of his father.

Plaintiff's paper title, apart from a tax deed, is a quit claim deed from one Mary Ann Benwa (Benoit), nee Baptiste or Defoe. By way of assignment or quit claim to said Mary A. Benoit there are produced some "scraps of paper" not under seal purporting to be signed by heirs or next of kin of the patentee.

I find that there was sufficient distress on the occupied land to satisfy the total amount of the taxes charged against same, and the sale and the tax deed are therefore invalid.

These poor people (defendant and his family) also remitted by postoffice order to J. Perry, a bailiff, at Maynooth the sum of $22, in response to a Division Court summons for taxes.

I find that defendant has proved his title by length of possession. A considerable portion of the peninsula was fenced in "from water to water," and he exercised acts of ownership over the other parts of the lots sufficient to perfect his title. Action dismissed with costs. Fifteen days' stay.

Made Long Trip to Go To Front

Two Recruits for 42nd Highlanders Travelled 300 Miles on Snowshoes

MONTREAL, March 17.—Two recruits were yesterday received at the 42nd Highlanders who had put their loyalty to a very severe test, having travelled about 300 miles on snowshoes from the far north before they got to a place where they could make better connections. The two men were Scotch lads who had been employed, one as a carpenter and the other as a cook, with the men working on the terminals for the Hudson Bay port business.

It was some months ago that word of the war reached their camp and the two young Scots lads decided that they had better go to the front. There was only one means of communication, snowshoes, and they took tickets by that route, heading south, with camp outfit and sufficient food to last them through. Unfortunately, after they had got well on their way, one of the men was taken ill with a severe cold, and the two had to make camp in the wilderness, one waiting while the other got over his illness, after which they started out again.

The only other trouble that the volunteers met with was that they lost their way, but as there was plenty of way they kept on going south, and eventually landed at Cochrane, on the National Transcontinental, where they were able to get in touch with civilization again and take train for Montreal.

Yesterday the two men arrived in Montreal and had no difficulty in passing the medical examination. When they appeared before Lt.-Col. Cantile he enquired how long they had been in Montreal, when they replied about three and a half hours. They had taken just sufficient time to wash up and get away from their northern outfit before enlisting. Both were found not only fit, but as hard as nails and they were promptly sworn in and sent to the barracks at the old Tooke building.

While these two men probably won the record for hard work to get to the new Highland battalion they did not win out for distance, several men having recruited from British Columbia, while a number of Scotsmen in the United States have also joined.

Recruiting has gone on fairly well with the battalion during the past few days, between 20 and 30 men a day having been passed. The battalion has now over 500 men on its roster, of whom 150 are in barracks at the old Tooke building, the rest being allowed to live at home until the battalion is regularly mobilized.

While recruiting in the city has gone on well during the past week it is felt by Lt.-Col. Cantile that more men should be got in. Efforts will therefore be made during the next few weeks to get men from the Eastern Townships and from other districts where Scotchmen or their descendants are living so as to complete the establishment.

The battalion is at present in the formative stage, and will not be called out for the parade when H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught comes to Montreal on the 23rd. Companies are being formed at the barracks, but they are not yet filled out, and it will be some time before the battalion is ready for a march out. They have not yet been supplied with rifles, while the uniforms are still being made. It is expected that within a few weeks the battalion will be in shape to make a showing, when they will probably move to the barracks on Peel street, after the 24th have moved out, and will then start regular battalion training for active service.

JUNIOR Y.M.C.A. NOTES

Several of the Y.M.C.A. boys are working hard for the prizes in the membership campaign, being held this week.

The boys will meet for Bible Study at 7 o'clock Friday night. Every junior is invited.

There will be three interesting games of basketball in the Sunday School League Friday night, commencing at 8 o'clock.

The Fathers' and Sons' Banquet will be held Friday night, March 26th. In all probability Mr. Geo. A. Warburton, Metropolitan Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. will be the guest and speaker.

WHAT DYSPEPTICS SHOULD EAT

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE

"Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble are, nine times out of ten, due to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should whenever possible avoid eating food that is acid in its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Unfortunately, such a rule eliminates most foods which are pleasant to the taste as well as those which are rich in blood, flesh and nerve building properties. This is the reason why dyspeptics and stomach sufferers are usually so thin, emaciated and lacking in that vital energy which can only come from a well fed body. For the benefit of those sufferers who have been obliged to exclude from their diet all starchy, sweet or fatty food, and are trying to keep up a miserable existence on glutten products, I would suggest that you should try a meal of any food or foods which you may like, in moderate amount, taking immediately afterwards a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot or cold water. This will neutralize any acid which may be present or which may be formed, and instead of the usual feeling of uneasiness and fullness, you will find that your food agrees with you perfectly. Bisurated magnesia is doubtless the best food corrective and antacid known. It has no direct action on the stomach; but by neutralizing the acidity of the food contents, and thus removing the source of the acid irritation which inflames the delicate stomach lining, it does more than could possibly be done by any drug or medicine. As a physician, I believe in the use of medicine whenever necessary, but I must admit that I cannot see the sense of dosing an inflamed and irritated stomach with drugs instead of getting rid of the acid—the cause of all the trouble. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist, eat what you want at your next meal, take some of the bisurated magnesia as directed above, and see if I'm not right."

What the world requiries is self enforcing international law.

PROLONGATION OF THE WAR

The Official Eye Witness with the British Army has issued a warning against the suggestion that the Germans are a beaten nation. He says that they are still well organized, have abundant resources, are fed up with illusions, and are still confident of ultimate success. No intimation was needed of the magnitude of the task that is before the Allies, but, if there were, this surely supplies it. In addition there is also very vivid indication that the area of the war will spread in the near future, and that countries now experiencing unrest in their attitude of neutrality will break in on one side or the other. This, of course, means further withdrawals from agricultural and industrial activity. It also indicates greater shortage in Europe of all kinds of foodstuffs, grain, vegetables and live stock, and of horses. This depletion will have to be made up from countries that are enjoying the blessings of peace. One of these is Canada. It is our bounden duty to see that Britain shall not, as far as preventable, suffer from a lack of foodstuffs or of such other useful materials as this country can produce. In other words, both men and women are called upon to put forth their best efforts so that when the time arrives any deficiency can readily be met. The accomplishment of this does not necessarily imply extra labor, but it does particularly suggest more care in preparation of the soil and in the selection of seed, and in attention to the breeding and rearing of live stock. Towards this end the conferences promoted in connection with the Patriotism and Production campaign and the bulletins, pamphlets, records and reports that are to be had on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, will greatly help.

BRITAIN'S BLOCKADE

When the German government gave notice of its submarine blockade of Great Britain and warned neutrals that neutral shipping also would be liable to be torpedoed, the justification offered was that it was necessary retaliation for Great Britain's treatment of non-contraband commerce with Germany. The German Government, in a note to the United States, complained that neutrals were not properly protecting their right to carry on non-contraband trade. It was alleged that Great Britain, by interference with non-contraband neutral trade, was trying to starve the non-combatant population of Germany and that this was contrary to international law and the laws of humanity.

"If this representation of the case had been true, the order in council published by the British government yesterday would make no change in the situation already existing. It forbids all direct commerce to or from German ports. It also forbids carrying to neutral ports any goods that are the property of or are destined for enemies of Great Britain and it forbids taking from neutral ports goods that are of German origin or ownership. Provision is made for taking vessels which attempt forbidden trade before prize courts and for compensation for non-contraband goods seized.

"This order gets its force from the fact that the German representations made in justification of the submarine blockade were not correct. Non-contraband trade with Germany, either direct or through neutral ports, had not at that time been stopped, nor had it been subjected to very great interference. Germany probably received more wheat from the United States during December than did Great Britain and France combined. Germany received great quantities of cotton and quantities of other non-contraband goods. The United States received at the port of New York in January almost as heavy imports of German goods as in January, 1914. It is because the neutrals actually have been carrying on a big non-contraband trade with Germany that the British order in council hurts. It hurts Germany and it hurts the neutrals.

"It is just to remember, however, that this British order is retaliation for an act by Germany that is in violation of international law and that places neutral shipping on exactly the same basis as the shipping of Germany's enemies. Moreover, it must also be kept in mind that Germany had not, as she claimed, the justification that Great Britain already had cut off her non-contraband trade. The German order was not retaliation for a breach of international law. It is the British order which is entitled to such justification as the right of retaliation can give. Germany, furthermore, has shown that her submarine campaign is to be carried out in deadly earnest, not only as it affects the citizens and the property of her enemies, but as affecting the citizens and property of neutrals. One Swedish vessel, plainly marked to show her nationality, has been torpedoed and sunk, with a loss of six lives. One Norwegian vessel has also been sunk, probably by a submarine. The United States has lost two ships, with one life, by striking floating mines, set adrift in disregard of international law. Other neutrals have lost more ships from the same cause. And as evidence that this policy toward neutrals is not even limited to the prescribed waters around the British isles, the United States and Holland have each lost a ship in the South Atlantic by the deliberate act of German cruisers.

"Germany has by these means made herself so great a menace to neutrals that the neutrals are left in no position to make anything more than the most formal protests against the British order in council. How can neutrals show a stern face to a belligerent which proposes merely to divert their ships and cargoes from the destination for which they were intended, and to buy them herself, so long as their ships are being sunk and crews drowned or left to escape as best they can by the other belligerents?"

CURRENT COMMENT

Montreal News: "The Prinz Eitel Friederich will remain in Hampton Roads for three weeks—and then some more, or be sunk by British cruisers."

The Eitel Friederich probably knew before she came into Newport News that British and French cruisers were waiting to seize her on the open seas—which is another reason why she probably will conclude to become a permanent guest.

A Reform contemporary insinuates that the war tax will not be used for the purpose intended, but for paying off "a dead horse." Presumably it refers to that monstrous extravagance saddled on the country by Laurier, the National Transcontinental Railway.

Sergeant Walter Gow of Winnipeg has the right idea with regard to recruiting literature. Writing from the front he lays special emphasis on the fact that at his billet there are sixteen girls engaged in teaching him French. Who wouldn't be stirred to enlist with such a prospect held out?

Buffalo Express: "A recruiting officer at Indianapolis has been summoned for contempt of court for criticizing a local judge who sentenced a prisoner to enlist in the army. The war department intends to back up the officer and defend the fair name of the army, as, indeed, it should for the sake of the decent enlisted men."

The national debts of the world, according to the last compilation made, amounted to a total of 42 billion dollars, an increase of 20 per cent. in the past decade. The interest and other charges amount to 1,782 million dollars, which works out at slightly over 4 per cent.

Hamilton Spectator: "The Globe mendaciously accuses the Dominion Government of "stuffing up the public services with thousands of unnecessary employes." Why not be specific and mention a few? It is its privilege to investigate and publish. Here in Hamilton, at least, it will find a very barren field for its nosing expedition."

Montreal Gazette: "Sir Robert Borden, in the House of Commons, yesterday, announced that a week before Parliament opened he had informed Sir Wilfrid Laurier of the details of the Government programme including copies of all bills, except, of course, that dealing with the war taxes. The complaint made during the course of the budget debate that the Opposition was not consulted or taken into the confidence of the Cabinet in connection withthe sessional proposals was not just as well based as it might have been."

BORDEN VIGOROUSLY ANSWERS HIS CRITICS

Premier's Defence on Tariff Increase Was Made With Spirit—Budget Debate Ends—Bennett's Aggressive Utterances Stirred Conservatives to Great Enthusiasm

OTTAWA, March 17.—Many able speeches and several sharp encounters across the floor of the house marked the concluding day of the budget debate. At an early hour this morning Solicitor-General Meighen was summing up for the government, and the closing gun of the opposition is to be fired by Hon. George P. Graham. The house wil then divide upon the Laurier amendment, condemning the tariff increases as unnecessary and lamenting the impairment of the British preference.

The debate was opened shortly after the house convened this afternoon by the prime minister in a vigorous and aggressive speech, which roused his followers to great enthusiasm. Even a greater ovation came from the government benches when R. B. Bennett of Calgary savagely arraigned the opposition. E. M. MacDonald, the Liberal member for Pictou supported the Laurier amendment and declared that Sir Wilfrid's naval policy would be adopted as its permanent policy by the Borden government.

Preference Increased

F. B. Carvell, the Liberal member for Carleton, N.B., and Mr. Verville, the Liberal-Labor member for Montreal, assailed the tariff increases as a heavy burden upon the poor which would net but a small revenue to the government.

Sir Robert Borden declared that so far from impairing the British preference Finace Minister White had increased and greatly extended the preference to the mother country. He had indeed created a new British preference. Mr. Bennett accused the Liberals in the house of setting section against section and class against class, while their friends in the senate, by discussing the bilingual school question were reviving race and creed prejudices.

Premier Refuses Charge

Sir Robert Borden, in opening, said that the leader of the opposition had complained of being not consulted by the government respecting the work of the session. As a matter of fact, the prime minister had notified Sir Wilfrid Laurier of the legislation to be sought from parliament, including the fiscal legislation. The opposition leader was to notify the government if he desired to bring up any controversial matter, but no notice had preceded the amendment before the house.

That amendment, Sir Robert characterized as negative and destructive. It proposed no substitute nor alternative, and if it prevailed it could only mean that Canada was not to take her full part in the present war.

Laurier a Protectionist

Three poionts, he said, had been made by the opposition. One was that the special taxes bore unfairly upon the poor. Another was that a protective tariff was essentially an evil thing, and the third was that the British preference had been impaired. As to the first point, it was sufficient to say that the banks and other large corporations were heavily taxed, and that the other special taxation was fairly distributed. As to the second point, it was late in the day for Sir Wilfrid Laurier to denounce protection. He had not only maintained high tariff duties during the lifetime of his government, but in 1907 had increased them avowedly for protective purposes. In 1907 the Laurier government had greatly increased the tariff upon many British imports. Surely that had not been done for revenue purposes, because the banks and other great corporations were not taxed at all. It must have been for purposes of protection.

Disloyalty Charge Baseless

After reviewing the inconsistent record of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who, the prime minister said, hopped on a free trade foot whenever he found himself in opposition, although he hopped on a protection foot when he was in power. Sir Robert Borden declared the unalterable policy of his government to be the maintenance of the national policy, so as to keep Canadian workmen in Canada with plenty of employment at living wages. He treated with contempt the suggestion that the government was disloyal in increasing the tariff duties upon British imports. That charge, said the prime minister, passes by like the idle wind that we regard not.

The house has been told by Sir Wilfrid Laurier that the present budget was a German conception, and that it would meet with approval in Germany. Sir Robert said he could not perceive any evidence of this, but he did quite clearly recollect that the policy pursued by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal party in 1913 had given unbounded satisfaction to the German Government. He read from a German newspaper published at Hamburg, June, 1913, which, commenting upon the action of the Canadian Senate in killing the naval bill, declared that the boasted solidarity of the British Empire was a myth.

Position Clearly Defined

"We are not at all afraid of any aspersions upon our loyalty", continued the premier amid enthusiastic applause; "the people know where we stood before this war commenced and where we are standing now the war is waging, and where we will be found in the future."

He referred to Sir Wilfrid's statements respecting the effect of the tariff changes upon the progress of the war as the "most ridiculous and absurd ever uttered by a public man in Canada." The British preference, said, was really increased by the budget and a new British preference was created. Last year $134,000,000 worth of goods came into Canada free of duty, which under the new budget would be subjected to a tariff tax of 5 per cent. from British countries 7 1-2 per cent from foreign countries. Sir Robert appealed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to explain why he had decreased the British preference on many articles in 1907, and offered to yield the floor for that purpose. Was it for revenue or protection?

Thrust and Parry

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "I am too old a bird to be caught with that kind of chaff." (Laughter).

Sir Robert Borden: "I am too old a bird to expect a straight answer from the leader of the opposition." (Laughter and applause).

In conclusion the prime minister said that since the outbreak of the war he had said nothing of a controversial character except to announce that if there was to be a fight it would not be a one-sided fight. The government would not shrink from criticism, nor did it fear to face the judgment of the house and the country. It would continue to carry out the will of the people by doing all in its power for Canada and the empire.

Laurier's Explanation

Sir Wilfrid, rising to a personal explanation, stated that the conversation between himself and the prime minister at the opening of the session had been of a confidential character. The latter had intimated to him that there would be tariff changes, but nothing was said about the British preference.

Mr. Frank Carvell (Carleton, N. B.) complained of the increase in custom duties upon boots and shoes. He estimated that the government would not receive over $600,000 in duties paid upon hides and leather which went into the manufacture of shoes, while he announced that Canadian boot and shoe manufacturers would collect an additional "$2,500,000 from the people."

Mr. Scott (South Waterloo): "Do you claim that the retail price of boots and shoes has been increased?"

Mr. Carvell: "Yes."

Mr. Scott: "Then I have reason to believe that you are mistaken."

Goods Marked Up.

Mr. Carvell said the prices would soon go up at any rate, and that everywhere goods were being marked up in consequence of the tariff increases. He had made a purchase in Montreal of some automobile parts for repair purposes, and on the receipt bill, which he exhibited, 7 1-2 per cent. had been added to the amount of tariff. He did not think, however, that the retailer would generally be as frank and open about it.

Mr. Carvell made merry over Sir Robert Borden's argument that increasing the duty on British goods increased the preference.

"Suppose", he said, "we increase the duty on British goods 100 per cent. and the duty on foreign goods 200 per cent. That would still further increase the so-called preference, but as neither British nor foreign goods could get into the country, what will be the result of the so-called preference?"

Manufacturer Favored

He argued that the manufacturer got an undue advantage in having an additional 7 1-2 per cent. tariff protection on his finished product as a compensation for the tariff on raw material. The cost of the raw material was usually about one-third of the cost of the finished product. Mr. Carvell, however, was opposed to any increased tariff duties either upon raw materials or manufactured goods. He strongly objected to the tariff on fertilizers, saying that manufactured fertilizers were imported into New Brunswick to the extent of $200,000 a year.

Mr. Carvell suggested taxing the insurance companies, telephone and telegraph companies and especially the railway companies.

Major Sam Sharpe (North Ontario): "The Grand Trunk Pacific!" (Laughter).

Mr. Carvell: "Certainly," and I would tax the street car companies and the big industrial corporations and the magnates who are escaping taxation. Now, I venture the prediction that for $10,000,000 collected by the government from the tax on [illegible] there will be $50,000,000 collected from the people by the manufacturers."

Verville's Complaint

Mr. Verville (Maisonneuve) complained the special taxes bore severely upon the poor. The man who paid $1.25 for a railway ticket paid the same tax as a man who bought a ticket for $4.90. The railway companies, the steamship companies and the telegraph companies paid nothing at all. They were merely tax collectors for the government. He condemned the stamp duties on patent medicines because they represented a tax that would be collected almost altogether from poor people.

The Hundred Ways Which Don't End Corns

Perhaps you say—"I've tried and tried, but found nothing that ends a corn."

You might keep trying for years, Madam. There are a hundred ways which don't. Most of them are very much alike.

But remember this:

There is one way which has removed 70 million corns. It is now removing half the corns that grow.

It's a plaster which contains a bit of wondrous wax. It ends the corn pain in a jiffy. It ends the corn itself in two days. It gently loosens the corn until it comes out without any pain or soreness.

When you merely pare corns—
When you use some folderol—
Bear this in mind. There are folks all around you—users of Blue-jay—who never suffer corns. You are wronging yourself when you fail to do what they do.

"David Soaked Goliath in the Coco Between the Lamps, and Goliath Went to the Mat

TRENTON, N. J., March 17.—"Stand up, you God-forsaken, hog-jowled, peanut-brained ward-heelers and grafting politicians, and see how a man can be a man", cried the Rev. "Billy" Sunday, the famous baseball evangelist, while making an address in the Assembly Chamber of the State House this afternoon to the members of the Legislature.

Having come to Trenton from Philadelphia at the invitation of the Senate and House of Assembly, Sunday was greeted by a crowd both great in numbers and interest. Governor Fielder was present, as were practically all the members of the two Houses, and the state officials. In addition, there were hundreds of persons who had been invited by the Legislature, and hundreds of others who gained admittance after the preacher had begun his talk. At the conclusion, he was given a handsome floral horseshoe as a memorial from the law-makers that he was "the world's foremost Christian."

Sunday was at his best, and although he delivered his famous "Man or Mutt" sermon, he made it hit home at every opportunity. He spoke from the text, "Be thou strong and show thyself a man."

Before the evangelist began his address, H. A. Rodeheaver, the chorister, led the audience in singing the famous Sunday Hymn, "Brighten the Corner Where You Are". He had the ladies sing it, the legislators sing it, everybody whistle it, and so forth.

Some of the striking exclamations used by Sunday to-day were:

"Be a man. If you want to please God don't be a mutt, a false alarm, a four flusher, or excess baggage.

"Be a man; not a rack to hang clothes on.

"It is not always the big fellows who do things. Think of Julius Caesar, sawed-off, red-headed, freckled-faced, but he could go like a six cylinder.

"All that some men are good for is to stand around and let the census taker count one more when he comes along; they are not worth five cents a bunch.

"What God needs, and what the country needs are men who are solid mahogany all the way through; there is too much veneer these days.

"The whiskey barrel is more dangerous than the gun barrel.

"Many a long life has been cut short by a Long Tom.

"Don't swallow a potato bug and then take Paris green to kill the bug. Get right at the start.

"Success is the worst thing in the world for some men. They get the big head and get chesty.

"Don't look for an easy chair and a cushion if you want to hang your mug in God's hall of fame."

Describing the slaying of Goliath by David, Sunday said:

"He soaked him in the coco between the lamps, and he went to the mat."

Tried to Get Morphine

Lillian Russell's Daughter Charged With Forging Order

NEW YORK, March 17.—Policeman Fraserglione and Dr. Dudley D. Stetson, of the Hotel Flanders, were called to a drug store at 46th street and Broadway to-night by a clerk to whom Arthur H. Taylor, of the Court Hotel, had presented a prescription, signed by Dr. Setetson, calling for a hypodermic syringe, three needles, and some morphine tablets. The clerk's suspicion was aroused.

"Mrs. E. J. O'Reilly gave it to me", said Taylor. "She's waiting for me at 47th street and Broadway." So the policeman and Dr. Stetson followed him and at the corner found Mrs. Dorothy Russell O'Reilly, daughter of Lillian Russell. She greeted Taylor eagerly and when she saw the policeman exclaimed at once:

"This man is innocent. He had nothing to do with this except to run an errand for me. I am to blame."

Miss Russell was married three times, before her last matrimonial venture, taken with Edward O'Reilly, a young Pittsburg lawyer, to whom she was married in Atlantic City last August. She gave the police several telephone numbers, but they could not reach any of her friends and she was locked up at last on a charge of forgery. Taylor was locked up also as an accomplice.

Dr. Stetson said that she called on him on Sunday, and that he gave her two prescriptions, one for some medicine, and the other for the syringe and needles, but not for any morphine.

He said he regarded his reason for giving her the needles good, but for professional reasons he would not disclose it. He had not intended her to use morphine, he said, and it was the order for the drug that she had forged. Otherwise, he admitted, the prescription was his own.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Mr. James Kent

THE astonishing growth of the telegraph in Canada is summarized in the career of Mr. James Kent, whose retirement from the management of the C. P. R. Telegraphs is announced, after long and faithful service extending over a period of twenty-nine years. Mr. Kent, who has been identified with telegraph work all his life, was born in Montreal in 1854, and when old enough he entered the services of the Montreal Telegraph Company as a messenger. Since that time Mr. Kent has had the unique experience of having occupied every conceivable position in connection with telegraph service, from the lowest to the highest, and it was only hard work and faithful service that gained for him these merited advancements.

It was in the year 1886, when Mr. Kent was officiating as wire chief to the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company, the C. P. R. opened up its telegraph service from Montreal to the coast, that he was invited by Mr. C. R. Hosmer, then manager of the company, to join the service as chief operator at the Montreal office. At that time the company worked in a somewhat delapidated building situated on the same site as the present one at the corner of St. Francois-Xavier Street and Hospital Street, and the staff consisted of six operators, where to-day there are over one hundred. Subsequently, the office was transferred for a time across the street, and in 1900 the C. P. R. purchased the old site and erected the present substantial telegraph offices for the down town business.

In 1890, Mr. Kent was appointed superintendent of the Eastern Division, which extended from Fort William to Louisburge, Cape Breton, and nine year later, on the retirement of Mr. C. R. Hosmer, he was advanced to the position of manager of the C. P. R. Telegraph Service, from which he now retires. Ever since its inauguration the telegraph service of the Canadian Pacific has not only been used for the dispatch of trains, but for commercial work, too, and has grown to such an extent that it is now practically the largest dispatch service in the world, controlling as it does, in addition to the telegraph wires, over six thousand miles of track passage by telephone. The tremendous increase in the wire mileage has come about during the last five or six years. Great strides have been made in the dispatching of trains by telephone. The first experiment was made between Farnham and Montreal, and it was attended with such success that the telephone is used all over the system at the present time. During the management of Mr. Kent every improvement in telegraph science that has seen the light of the world has been tried, and, if successful, introduced. Prior to the opening of the through line between Montreal and Toronto messages were transmitted through Ottawa, but to-day through wires are installed which are operated by means of the printing arrangement, which is the latest improvement in telegraph science. This method is also used in the receipt and dispatch of messages from Montreal to Winnipeg, demonstrative of the great strides that have been made for improving the telegraph service throughout the Dominion of Canada by the Canadian Pacific. The extension of the telegraph throughout Canada has been far ahead of railway construction, and the service between Winnipeg and Edmonton was in operation for twenty years before the railway was built. At that time the only way to reach Edmonton by rail was via Calgary.

LIVES ON 25 CENTS A DAY

Miss Annie S. Peck, Mountain Climber, Gives Her Menu

Miss Annie S. Peck, the mountain climber, who lives in New York, manages to keep her expenses for food down to 25 cents a day. In a letter to Simon W. Straus, President of the American Society for Thrift, Miss Peck says she has always plenty of green vegetables, fruits in abundance, cereals, and nuts, buying them usually in large quantities.

"Keep your daily menu plain, with nutritious food and plenty of it, but no frills", writes Miss Peck. "Then once in a while have something nice. I had a fine dinner at a hotel as the guest of a club a few days ago, and I enjoyed it more, no doubt, than those who have one like it every day."

Fruit and cereals, and a cup of good coffee at 19 cents a pound form her breakfast. A cake of milk chocolate, a banana, or a dish of oatmeal with raisins in it she finds a satisfying and nutritious luncheon.

A BILLION WHEAT DEFICIT

According to reliable statistics there are tied up at the present time about two billion bushels of wheat, the production of the countries at war. This is in the vicinity of half the world's total production of wheat. A recognized authority argues that granting that the warring nations produce a one-half crop in the coming year, a deficit of one billion bushels will still be shown. The three countries upon which the filling of this deficit of one billion bushels will rest are Canada, the United States and Argentina. The combined output of these three countries is only 1,249,000,000; their exportable surplus would, of course, be much less, so it can easily be seen that the question is not one to be easily solved, and it behoves Canada to increase her productions as much as she possibly can, for when the war is over and trade begins to re-establish itself and the nations undergo a process of rehabilitation, the demand for all breadstuffs must be enormous.

PRINCE RUPERT

The Pacific Coast Terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway

Fair Kaisen's Isle—when first I saw thy slopes,
On which the White Man's foot scarce yet has trod.
Thou lay as silent' neath the western sky
As if thou wert the lone retreat of God.

This was but yesterday, but now—to-day—
I see a wondrous city on thy breast;
I feel the pulse of throbbing industry,
And see in thee the jewel of the West.

The waters of thy matchless harbor wide,
Which, when first glimpsed, no alien prow had cleaved.
Today, I see, are churned on every tide
With commerce which thy country hath conceived.

Oh, City great, though infant thou art still,
Thou hast the vitals of a Mercury;
Thy limbs hewn of the native moldless rock,
Have strength to bear thee to great destiny.

Indeed, thy hopes and promises are great,
And sure fulfillment I would fain foretell;
Prince of a royal blood indeed thou art
Thy noble name befits thee more than well.

Willard Welcomed by Havana People

Johnson's Opponent Reaches Island Capital—Champion is 2 to 1 Favorite

HAAVNA, March 17.—(Special.)—Jess Willard, who is to fight Jack Johnson for the heavyweight championship reached Havana today. Accompanied by Tom Jones, Jim Savage and Tex O'Rourke Willard came in on the steamer Governor Cobb from Key West.

A great crowd was on the pier to welcome the challenger and accorded him an ovation when he appeared on the deck as the vessel warped into her dock. A committee of newspaper men and prominent members of the sporting fraternity of the city formally welcomed Willard.

The big fighter looks the picture of health and predicted that he surely would win the battle. Betting, however is 2 to 1 on Johnson

President Menocal again watched Johnson train today and declared that he would take no actions to prevent the fight, despite predictions to the contrary.

Great enthusiasm over the fight has been aroused, and from application for tickets from all over the island it is assured that an enormous crowd will attend.

AN INTERNATIONAL POLICE FORCE

(Cleveland Plain Dealer)

A New York philosopher named Elijah Sells, has finally devised a scheme for the prevention of the war. It is so simple that one wonders that it has never been thought of before. The Elijah Sells proposition is simply the abolition of all individual armies and the establishment of a great international police force of 823,500 men. Each nation would contribute soldiers in proportion to its population. The force would be governed by a committee of seventy-five, appointed in accordance with national size. China would have four members, Russia and the United States would have three each, Germany, France, Great Britain and a few other powers would have two apiece. This governing board would see to it that soldiers of alien nationality were stationed in each country. The thing is so simple that there is no doubt that it would work—if it ever could be tried. There is only one trouble. It could not possibly be tried. If the nations could agree to such an arrangement they could with equal facility agree to a complete abolition of armies and armament. The Elijah Sells' scheme would not be a step toward the millenium itself. And when the millenium arrives there will be no need of such schemes.

Jack Johnson In Police Court

HAVANA, Cuba, March 17.—Several thousand Cubans welcomed Jess Willard last evening, giving him the greatest reception since the arrival of Palma, Cuba's first president. Willard appeared to be in good health and said he weighed 250 pounds, but expected to take off five pounds before the fight on April 4.

Jack Johnson appeared in the police court this morning, being accused of retaining the baggage of Tremaine, one of his trainers. Johnson admitted he had retained the baggage, but explained it was to guarantee a loan made to Tremaine. The case was dismissed.

Even if the anti-kissing bill introduced in the Kansas legislature should pass, how would the guilty be discovered?

BRITAIN BEING CHOKED ONE GERMAN VIEW

Tagliche Rundschau Has Account of Our Terrible Plight Worthy of Constantinople—Navy Next to Useless—German Submarines, Warships and Airships are Crushing Very Breath Out of Our Bodies

LONDON, March 17.—Public opinion in Germany, says the Daily Chronicle this morning, has absolutely declined that the "blockade" of British harbors is ineffective.

'Although some weeks have gone since February 18th", says the Chronicle, "and although the results of the new maritime frightfulness have been so insignificant, the conviction has not weakened that 'inviolable Albion' is shorn of her bulwarks and that Germany's 'ring of steel' (submarine) is gradually but surely robbing us of our naval supremacy.

"An article on this subject appears in the Tagliche Rundschau descriptive of the dire conditions existing in this country. Our troubles, it seems, began in November with the appearance in our midst of German bombs. Since then life in England has not been worth living.

"When German ships appeared on Albion's coasts our national feeling became still more depressed, and we knew that it was no longer German bluff but German seriousness. And then in rapid succession, says the Rundschau, came German warships and submarines, airships and aeroplanes in 'beautiful rings', and the populace were shaken out of their lethargy, the old bragging and boasting ceased and terror fell upon us.

"But more terrible followed. At Heligoland our fleet suffered serious injuries and then came the most awful blow of all—the rush of German submarines to our shores. With giant steps they encircled the British shores. Ships bearing food and drink to England were sent to the bottom of the sea, and the 'iron girdle' was forged around the 'inviolate island.' It will crush her until her breath is choked out of her,' says the Rundschau.

"In Dithyrambics a writer describes the ineffectiveness in action of the British fleet, condemned to idleness by the superiority of German geist (spirit), and heroism."

GERMAN NOTES IN N. Y.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Wall St. was interested today in an announcement that Chandler & Company, Inc., an investment concern connected with the Stock Exchange house of Chandler Brothers & Company, were forming a syndicate to bid for a round amount of Germany treasury notes.

This statement was issued by the investment concern:

"Chandler & Company Inc., New York and Philadelphia, are forming a limited syndicate among the leading trust companies and banks to make a firm offer of purchase of short term German treasury notes. No notes can or will be offered until each offer is accepted by the German Government."

The Central Trust Company has been asked to act as depositor for subscriptions to notes.

It was reported that the amount would be about $10,000,000, and that a public offering would be made if the transaction went through, at a price to net the buyer more than 6 per cent.

"WAR"

• • •

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

New Year's eve, 1866. As the first hour of this momentous year struck, we were sitting about my father's table celebrating the engagement of Lilli and Conrad. My father arose and offered his New Year's toast:

"My dear children and friends: The year '66 begins well, for long have I desired Conrad for a son-in-law. May we hope that this year may bring Rosa her ideal also. And you, Martha, may your husband be promoted to the rank of Colonel. For you, Dr. Bresser, I may wish hosts of patients, although it does not fit in with the spirit of my wishes for health and happiness. And for you, my dear, fatalistic Marie, may destiny bring you the grand prize of a full indulgence, or anything else you may be wishing for. For my Otto, my son, I can only wish him every distinction in his final examination, that he may acquire every soldierly virtue, and some day be an ornament to the army, and a pride to his old father's heart. And for myself, who knows no greater joy than the welfare and fame of my fatherland, I can only wish that the coming year may bring back to my Austria the province of Lombardy, and—who knows—Silesia also. And may we take back from the insolent Prussian this land which they stole from the great Maria Theresa."

A chill fell upon the company as my father closed his toast. Truly, none of us felt any pressing need for these two provinces.

"No, father, dear," I replied, "we must not forget that in Italy and Prussia it is also New Year's Day, and we will wish them no evil. May the year '66 and all the years to come help us to grow more united and happy."

"Oh, you fantastic idealist," said my father, shrugging his shoulders.

"Not that," said my husband in my defence. "The wish is not one of an enthusiast and dreamer, for science assures us that it must be fulfilled some day. The world has slowly been growing better since the beginning, and it must go on, although we do not note it from year to year. We all know that men are happier, and better, and freer than in the primeval days."

"If you are so sure of eternal progress, why so often complain of reaction and the relapses into barbarism in our day?" asked my father, tauntingly.

"Because"—Frederick took out his pencil and drew a spiral—"because the movement of progress goes on like this. It continually ascends, although at times appearing to go backwards. This coming year, if war is forced upon us, may be represented by one of these backward curves. Such events hurt civilization materially as well as morally."

"How unsoldierly you speak, Tilling."

"These are universal matters; the opinions of a soldier or civilian have no different weight here, for the truth is always the same. If a thing is red, must one obstinately call it blue because one wears a blue uniform, or black because one wears a black coat?"

"A what?" said my father, who, when the argument went against him, was apt to appear hard of hearing. Since it is difficult to repeat a long argument, the discussion inclined to drop.

Upon our return home, I asked my husband: "What did I hear you say? There is prospect of war? Never, never will I allow you to go into another campaign."

"How can your passionate 'Never, never!' help in the matter? The nearer the fatal day comes, the less possible it will be for me to resign. Immediately after Schleswig-Holstein it would have been possible, but not now."

"Ah, that unlucky Schmidt & Sons the bankers!"

Again I found myself anxiously following developments in the newspapers and reports. "Be prepared! Be prepared!" was now the cry. "Prussia is preparing!" "Austria is quietly preparing!" "The Prussians claim we are preparing; it is not true, it is they who are preparing." And thus the variations were sounded in my anxious ear.

THE HUN'S DIARY

GERMAN PROOFS OF GERMAN CRIMES

There are two topics regarding the Great War upon which the majority of Americans are now agreed. The first concerns the immediate responsibility for the catastrophe and the second the violation of Belgium and Luxemburg neutrality by Germany. The country has been flooded for months with reprints of the diplomatic documents and the arguments of both sides have been heard. He who runs may read the answer to the question, "Who desired the War?" and even the Germans themselves do not seriously contend that the solemn treaties which guaranteed the neutrality of "the little sister of the nations" were merely "scraps of paper."

There is another question with which I now propose to deal, upon which the majority of Americans have preserved an open mind: Do the Germans in the field actually practice the Gospel of Frightfulness preached by some of their most notable leaders and actually enjoined in "The German War Book?" That is the question which I shall try to answer by the evidence of Germans themselves.

Americans love fair play for all sides and they have done well to suspend their judgment on a question so vexed as German atrocities. Hate, hysteria, and panic, one may argue, come so largely into play in the compilation of French and Belgian reports on the doings of the Germans in the field that you, with your memories of kind friends and agreeable holidays in Germany, are loath to convict.

Moreover, have we not been assured on the evidence of eminent American newspaper correspondents personally conducted over the scenes of recent devastation by members of the German military staff, that they "personally have neither seen nor heard reliable evidence of outrages on the field" and reports from Germany, we know, bear constant testimony to the scientific care and provision made for the wounded of friend and foe alike. It is equally true that the Germans we meet in the United States are not less refined and humane in their instincts than the citizens who are unhyphenated and we would refuse, without abundant evidence, to impute to their brothers in the Fatherland a red record of murder and burnings and plunderings.

It is my purpose to supply the evidence to which American readers are entitled. You have heard a great deal from the German professors since the war began. Hear now one from the other camp—a man of great distinction and unquestioned good faith—Professor Bedier of the famous College de France.

Article 75 of the German Field Service Regulations expressly enjoins soldiers to keep "war diaries." Professor Bedier has gathered about forty of a large number of these diaries taken from prisoners of war and published them in a brochure, "Les Crimes Allemands," pending the issue of the whole collection now being prepared by the Marquis de Dampierre.

Professor Bedier applies to his task the same keen analytical methods and impartiality which in time of peace have served him so well in discussing the authority of an ancient document or the authenticity of a map. He is by no means related to the Yellow Journalist. And he addresses himself in his little book to all comers—to belligerents as well as neutrals, to the German people as well as to Americans in fact, to quote his own words, to all those "with eyes to see and hearts to feel."

Facsimilies of Originals

It is easy to accuse and difficult to prove. Professor Bedier recognizes that axiom and the evidence he supplies comes not from the victims but from the pens of the actual men who perpetrated or assisted at the atrocities, approvingly or unwillingly, according to their natures. By means of extracts from diaries found on German prisoners of war by the French he unfolds a plain unvarnished tale of horror, a chronicle of foul deeds, on which the facsimile reproduction of many sets the seal of truth. These diaries, as the war progresses, become increasingly numerous. It is proposed that one day, for the edification of everyone, the entire collection shall be deposited in the German Department of Manuscripts at the Great National Libray in Paris.

Meantime, Professor Bedier takes some forty from the collection available—just by way of a beginning. The facsimiles which he reproduces in his book are incontested and incontestable. So much, at least, may be conceded. They are, after all, similar to the loose pages of other scribbled diaries chronicling in faded pencilling the daily routine of the German soldier's life, what he ate, how long he slept, how he and his comrades fought, picked up on many a bloodstained field.

Professor Bedier prints in "Les Crimes Allemands," issued under the auspices of the French Committee of Publication dealing with War Documents and Studies, a dozen or more facsimiles of the diaries. The characteristic faults of spelling in some of the extracts as well as little colloquial phrases indicating the writer's native region in Germany do not permit of their veracity being questioned. One of the facsimiles which I have reproduced from Professor Bedier's interesting and important work—more important in America than anywhere else in the world, probably, because of the very active and well-organized German press propaganda in the United States appears on a page following this. It is chosen at random and is a trifle more legible than the others. The writer of the diary in this case, was Reservist Schlauter (3rd battery of the 4th Regiment of the Guards Field Artillery). The German text and the English translation are given below:

"Aug 25 (in Belgium. Of the inhabitants of the town 300 were shot. Those who survived the volley were requisitioned as gravediggers. The women were a sight But it cannot be helped. Things went better on our march to Wilot: The inhabitants who wanted to leave were allowed to go where they desired. But those who fired at us were shot. As we were marching out of Owele rifles rang out, but there—there were fire, women and everything else."

11—The Gospel of Frightfulness

It was Machiavelli who first preached the doctrine of "frightfulness" in war. Treitschke and Bernhardi were his modern disciples. That the Great General Staff of the German Army cannot be held guiltless as regards crimes committed by German soldiers in the present war is apparent to all who have studied "The German War Book" to which a more extended reference is man War Book" gives the precept and this chapter will expose a few of its practitioners. The first war diary from which I will quote is that of a Berliner, Corporal Paul Spielman of the Reserve Battalion of the First Brigade of Footguards. It is not so well written as that of Reservist Schlauter, and is much underlined.

Spielman describes a night alarm on September 1 in a village near Blamont:

"The villagers fled. It was horrible. All the houses are spattered with blood and the faces of the dead are hideous. They were buried immediately, sixty of them. There were a lot of old women among them, and one women enceinte, the whole thing is a horrible sight, and three children who had clung to one another and died like that. The altar and the arches of the church have collapsed. The villagers had telephoned to the enemy. This morning, September 2 all the survivors were expelled. I saw four little boys aided by two sticks attached to a cradle carrying a child of five or six months old. It's a case of a blow for a blow. Everything is plundered. And I saw, too (among the fleeing villagers), a mother and her two little children, and one had a great wound on the head and an eye put out.

As to villagers and the telephone Professor Bedier reminds us that article 50 of the Hague Convention, 1907, signed in the name of the Kaiser by Baron Marschall Von Bieberstein expressly stipulates that "no collective punishment, pecuniary or otherwise, shall be inflicted on a population because of individual deeds for which they cannot be held responsible."

What tribunal, he asks, on that night of horrors, took the trouble to establish such responsibility?

"September 3. Creil. The iron bridge has been blown up.

On that account we have set streets on fire and shot civilians." The remains of the great bridge across the Oise at Creil are an indescribable tangle of masonry blocks, twisted girders and broken strands. It is known that regular troops, either French or English, destroyed the bridge and such a work was an expert feat of engineering. One may recall that the German officer Horne utterly failed in a much easier task at Vanceboro, Maine, and presumably he lacked neither the weapons nor the experience. To excuse such a massacre as reported at Creil the Germans, when they have condescended to furnish an excuse, have usually said that "civilians" or "franctireurs" had fired on their troops. But a "scrap of paper" signed by Germany—the Convention of 1907—provides in its very first articles that "the laws, rights and privileges of war apply not only to the army but also to militia and bodies of volunteers" fulfilling certain conditions of which the chief is "to bear arms openly," and, in the second article it is agreed that "the population of a territory not occupied, who, at the approach of the enemy spontaneously take up arms in order to fight the invading troops without having the time to organize themselves in accordance with article one shall be deemed belligerents providing arms are borne openly and respect paid to the laws and customs of war."

Cattle Markets

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, March 16.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 1131 cattle, 1337 hogs, 100 sheep and lambs and 205 calves.

Trade was very slow, prices barely holding steady, with Monday's values. Should there be a liberal supply on the two last days of this week prices will certainly go lower. Stockers and feeders sold at steady to firm values. Milkers and springers held about steady at Monday's quotations. Veal calves and sheep and lambs held firm at steady values.

Hogs sold higher than on Monday.

Butchers' Cattle

Good to choice steers and heifers sold at $7.25 to $7.75; good, $7 to $7.25; medium, $6.60 to $6.85; common, $6.25 to $6.50; choice cows at $6.25 to $6.50; good cows, $5.75 to $6; medium cows, $5.25 to $5.60; canners and cutters, $4 to $1.50; choice bulls at $6.50 to $6.75; medium bulls at $5.25 to $5.75.

Stockers and Feeders.

Feeders, 750 to 800 lbs., of good to choice quality, sold at $6.25 to $6.50; medium steers of same weights, at $6 to $6.25; steers of 600 to 700 lbs., at $5.75 to $6; stockers, $5 to $5.75.

Milkers and Springers.

Choice fresh milkers and forward springers sell readily, but few are coming and too many of the common, light, half-starved kind that few people want are being offered. Prices ranged from $13 to $80, and one extra quality cow was reported at $100.

Veal Calves.

Choice veal calves sold at $10 to $11.50; good at $8 to $9.50; medium at $7.50 to $8; common at $6 to $7; eastern rough calves at $4.50 to $5.75.

Sheep and Lambs

Sheep, light ewes, $6 to $7.50; heavy ewes and rams, $5 to $5.50; lambs sold at $7 to $10.75.

Hogs

Selects weighed off cars at $8.35, and $8.10 fed and watered.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK

Submarine Scandal Proved a Fizzle

OTTAWA, March 17.—The Liberal effort to locate a scandal in the purchase of Canada's two submarines by the Government of British Columbia received its quietus to-day. Official correspondence tabled last week showed that the original order-in-Council gave the purchase price as $1,050,000 and that this figure was altered by a subsequent order to $1,150,000, the first figure having been given through an error in copying. This afternoon the Secretary of State brought down additional correspondence which passed between the Auditor-General and the manager of the Bank of Commerce at Vancouver. The Auditor-General wrote to the bank stating that the Naval Service Department had applied for $1,150,000, covering advances made in regard to the purchase of submarines. He asked to whom these advances had been made, when payable, and in whose favor. The bank manager, Mr. Crawford, wrote back that on August 6 he had issued three drafts in favor of J. V. Paterson. One was on the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Seattle, $249,961, and the other two on the bank at New York for $500,000 and $399,437.50. "These were paid for by cheque of the Provincial Government of British Columbia for $1,150,000."

The Answer
To Your Clothes Question !

YOU are doubtless reading, these days, many advertisements concerning Clothes—big type and small type!

YOU have been appealed to in plain figures and plied with "wonderful reductions" which you may have discovered exist mostly on paper!

YOU have been bored with fabric, fashion, and fit, and served with dissertations on Style!

YOU have seen argument exhausted—exaggeration run rife and good horse sense depleted!

BUT!

Don't Forget When All Is Said That It's The Clothes That Count!

This being the case, allow us modestly to remark that our Spring Suits and Top Coats at the moderate prices we have mentioned below are the best of Clothes, the best of Values and they should be the Clothes for you!

More Canadians Reach the Front

LONDON, March 17.—Speaking of the recent fighting at Neuve Chapelle and the efficiency of the Canadian troops engaged in the battle, Earl Kitchener, in the House of Commons, said yesterday:

"Further substantial reinforcements have been sent to the front including a Canadian division."

No doubt inspired by the many rumors afloat as to the extraordinary percentage of deaths among the Canadians at Salisbury Plain and the centres where sections of the contingent were quartered, Will Thorne, in the House of Commons yesterday asked for an official statement concerning the number of deaths from October, 1914, to Februray 28, 1915.

Under Secretary Tennant, for the war office, said that only 46 had died at Salisbury and elsewhere. Three thousand nine hundred and forty-eight sick had been successfully treated in the hospitals.

UNFOUNDED RUMORS

Ever since the news reached here that the Canadian troops were in action in France, there have been persistent rumors that such and such a member of the First Contingent from Belleville has been killed. Where these stories start it is hard to say, but neverthless they are distressing and especially to those who have sons and other relatives at the front.

QUIETLY COMMEMORATED

St. Patrick's Day was quietly commemorated in this city. In the evening at St. Michael's Academy, under the auspices of the Children of Mary, a progressive pedro party was held and was largely attended. Prizes were given to the successful competitors. At the conclusion of the games dancing was indulged in for some time. All who attended thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Light refreshments were served during the evening.

CONSIGNED TO TOMB

Yesterday afternoon the obsequies of the late Mr. Charles A. Chandler of Montreal, who died here, took place and many were in attendance. The remains were conveyed from the family residence, William street, to St. Thomas church, where the impressive burial services of the Anglican church were conducted by the rector, Rev. Canon Beamish, who also officiated at the interment at Belleville cemetery. A number of appropriate floral designs were placed upon the casket by relatives and friends. The bearers were, Messrs. J. D. and C. F. Clarke, Wm. J. Thomson, H. C. Thompson, C. C. Walker and Ald. Wallbridge.

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS

On Monday evening, March 8th, 1915, before leaving for their new home near Marysville, about seventy-five friends and neighbours of Mr. and Mrs. Andy Reid gathered at their former home in Blessington and gave them a decided surprise when Messrs. Samuel Sherman, Alex. McLaren and Fred Robinson presented Mrs. Reid with a beautiful oak rocker and Mr. Reid with an arm chair and writing desk. The following address was read by Miss Anderson:—

Blessington, March 8, 1915.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Reid,—

We your friends and neighbors have met here tonight to bid you good-bye before you leave for your new home. During the short time that you have been in our midst we have appreciated your cheerful and neighborly spirit. We felt that we could not let this privilege pass without showing in some tangible form our appreciation of you and our regrets at your departure. Now we ask you to accept these chairs and desk, not for their intrinsic value, but as a token of our esteem and love for you. We wish you success and happiness and trust that you will not forget your old friends while making new ones.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors,

ALEX. McLAREN,
SAMUEL SHERMAN,
FRED A. ROBINSON.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid, completely taken by surprise, thanked their many friends in a few well chosen words and expressed their regrets at leaving the neighborhood.

The rest of the evening was spent in games of various kinds, after which the ladies served a dainty lunch. The usual good-byes were then said and all dispersed, remarking that a more enjoyable evening had never been spent in or around Blessington.

LETTER FROM MAJOR RIERDON

On board S.S. Feb. 28th, 1915.

Dear Mr. Bowell:

Just a note this Sunday evening. We are enjoying an excellent voyage even though it is winter — have about 1200 troops in this ship. Our boat left Halifax 8.20 Tuesday morning, Feb. 23rd, and just before sailing I received a very acceptable donation from the Madoc Women's Patriotic Association, namely, 12 dozen cholera belts for my men. You can realize how the men appreciated them, considering that they are each from varied communities of Ontario. At our present rate of speed we expect to be in England on Friday, March 5th.

Yours very respectfully,
W. R. RIERDON, Major.

Dresden Wounded Safely Landed

VALPARAISO, March 17.—Special.—The British auxiliary cruiser Orama arrived here this morning and landed fifteen wounded men of the crew of the German Cruiser Dresden, sunk on Sunday morning by the British off Juan Fernandez Island. An officer of the Orama gave this description of the fight:

"At 9.30 o'clock on Sunday morning we sighted the German cruiser, and the Orama, Kent and Glasgow offered battle to the Dresden. The latter was ten miles away from Vas a Tierra, one of the islands. The first shots from the Glasgow set the Dresden on fire. None of the shots from the Dresden hit our ships; they fell sixty paces away in the water. An explosion in the powder magazine caused the Dresden to sink.

"The British ship stood by to save the crew. An order was given to take aboard the wounded for Valparaiso. The rest were put ashore on the island."

One of the wounded Germans said: "Early on Sunday we were anchored about a third of a mile from the beach, with empty coal bunkers and in view of the superiority of the enemy the commander ordered us to abandon the ship, so that she might be blown up."

According to rumors which are circulating the fight took place in neutral waters, and the German Minister will make a protest. Color is lent to this by the report published by the German Consul, based on what has been told, but it will be necessary to await official reports.

ITALY TAKES PRECAUTION

ROME, March 17.—A meeting of former governors of Italian provinces of Austria has been held in the residence of Count von Burian, Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs, in Vienna. The meeting, called to consider concession to Italy, to maintain Italy's neutrality, protested against the suggestion of Ambassador von Buelow, that Austria should surrender the Trentino.

Former governors voted that the concessions be postponed until after the war. Threats were made of reprisals against Germany if she insisted upon the concession at this time.

Postal money order series between Italy and Germany was suspended today by formal order of the Italian Minister of posts and telegraphs. This action follows the suspension of telegraphic money orders between Italy and Austria, and the discontinuance of travelling post-offices on trains crossing the Austrian frontier.

No official explanation has been made of this action.

CATARRHAL FOREHEAD PAINS GO QUICK!
SNIFFLING, CLOGGED NOSTRILS CURED

NOT A SIGN OF COLD, CATARRH, OR THROAT TROUBLE WILL REMAIN!

Quick relief for that headache—just one breath through Catarrhozone Inhaler and you feel better.

The soothing piney vapor of Catarrhozone clears the head instantly; its healing balsamic fumes take the sting out of the nose, stop sniffles, ease the throat, cure the cough and destroy all the vileness of catarrh.

No other remedy treats Catarrh so directly, so quickly; every breath you draw through the inhaler carries a marvelous lot of healing virtue—carries death to the germs that cause the trouble.

You can't keep Catarrh—nor can you hang to a cold, or have any chest or throat trouble if you use Catarrhozone. It is guaranteed to make you well.

"My head used to fairly split with an awful pain over the eyes.

"It was always worst when my catarrh was bad. I had the meanest sores and crusts inside the nose and continually coughed, both day and night. The first day's use of Catarrhozone made a grand improvement. Every hour I felt better. Catarrhozone cured me perfectly."

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY.
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

N. B.—Unauthorized publication of this advertisement will not be paid for.—30690.

Chas. S. Clapp

He thought little revenue would result from increasing the postal rates because circulars that formerly went through the mail would now be distributed by messengers.

Mr. Verville, in closing said that the "Made in Canada" campaign was the "greatest farce ever invented." The stores were working off all their unsalable junk by labelling it "Made in Canada", no matetr where it came from.

Labor Wants Protection.

R. B. Bennett, (Calgary) said that Mr. Verville misrepresented the laboring people of Canada, who were keenly interested in having everything manufactured in this country. Mr. Bennett was quite willing to admit that a protective tariff was as Sir Wilfrid Laurier said "German conception." The German conception of protection up to the hilt had developed in Germany a patriotism and economic success which challenged the admiration of the world. Every nation in the world had adopted protection except Great Britain and nearly 50 per cent. of her people had demanded tariff reform.

Mr. Bennett characterized the speeches delivered by the Opposition in the budget debate as being "the same old cant, the same old hypocrisy, the same old dreary tale, the same old dismal wail, the same old appeal to the prejudice of the west against the east, the same old effort to stir up strife between the men who labor in the cities and the men who labor on the farms, supplemented in the Senate by the same old appeals to racial hatred." He said the wail of the opposition was "like an infant crying in the night, an infant crying for the light, with no language but a cry."

Dipped Into Scripture

Times were hard, Mr. Bennett admitted, but the government was not responsible for that. No government is any more responsible for the world movements which caused hard times "than was Pharaoh's chief butler for the emaciated conditions of the seven lean kine that Joseph saw in his dream."

The measure of our ability to take part in the war, Mr. Bennett said, was the number of men and the amount of money we can raise. The human element was not lacking. Would parliament provide the money? Unfortunately the Liberals did not seem to realize that a war was going on and sought to make party capital by opposing the new taxes, which they thought would prove to be "unpopular."

A wild scene of enthusiasm greeted the concluding words of the member from Calgary. The Conservative members cheered and applauded to the echo. Mr. MacDonald, the Liberal member for Picton, who rose to reply, was unable to proceed for some moments. His speech on the whole was somewhat bitter, and contained many sarcastic thrusts at Hon. Mr. White.

Elaborate Sarcasm

"The finance minister is going about with "stooped shoulders and anxious mien. He tells us he cannot sleep at nights because every day he has to raise a million dollars. One would think he had to furnish the money out of his own pocket. As a matter of fact, every dollar of the war expenditure is furnished him by the British government. He has not given it twenty minutes' thought. Beyond assuming a portentious mien, neither he nor the prime minister have done anything to finance this war. We told them two years ago that the empire required men, not money from Canada, for Imperial defence, and now the war is on, Canada is furnishing the men, but England is furnishing all the money."

Personally the Liberals were proud of the position they took in 1913. When Sir Robert Borden came to announce his permanent naval policy the country would find that it was simply the naval policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. (Applause.)

Meighen's Challenge

Solicitor-General Meighen said that the Liberals had swerved from the patriotic position they assumed at the August session. He regretted their action, but if they wanted to fight, fight would be carried into their country. He said the budget provided for war taxes just as the recent legislation by the United States congress provided for war taxes.

Dr. Clark (Red Deer): "To call the American taxes war taxes is a misnomer. The United States is not at war."

Mr. Meighen: "That is what the president of the United States called them, and that is what ninety million people call them, for whom the Liberals formerly entertained a profound admiration." (Applause).

Regular $6.00 Brocaded Silk Corsets, $3.50
They are corsets made by the manufacturers of the famous D. & A. Corsets for their export trade. Unfortunately for themselves, but exceedingly fortunate for us and our customers, they had about 200 dozen pairs left on their hands, which they divided into lots of ten dozen each, and offered them to their best clients throughout Canada. We immediately accepted one of these lots and now offer them to our customers at the price suggested by the manufacturers, $3.50 pair. They are of brocaded silk, with silk embroidery and satin bow and lace at top, elastic bands at bottom of corset at back, 5 clasps and 2 hooks, 6 hose supporters, sizes 20 to 26 and regular $6.00 value for only $3.50 pair.

The Millinery Parlors
Are in Full Bloom

THE STYLE SECRETS ARE OUT. The New Millinery Styles were viewed by hundreds of admiring ladies on opening days. Scores bought and had their new Spring Hats laid away; but that does not diminish our extensive showing of New Millinery. Our workrooms have sent out dozens of new models for your inspection this week, including some of the most stunning that we have yet displayed. You are invited to see them.

DRIED VEGETABLE SOUP

There is a close connection between a farmer's load of potatoes and the trouble in Europe—at least around Belleville, though one might wonder what it is. The R. J. Graham Company of that city is busy on a $230,000 contract for dried vegetable for the Canadian troops. These dried vegetables used to be in big demand during the Klondyke gold rush, and more recently for survey parties and prospectors, though there was little city or town demand.

The large plant at Belleville, and nine others belonging to the firm throughout Ontario, are now running full blast on these orders, which will keep them busy until June. Potatoes are pared automatically, washed, cooked, sent through a form that brings them out like strips of macaroni, or white fishworms, and then dried, broken up into small pieces and are then ready for use. Onions, carrots, turnips, celery and other vegetables are treated in the same way, and finally all are mixed up in packages, put in sealed tins, which are made on the premises, and shipped to the battle-ground, where the battered tins will add to the debris of the struggle, and serve to remind the Princess Pats and other of the vegetable soup which formed their last meal.

The story of the origin of this industry in Canada a number of years ago reads like a romance, and provides a splendid example of "diamond cut diamond."

Years ago Mr. Graham heard of a new industry in Germany which was then in the control of the military authorities, where vegetables were deprived of all surplus moisture and put up in light, concentrated packages. In this way a large amount of nourishing food could be carried in a small space.

He travelled to Germany, and in some mysterious way got admission to the factory, on a pass from the military authorities. Day after day the Canadian visited the factory, viewed carefully the operations, using every faculty with which he was endowed. Every night he returned to his rooms in the hotel and sketched plans of what he had seen, and made notes as to the methods employed.

For about a week he was privileged to do this, and then suspicion became aroused against him. Mr. Graham sensed the surveillance under which he was being placed, and so hurriedly sent his wife to Paris, leaving secretly himself by another way to London, England. At Paris his wife was closely watched, but finally came home with her husband.

Immediately on his arrival home he built, at a considerable cost, the factory at Belleville, which is running today. Many improvements were added to the plant, but the outstanding features remained substantially the same as the plant in Germany, which was then the only one of its kind in the world. At first it was merely a private commercial enterprise to supply prospectors and surveyors. But today it is running full force on a Government contract to help overthow the very power which originated the idea.

HUSBAND KILLED FNENCH BATTLEFIELD

MONTREAL, March 17.—Early in August Paul Mary Fleuriel, 31 years of age, a French reservist, who resided in Ahuntsic, left Montreal to go to the front. He left behind him a wife and infant twins. He had not been gone three months when both babies died. The two passed away within a few hours of one another. Yesterday Mrs. Fleuriel received notification from the French government that her husband had been killed on the field of battle early in December.

SPY SUSPECT LAUGHS

Connecticut Man Has Amusing Experience at Bermuda

STAMFORD, Conn., March 17.—Mistaken for a German spy, S. S. Hastings, of Greenwich, son-inlaw of E. C. Benedict, the well-known banker went through an experience at Bermuda recently which amused him not a little.

Mr. Hastings arrived last night on the Bermudian and the story of his experience soon leaked out. He had in his luggage a number of nautical instruments made in Germany and also books on navigation published in the same country. When these were uncovered in the course of the inspection at Bermuda, Mr. Hastings was placed under guard of a group of soldiers and after being detained at the pier for two hours was started on a march to the Government House. An English officer who had met Mr. Hastings when he stopped at Bermuda as a member of Commodore Benedict's cruising party a year or so ago recognized him. He was released and apologies were tendered.

Women Needed For Men's Work

Great Britain Wants Them to Free Men for Service in Army

LONDON, March 18.—"Any woman who by working helps to release a man or to equip a man for fighting does a national war service," says Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, in an appeal to the women of the country.

"If the full fighting power of the nation is to be put forth on the field of battle," the appeal continues, "the full working power of the nation must be made available to carry on its essential trades at home. In certain important occupations there are not enough men and women to do the work. In order to meet both the present and future needs of national industry, the Government wish to obtain particulars from all women available with or without previous training, for paid employment. Accordingly, they invite all women who are prepared, if needed, to take paid employment of any kind—industrial, agricultural, clerical, etc.—to enter themselves upon the register of women for war service. The registration is for the purpose of finding out what reserve forces in women's labor, trained and untrained, can be made available if required.

POLICE WERE CALLED

When Young Woman Wanted to Smoke in Restaurant

KINGSTON, March 18.—It required the servces of a couple of Chinamen and two police constables to keep a young woman, with a taste for cigarettes, from smoking her favorite weed, in a Princess street Chinese restaurant early on Tuesday evening.

The young woman had her supper and afterwards wanted to buy some cigarettes and smoke them on the premises. In this restaurant there is a sign, "No Smoking Allowed", but the young woman declared that she was not a Mason, and, therefore, did not believe in signs; and when the Chinaman refused to serve her with cigarettes, she immediately started to raise a fuss, which was nipped in the bud by Constables Timmerman and Nicholsin, who arrived on the scene in response to a call received at the police station.

The proprietor of the restaurant explained matters to the constables, stating that it was against the rules of his establishment to have smoking, and that he objected very much to having the lady persist in her attempts to get cigarettes.

NEWSPAPERS CONCEAL LOSSES OF BRITISH

LONDON, March 19.—Special—Lord Claud Hamilton said last night that the newspapers are concealing British losses. He said that his own regiment, the Grenadier Guards, had lost 800 out of 1100 men, the finest in the army. He said that the Cameronians seemed to have been totally wiped out. The appalling system of concealment, he said, was most ridiculous and might prolong the war.

WHOLE PLAIN LITERALLY COVERED WITH BODIES

Men, Women and Children Scattered in Every Direction—Men are Slaughtered and Women Carried Away to the Mountains

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 19.—Appalling accounts of conditions in Armenia have reached officials of the Armenian Red Cross fund here. The latest recital is from an Armenian doctor named Derderian, who says that the whole plain of Alashgerd is virtually covered with the bodies of men, women and children. When the Russian forces retreated from this district the Kurds fell upon the helpless people and shut them up in mosques. The men were killed and the women carried away to the mountains. The organizers of the Red Cross fund say there are 120,000 destitute Armenians now in the Caucasus.

MORE CASUALTIES AMONG THE TROOPS OF FIRST CONTINGENT

(Canadian Press Special)

OTTAWA, March 19.—Today's official casualty list contains a number of names, and is dated March 10th, and are presumably a result of the battle of Neuve Chapelle.

Killed in action, March 4th—Pte. H. P. Bridge, 1st Battalion, Harrow, England.

Wounded—Pte. Fred Page, gunshot wound, Toronto.

Wounded—Driver G. Simmons, gunshot wound left leg, Third Brigade, St. Catharines.

ALLIES CAPTURE COMMUNICATING TRENCHES NEAR ALBAIN VILLAGE

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 19.—This afternoon's official communication says: At Notre Dame de Lorette we have made ourselves masters of the communication trenches which run from the hill captured by us toward the village of Ablain. We destroyed them after having killed, expelled or captured the defenders. In the Argonne district, between Belante and Four de Paris, after a violent fight, we progressed 150 metres. In the forest of Consenvoye we repulsed a German counter attack last night and maintained the ground gained on Thursday. At Lesparges we carried a salient east of a position in which the enemy had successfully maintained himself since the fighting of last month. We repulsed two counter attacks yesterday and a third last night.

GERMANY USED NEUTRAL FLAG WHILE MAKING ITS PROTEST

LONDON, March 19.—(Special.)—The demand made by Germany through the United States that British abstain from the use of neutral flags has had a curious sequel which has just come to light.

It has now been demonstrated that Germany was culpable in employing this rue de guerre. Information has been received in London that towards the end of February, in fact during the period that Germany was making its protest against the use of a neutral flag, the German merchant steamer Anna Eliza, bound for a Norwegian port, flew the Norwegian flag until she was actually within territorial waters and was about to enter the Norwegian port to which she was consigned.

Spanish women charged the bakeries and the police charged the women. This, unfortunately, is not a mere case of overworking the credit idea.

Tragic End of Young Mother

Placed Her Head Through Hole in Ice and Was Drowned

LINDSAY, March 18.—No inquest was held concerning the death of Mrs. John Macksey, who ended her life under tragic circumstances last Sunday, and the remains have been interred in Riverside Cemetery. Mrs. Macksey, who was 21 years of age, gave birth to a baby six weeks ago, and was since in such poor health that her mind became impaired. She suffered much from nervousness and the family physician advised that a close watch be kept upon her, but on Sunday morning she disappeared from her home.

A search was instituted and the young woman's mother, Mrs. Agnes Johnston, found her lying on the ice on the river, in the rear of Perkins Mill, with her head and shoulders submerged in the water where the ice was broken. Mr. Hennessy, the watchman at the mill, lifted her from the water, but she was quite dead.

Mexican Money In Circulation

PETERBOROUGH, March 18.—Some smooth artist has intrduced into the city Mexican money, and started it circulating, with the result that several local stores and firms have taken it in good faith without discovering that it was not Canadian money. Consequently they found out too late that they did not receive half value for what was purchased with this money, as the face value of Mexican bills is scarcely half of that of Canadian bills of equivalent denomination.

The police have been informed, but it is impossible to trace the origin of their circulation. Among local firms and places of business that have taken this money are Mervin's butcher store, R. C. Braund's store, and Matthews-Blackwell south end store. There may be others which have not been heard from yet.

The bills are almost identical in appearance to Canadian money and are in five and one-dollar denominations.

They have passed through various hands before being detected and been accepted at face value for Canadian bills.

It is stated by the police that this Mexican money was circulated in Toronto and must have come down this far.

WAR LORD TO LILLE FOR WAR COUNCIL

LONDON, March 18.—The Evening News prints a despatch from Copenhagen to the effect that Emperor William and General von Falkenhayn, chief of the German general staff, arrived to-day at the German army headquarters near Lille. Their visit, The News states, is for the purpose of participating in a council of war.

The despatch adds that Emperor William and General von Falkenhayn already have had conferences with Frederick William, the German Crown Prince, and Rupprecht, Crown Prince of Bavaria. The Kings of Saxony and Wurttemburg are on the way to join the council of war.

CONSERVATIVE PARTY VICTORIOUS IN YOUKON

Final Returns Show a Majority of Two in Ten Seats

OTTAWA, March 19—(Special.)—Dr. Alfred Thompson, M.P., for the Yukon has received a wire from Dawson, stating that the results of the Yukon council elections as telegraphed out a few days ago, giving six Liberals and four Conservatives, was not correct. The final returns reverse that result, namely six Conservatives and four Liberals.

Mac Morden Among Wounded

Word was received in Picton on Monday morning last, that Mr. Mac Morden, a former Picton boy, had been wounded in an attack on the German lines, and is now confined in the Duchess of Connaught's Canadian Hospital at Cliveden, England. In a card addressed to Mrs. M. A. Morden, Picton, he says:—"This in Canadian Hospital. Nothing serious. Back again shortly. Lucky so far. Some narrow escapes. Expect to pull through O.K." Signed Mac.

Soldiers Not To Have Votes

Men in Camp in Canada Will However Exercise Franchise

OTTAWA, March 19.—(Special.)—An informal meeting of the commons committee on elections was held yesterday to consider the question of votes for the soldiers in the event of a general election. It was agreed that difficulties in registering the votes of the men at the front would probably be too great to be overcome, the soldiers who are in camp in Canada should be given an opportunity to record their votes.

In Sealed Envelopes

It is probable that the voting will be done in sealed enevelopes upon which a certificate from the commanding officer has been made out. These envelopes will be opened in the presence of representatives of the candidates by the returning officer on polling day and the ballot dropped in the box unexamined.

The committee will meet again on Tuesday night to perfect the plans already outlined and a draft bill will probably be submitted for consideration.

One is Dead Four Badly Hurt

Large Mill at West River, N.B. was Practically Wrecked

ST JOHN, N.B., 18.—Without a moment's warning, a boiler in the large mill of C. T. White & Sons at West River, Albert County, blew up three minutes after the whistle blew at 6 o'clock last evening, killing one man and seriously injuring four others, of whom one will probably die.

The brick work in the boiler room, the engine-room and practically the whole mill, is badly wrecked, and it will be some time before the plant, which has an output probably in the vicinity of 50,000 feet a day, can be again put in working order. Edgar P. McQuaid, night watchman, died at his post and leaves a wife and five children living in Alma. John Yensen, the fireman, is also in a dangerous condition and the doctors are doubtful as to his recovery.

To Give Island Four Members

Sir Robert Borden Announces Pending Resolution on Representation of P. E. I.

OTTAWA, March 19.—(Special.)—The province of Prince Edward Island is to have four members of Parliament, although by the redistribution act of last season only three were given. The premier intimated today that he would in all probability introduce this session a bill regarding Prince Edward Island. It is learned that the effect of the resolution will be to insure that no province will have fewer members of the commons than senators. There are four Senators from the island, so that it will be given four members in the lower chamber also.

RUSSIANS POSSESS COMPLETE MASTERY

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 19.—A Times despatch from Bucharest says the Austrians have received reinforcements and have resumed a strong offensive in Bukowina. A Times despatch from Petrograd says the Russian authorities are convinced that several of the thirty-three German army corps massed in the east have gone to Belgium or France presumably to reinforce the troops facing the British. Others have been sent to reinforce the Austrians in Galicia, where the Russians have gained a complete mastery and the serious offensive of the Germans in East Prussia must be abandoned.

SASKATCHEWAN BARS BANISHED JULY FIRST

Retail Sale of Liquor to Cease, and Government to Take Over Wholesale Trade as a Monopoly—Dispensaries May Later be Abolished if People so Decide—No Compensation

REGINA, Sask., March 19.—Special—Saskatchewan will be the first Province in Canada to completely abolish the bar. On July 1 next, not only will the retail sale of all intoxicating liquors come to an end, but the wholesale trade will be taken over by the Government and operated as a Government monopoly, under a system of dispensaries. Later even these dispensaries may be abolished, if by a referendum vote the people of the Province so decide.

This, in brief, is the effect of an announcement made by Premier Scott in addressing a meeting at Oxbow this afternoon, in company with J. G. Turriff, M.P. Premier Scott announced the policy by which his Government was prepared to stand or fall, in the following words:

"(1) To at once issue proclamation curtailing the hours of retail liquor sale to 7 o'clock in the evening, from April 1.

"(2) To convene the Legislative Assembly as early as possible in the month of May, and submit to the House a measure of which the outstanding features will be the abolition of all bar and club licenses from July 1, 1915, until the ending of the war, and the taking over by the Government of the wholesale liquor business throughout the Province.

"(3) To provide in the measure that following the ending of the war the bar and club licenses shall not be revived, except as the result of a referendum on the question to be taken at the time of municipal elections held after peace is declared, but not earlier than December, 1916, a majority vote to decide, and the Provincial franchise to be adopted for the referendum: the Government to provide most carefully framed safeguards against any irregularities, such as personations, false declarations and the use of liquor or any other improper influences and for the more secure discouragement of improper practices, to appoint a prosecutor, and to follow and prosecute infractions.

"(4) To provide in the measure for maintenance by the Government, under a Commissioner having status similar to that of the Provincial Auditor, of a liquor dispensary or dispensaries in each city or town where at present wholesale licenses exist, to be known as Saskatchewan Dispensaries for Sale of Liquors, which must not be consumed on the premises, and under strict regulations as to quantities, size of package, etc., the question of establishing such dispensaries in towns and villages where at present wholesale licenses do not exist to be determined by a referendum of the electorate, to be taken at the time of the municipal elections.

"(5) To provide that in the year 1919, or any subsequent year, on presentation of a petition signed by 25 per cent. of the number of electors who vote at the next preceding Provincial elections, a Provincial referendum shall be taken to decide the continuance or abolition of the proposed dispensaries. All dispensaries taken over or opened to remain in operation until aforesaid referendum decides."

The Premier added that careful consideration had been given to the question of compensation to licensees, inasmuch as such compensation would have to be paid by the Province—in other words, out of the pockets of the people—and he as the people did not owe the license-holders anything, it was not possible to grant compensation.

Two British Steamers go Down

WELLINGTON, N.Z., March 19.—Official figures just published show the majority against national prohibition in New Zealand in the December election was over 10,000. Against local no license the majority was 45,000, showing a falling off of several per cent. in the no license vote.

DEFICIT IN REVENUE

(Canadian Press Special)

CAPE TOWN, March 19.—Government estimates show a deficit in the revenue of $13,000,000, which will be met by an increase in the income tax and customs, and a special war tax of $2,500,000 on the gold mines.

HAGERSVILLE MERCHANT DIED THIS MORNING

(Canadian Press Special)

HAGERSVILLE, Ont., March 19.—John H. Hager, general merchant and postmaster of this village for 35 years, died this morning from paralysis. His father founded Hagersville, where the deceased had lived all his life.

SANK ANOTHER SHIP WITHOUT A WARNING

LONDON, March 19.—(Special)—The British steamer Glenartney, of Glasgow, was torpedoed this morning off Beachey Head by a German submarine, which gave no notice of her intention. In the scramble for the boats one of the crew was drowned. The others, numbering forty, several of whom were injured, were picked up by a steamer and landed at New Haven. The Glenartney, which was of 3,309 tons register, was bound from Bangkok, Siam, for London, loaded with 8,000 tons of rice.

CANADIAN TROOPS HURT IN COLLISION

LONDON, March 19.—(Special)—A collision occurred today near West Mailing, Kent, between two vehicles belonging to the Canadian contingent, with the result that one was overturned and the whole of the occupants were thrown out. Six of the men were found to be rather seriously injured, and were conveyed to Mailing Hospital. They will probably recover.

PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS MEAN BAD BLOOD

People who have impure or impoverished blood should be careful to take only a vegetable and temperance remedy such as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is and has been for over 40 years.

The first day you start to take this reliable medicine, impure germs and accumulation begin to separate in the blood and are then expelled through the eliminative organs.

In place of the impurities, the arteries and veins gradually get fresh vitalized blood and the action of this good blood on the skin means that pimples, boils, carbuncles, eczema, rash, acne and all skin blemishes will disappear. Then you must remember that when the blood is right, the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys become healthy, active and vigorous and you will have no more trouble with indigestion, bachache, headache and constipation.

Depend upon this grand remedy to give you the kind of blood that makes the skin clear, the mind alert, the vision keener and puts ambition and energy into the entire body. You won't be disappointed. For free advice or free booklet on blood, write Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.,—Adv.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets not only the original but the best Little Liver Pills, first put up over 40 years ago, by old Dr. R. V. Pierce, have been much imitated but never equaled,—as thousands attest. They're purely vegetable, being made up of concentrated and refined medicinal principles, extracted from the roots of American plants. Do not gripe. One or two for stomach corrective, three or four for cathartic.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgebury, Ont.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. John Griffin, President of the Griffin Amusement Company, is in the city to-day.

Mr. W. DeShane has been confined to his home on Mill street by illness.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Fairfield of 223 Coleman Street will be at home to their friends on Saturday afternoon, from 4 to 6, it being the occasion of their 50th anniversary.

Dr. John D. Doyle, of Brooklyn, N. who has been visiting his people in this city, left for his home to-day.

Messrs. Leslie Gordon and B. Taylor are in Stratford, representing the local Grand Trunk apprentices at a conference.

Rev. R. C. Reever of Peterborough, well known to many in this city, underwent an operation at the Toronto General Hospital for throat trouble. The operation is reported to have been successful.

ANNOUNCEMENT

THE PATRIOTIC MASS MEETING which was to be held at Griffin's Opera House on Friday Evening has been postponed until Tuesday Evening, March 23rd. The Committee in charge have changed the date to accommodate some of the speakers who are to be brought to Belleville to inaugurate the Local Campaign for the Patriotic Fund. The names of the speakers, who are the foremost orators of the Dominion of Canada, will be announced in to-morrow's Intelligencer. Remember the date, MARCH 23rd. Belleville must wake up and get in line with the other Patriotic Cities, of Ontario, so let no able-bodied citizen of Belleville be absent from Griffin's Opera House next Tuesday night.

GOD SAVE THE KING

BELLEVILLE LADIES RIFLE CLUB

The annual shoot for the distribution of prizes took place in the Armouries on Thursday afternoon.

Three prizes which were to be awarded for the highest scores of the day were won as follows:

Five dollar gold piece—Miss Falkiner for score of 98, given by Sir Mackenzie Bowell. (Miss Falkiner also having won the cup for the highest shooting of the season.)

The remaining prizes, 13 in number, the first of which was a five dollar gold piece, given by Senator Corby, were shot for under handicap conditions with the following results.

	Actual score	Handicap	Total
Miss McCarthy	95	4	99
Miss Walton	95	9	104
Miss Herrington	95	7	102
Miss Fralick	94	5	99
Miss H. Anderson	94	9	103
Miss Hurley	91	7	98
Mrs. Stalworthy	90	11	101
Mrs. Sneyd	90	9	99
Miss S. Walton	90	7	97
Mrs. Douch	89	8	97
Miss McCuaig	89	13	102
Miss A. Lazier	86	5	91
Miss Campbell	83	9	92
Miss Masson	80	9	89
Miss McDonnell	80	12	92
Miss Andrews	76	10	86
Miss J. McLean	71	17	88

The three making 95 each, shot off for Mr. Corby's prize, Miss Herrington winning. Twelve other prizes, several of which were given by Miss Falkiner, and one by Mrs. Douch, the remainder bought from the Club funds, were awarded to those making the 12 highest totals.

Much interest in the shooting was shown by the number of spectators present, who seemed to enjoy the proceedings as well as the refreshments at the tea hour.

Belleville Boy Writes From Front

Mr. Wm. A. Rodbourne of this city, yesterday was in receipt of a postal card from Billy Dingman, who is in France, and went from here with the First Contingent. The date of the communication was February 26th, and its contents are as follows:

We have just come out of the trenches, which were only 80 yards from the Germans. Believe me, this is real fighting. Have had splendid luck. I can not give you anything very definite as it would not be sent. All the boys join in sending their best respects to you and the bunch.

Your truly,
BILLY DINGMAN.

MADE VENISON SEIZURE

Fish and Game Inspector Robert Carson seized two quarters of venison alleged to have been brought into the City of Peterborough by Napier Bennett, who resides above Buckhorn. They were found in his sleigh in the Palace Hotel yard. Mr. Carson recently made a fish seizure at Mud Lake.

Within The Military Circle

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

BELLEVILLE.

It is reported that orders have been received to begin mobilising the 39th Battalion at once. This will bring much activity into the Belleville military district.

Orderly Officer for tomorrow—Lieut. B. K. Allen. Next for duty—Lieut. L. W. Hopkins.

KINGSTON

There are several good musicians among the veterans of the city and steps were taken yesterday to organize an orchestra.

All non-coms. and men of the 21st Battalion are prohibited from wearing cap badges other than those supplied by the battalion. They are also prohibited from polishing the same.

The 14th guard are playing football every morning in Artillery park and they intend having two good teams to play these games this spring and summer.

Orders have been received to keep on recruiting in Kingston and throughout the Division. Recruits are applying every day, and when medically and otherwise fit they are accepted. The 8th Mounted Rifles, 38th and 39th Battalions are already over strength.

Wednesday night was mess dinner night at Tete du Pont barracks, and the officers had a most delightful dinner followed by a demonstration in honor of the patron Saint of the Emerald Isle. Some excellent addresses were delivered, and the musical programme was not lacking. The R.C.H.A. band furnished a program of Irish and patriotic music, and the event was voted one of the best in the history of the mess.

AWFULLY SICK BUT HAD TO WORK

Was So Worn Out Had to Get Help or Die. Everything Failed to Help Until He Got Vinol. Read What He Says.

Atlee, Va.—"I was rapidly losing flesh, was weak, run-down, had no appetite, my blood was poor and I could not sleep nights. I am a farmer and truckman, so had to keep about my work, but I was so weak, tired and worn out I knew I had got to get help or die.

"Doctors gave me medicines and I tried everything that was recommended but I failed to get any help until I tried Vinol. I am now taking my third bottle, my appetite is fine, I sleep well all night, my blood is good and I am much stronger, in fact I feel like another man. Vinol is the best medicine I have ever taken."—ORLANDO W. BORKEY, Atlee, Va.

Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, is a constitutional remedy for poor blood and all run-down, weak and debilitated conditions. Vinol creates a good hearty appetite and digestion, and makes pure healthy blood.

If we can induce you to try a bottle of Vinol as a body builder and strength-creator, and you do not find it is all we claim, we will return your money on demand.

Special Meeting Of City Council

At the conclusion of the civic committees' meeting last evening, a special meeting of the City Council was held, presided over by Mayor Panter. All the members were present excepting Ald. Earle.

The object of the meeting was to endorse and pass through its various stages the following bylaw:

A bylaw to provide for the issuing of $21,205.62 of debentures to defray the cost of improving and extending the water works system of the city of Belleville.

The Council, after being called to order, and the object explained, reverted to the order of bylaws, with Ald. Woodley in the chair. The bylaw was passed through its various stages and numbered, after which the Council adjourned.

WITH THE CANADIANS IN FRENCH TRENCHES

Among the Canadians now fighting in France is Captain Harold A. Moore, a Toronto boy, who for the past few years has been residing in London, England.

At the outbreak of the war, Captain Moore's Company, 3rd Battalion, London (Eng.) Regiment, was just starting for summer camp. Then like many other Territorials they were immediately mustered into service; first at Malta and then in France.

The regiment was recently visited personally by Generals French and Joffre, and this naturally was quite an event.

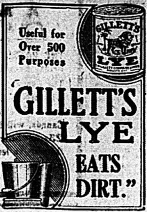
Captain Moore is one of the Directors of the J. Walter Thompson Advertising Agency, and is in charge of the British branch of that concern.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT

The Philharmonic Society of Belleville in the concert of last evening in the spacious and beautiful auditorium of Bridge Street Church, scored another great success in their production and rendition of that world renowned masterpiece of the immortal Gounod, "The Redemption." The music is a lyrical setting forth of the three great facts upon which Christianity is founded—the Passion and Death of the Saviour; His glorious life from His Resurrection to His Ascension; the spread of Christianity through its Apostles. It was a consideration of the terrible results of the war, and the fact that the whole world seems pulsating with sorrow and terror at this time that induced Mr. Cameron to select the presentation of the "Redemption." The music is of the most difficult description and required months of practice before its presentation. The Society was particularly fortunate in obtaining the assistance of three professionals—Miss Luella Hall, as organist; Mr. David Ross, baritone; Mr. George Dixon, tenor. Miss Hall has a provincial reputation as an organist. Our expectations were great, but Miss Hall surpassed everything we had anticipated. Her wonderful control of the magnificent organ recently installed in Bridge Street Church was marvellous. I have no recollection of hearing any organist who captivated and charmed an audience as did Miss Hall. Her accompaniments were perfect. In the scene of the Crucifixion her portrayal of the sweep of the storm, of the earthquake, the wails and cries of the women, terror-stricken and heart-broken. Then the pianissimo effects, the low, sweet, sad strains produced so exquisitely—left nothing to be desired. We trust that this talented artist will soon revisit us. Mr. David Ross has a voice of great compass and range. He also, has achieved a more than provincial reputation. The work of the baritone and the tenor gave great pleasure and was extremely difficult. Mr. Dixon has a voice of great power and delighted his audience. Miss Joy Higgs as an accompanist of the organ, was heard to great advantage. Mrs. Allen sang the song of Mary—"While my watch I am keeping," and the angel song—"The appearance of the angel. In Part II. a recitative sung by Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Nicholson and Mrs. Duff. In Part II. Miss Stork sang the soprano solo. In the "Hymn of the Apostles" much heavy work was performed most acceptably by a quartette composed of Mrs. Allen, Miss Lavoie, Mr. Ross and Mr. Dixon. The soloists and the quartettes gave much pleasure, and our Belleville stars won unstinted praise. As to the chorus—no one unfamiliar with the work necessary to be accomplished in order to mould a large number of voices in such a manner as to produce perfect harmony, could possibly imagine the extent of the labors performed by Mr. Cameron. The blending of the voices, the subordination and elimination of untuneful voices, the stern necessity of repeated injunctions—and all this work to be performed with the one end to be achieved, the successful production and rendition of a great musical masterpiece in such a manner as to meet the cynicisms of critics, and the applause and gratitude of his fellow-townsmen. In addition, Mr. Cameron deserves the thanks of the citizens generally for the musical education he is giving constantly and gratuitously. The chorus was grand, well balanced. Their rendering of what I consider the gem of the evening: "Unfold Ye Portals," was splendidly executed. The concert ended with the Hallelujah Chorus. I desire to say that the numerous recitatives given by Messrs. Ross and Dixon were splendidly rendered by these gentlemen, and we shall give them a hearty welcome if they will revisit our city.

Yours truly,
JOHN J. B. FLINT.



CAFETERIA PROVED SPLENDID SUCCESS

Had the shade of St. Patrick perchance wandered into the Cafeteria so gayly decorated and opened by the ladies of St. Andrew's on Wednesday afternoon, his heart would have been gladdened by the array of good things so temptingly displayed. The white-capped attendants were most attentive and may well congratulate themselves on the social and financial success of their efforts.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

REGULAR MEETING

A regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education will be held this evening.

CHARGE DISMISSED

William Godfrey was this morning before the magistrate on a charge of drunkenness. The accused was allowed his liberty without the option of a fine.

REMANDED TO JAIL

Alexander B. Gordon, a middle-aged man, was arrested last night on a charge of vagrancy. The accused was this morning remanded to jail for a week. It is alleged that a more serious charge may be preferred against Gordon, the particulars of which have not been divulged.

ALL FEELING FINE

Mr. Robert Day of this city, this morning received a letter from his son Frank, who it will be remembered, left here with the 34th Battery, First Overseas Contingent. He is now in France, and is within six miles of the firing line. He is feeling well, as are the rest of the boys, who all wish to be kindly remembered to their friends at home.

BREAKING THE LAW

A member of the local police force last night whilst on his beat, on Front street came across an automobile which was left standing on the street without any lights being displayed. The car was also facing the wrong direction. The owner was ascertained and notified that he was breaking the law.

AGED LADY DEAD

An aged and respected lady, Catherine Hall, widow of the late Mr. Adam Hall of Thurlow Township, passed away last night after being ill for some 2 years. Deceased was born in the year 1838 and had resided in this county all her life. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her. Mrs. Hall was a member of the Presbyterian church. Some years ago her husband preceded her to the tomb. A family of six sons and two daughters survive. The sons are Samuel, James and Walter of Thurlow, Geo. A. of Tweed, Alex. of Vernon, B. C., and C. M. of this city. The daughters are Mrs. Jas. McCreary of Thurlow and Mrs. J. Jackson of Sask.

Each report brings fresh proof of the great part that Canadians are playing in the war in Europe. The Dominion's brave sons at the front are ably upholding the best traditions of their native land.

Uncle Sam is going to have a navy to be proud of—if he can get enough sailors to man it.

IMPROVING OUR HIGHWAYS

"The granting of substantial assistance toward the improvement of our public highways" was one of the most important planks in Sir Robert Borden's platform which was submitted to and endorsed by the electors on September 21st, 1911. Conscious of the importance of this question it was made a prominent feature of the Conservative campaign in 1911. Provincial legislatures and municipal councils had been found incapable of coping, owing to the great development, with the problem of modern highways. Sir Robert Borden was the first Canadian statesman to recognize that cheap carriage from the farm to the market was as important to the farmer as cheap and adequate railway facilities. His proposition that the federal government assist in the solution of this problem by substantial aid, aggregating millions, it was recognized would in a large measure meet the immediate requirements.

With such a strong endorsement as was given this proposal by the people in 1911, the Conservative administration lost no time in putting it into effect. Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, by whose department the new work was to be administered, introduced a bill within a few months after taking office to put into effect the mandate received from the electors.

The introduction of this important measure, one that the Government had received authority from the people to put into effect, was the signal for the most bitter opposition on the part of the Liberals. Hon. William Pugsley attacked it in the course of the debate on the address in which notice was given of the Government's intention to introduce such legislation. Sir Wilfrid Laurier applauded Mr. Pugsley's hostility to the scheme to give the farmers modern highways and the laborers more employment. Later Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved a resolution that the bill "be not now read," which meant its defeat if carried.

Every Liberal in the House of Commons opposed this scheme to aid the farmers, and which had been endorsed by the people of Canada only three months before. Every Conservative supported the Good Roads measure.

The bill passed the House of Commons in face of the most bitter opposition on the part of the Liberals. Defeated in the Commons, Sir Wilfrid had recourse to the Liberal Senators. Here he was all-powerful; they were his puppets, but among the people's representatives in the Commons he had failed. The Liberal Senators obeyed their "master's voice" and killed the bill.

When the session of 1912-13 came the Government introduced the Highways Improvement Bill again. It also inserted in the estimates the sum of $1,500,000 for the purpose, divided among the provinces according to population.

The bill was introduced on December 11, 1912, and the second reading was moved on April 21, 1913.

The Liberals at once attacked the bill. Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the second reading again moved "that the bill be not now read a second time," and fought it at every stage. When it came to the third reading all the Liberals voted directly against the bill; while all the Conservatives voted for it.

Again Sir Wilfrid appealed to his Senators, and again they obeyed him in opposition to the people's expressed wish. For a second time the Liberal Senate killed the Good Roads Bill.

Thousands of miles of improved highways would now be ready for the farmers but for Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And this great federal expenditure would have stimulated legislatures and municipal bodies everywhere to put forth greater efforts. The amount proposed to expend was only one-seventh of what Sir Wilfrid permitted to be grafted or wasted on the Transcontinental, but even this amount he denied the Canadian farmers.

A PHILOSOPHER IN THE TRENCHES

"All well so far," writes a member of the first Canadian contingent, "and what there is in store it is impossible to foretell. One thing I know, and that is, if God sees fit to allow me to return I shall more than ever love my Canada, shall more than ever realize her beautiful, her glorious characteristics. If this reaches you on a cold, shivery day with a bit of a blizzard raging perhaps you will be disposed to laugh when I tell you that there is no climate equal in its blessings to that of Canada. As you know, I have travelled fairly extensively and I have lived, yes, lived is the term, for my stay has usually been of months, in half a doen countries, but Canada beats them all. When we return, that is, those of us who do return, we shall not regret our experience, we shall be proud of the fact that we gave the best that is in us in defence of the Mother Country and the Empire to which we belong, but we shall more than ever be disposed, at home and in church, to lift up our voices and to say, 'Thank the Lord, I'm a Canadian.' This is the feeling that is deep down in the hearts of all of us. It inspires us to fight the harder, to cheerfully endure the hardships of the trenches and of exposure, as we feel we are fighting in a measure out of gratitude to the country that gave us birth, but even more for the credit and honor of our own beloved land."

The writer of the foregoing may also be termed "A Philosopher of the Trenches." He is clearly a patriot of the intense order. But his words should sink deep into the hearts of his countrymen. They should nerve and strengthen all of us like him to dedicate the best that is in us to the service of our country. It is with inspiration of this sort that the Patriotism and Production campaign is being carried on throughout the country. It is to impress this idea upon the people that conferences are being held in various districts and that literature on two hundred different subjects referring to agriculture can be had free by dropping a letter to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

At the conferences is explained by men of experience, men of practical ideas, how we stay-at-homes can best second and support the efforts of those who are enduring all the horrors of modern war. All that we are asked to do is to serve ourselves with extra care and attention, to be painstaking to the utmost of our power in husbandry, in tilling the soil, in selecting the seed, in methods of breeding and rearing live stock—in short, in doing these things that, while benefiting ourselves—will enable the Mother Country and our sons abroad to realize how thoroughly and how efficiently we are behind them.

CURRENT COMMENT

Hamilton Herald: "There's going to be a federal election soon—that is certain. When Sir Robert Borden rouses himself so far as to make a slashing campaign speech in Parliament, it means that there will be "something doing" in the near future."

Hamilton Spectator: "Should there be no Dominion election this year, it will certainly not be through lack of effort of the Grit press. By nagging and contemptible insinuation its members are doing their best to bring one about."

Toronto Globe: "The licensing propensity is likely to be extended to bill posters and advertising sign painters by the Ontario legislature. It may some day be more economical to enumerate the things that may be done without a license." Criticising others, for instance.

Winnipeg Free Press: "Hon. Joseph Martin is hard at work in British Columbia reading Liberals out of the Liberal party. Having thrown Asquith and Lloyd George out bodily from the Liberal party of Great Britain, he finds it comparatively easy to deal with lesser individuals in British Columbia."

The cartoonist of the Spokane Spokesman-Review has a clever drawing depicting Doc Bryan and Kid Mexico in a revival of the screaming farce, "A Comedy of Errors," the Doc being in the act of solemnly declaring: "If you don't do what I say, I will issue another protest." The killing of the Chicago man, McManus, will give new force to the demand that has been heard throughout the Union within the last week for active intervention. The policy of watchful waiting has quite apparently failed, and the rest of the civilized world looks to the United States to do something to put an end to an intolerable situation.

An exchange suggests that "If the acquittal of Thaw last week for conspiracy in escaping from Matteawan is followed in the next few days by his freedom and subsequent oblivion, there will be much reason for a fervent rendering of the doxology."

Toronto Star: "How did you burst your boot" demanded an officer at Halifax of a private. "I wiggled my big toe, sir," was the reply. Who is the biggest liar, the imagined soldier or the author of the pun?

Edmonton Journal: "The Dominion Government will commence the operation of the National Transcontinental between Quebec and Winnipeg this summer. It is necessary that some service should be given, and as the Grand Trunk authorities are not willing to take the line over, for the present at least, under the terms of their contract, the Government is forced to step in. That, as a result of the enormous over-expenditure on the line under the old administration, a revision of the contract is inevitable has been the opinion in all well-informed circles for a long while back. This is given additional weight by the development referred to."

Starting Fourth Contingent Now

Government's Original Plans to Keep 50,000 Under Training Being Kept up

OTTAWA, March 18.—With the Third Contingent practically all recruited, equipped and in training, orders are being issued by the Militia Department to start enlisting men for the Fourth Contingent. This is carrying out the original plan of the Government as outlined by Sir Robert Borden, which was to keep fifty thousand men constantly under training in Canada and to recruit and send forward constant reinforcements. Four thousand men of the Second Contingent have already left and the remainder are expecting to sail any time. As they depart for the front their places will be filled with new regiments.

The Third, Fourth and future contingents will not likely be sent to the front as full army divisions, but as reinforcements for the first two contingents. Canada will have her hands full keeping the first two contingents up to full strength, especially as they are apparently going to have the honor of being among the first line regiments when the "great push" starts.

The first orders for the Fourth Contingent have been issued for the recruitng of another infantry regiment in Ottawa, and Eastern Ontario. The 38th Royal Ottawa Regiment for the Third Contingent is now up to full strength and orders have been received by the Governor General's Foot Guards to start recruiting for the next regiment.

The Militia authorities are exceedingly pleased over the response for recruiting for the last French Canadian Regiment, the 41st Regiment, for the Third Contingent. The recruiting only started two weeks ago, and when the units were all gathered together it was found that the regiment was five hundred over strength. Many of the men are lumberjacks, hardy river men and woodsmen of the north, and will make about as sturdy a regiment as has been gathered together in Canada. The additional men will likely be used as a basis for a new French regiment for the Fourth Contingent to be called at once.

PRIEST, JEWELS, MYSTERY

Curious Case Before N. Y. Customs for Appraisal

NEW YORK, March 18.—A King's ransom in jewels, blazoned in the royal eagles of Spain at the time Charles V., most powerful monarch of the sixteenth century, ruled Castile, Aragon and the German Empire, lies under guard at the Customs House, awaiting appraisal.

The gems, set in gold on white and purple robes and mounted on two golden crowns, were brought into New York by a Catholic priest, clad in shabby clothes, who fled from Mexico City a month ago, made his way to Vera Cruz, and sailed aboard the steamer Montevideo. The Montevideo reached New York, March 6, with this priest and six other fugitive priests who had been banished from Mexico by General Obregon, Carranza's lieutenant at Mexico City.

From the depths of a battered suitcase, the gems and robes were tumbled out upon the dock for inspection by the customs authorities. They so dazzled the inspectors that they were hastily put back in the suitcase. Under guard they were taken to a safe deposit vault where they were locked up and special watchmen detailed to guard them. Rough estimates placed their value at from $300,000 to $5,000,000.

Meantime, the obscure priest who brought the gems and robes into the country, is waiting, without divulging his identity, for the appraisal. The customs' authorities would not say who or where he is.

Thin Folks Who Would be Fat

Increase in Weight Ten Pounds or More.

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.

"I'd certainly give most anything to be able to fat up a few pounds and stay that way," declares every excessively thin man or woman. Such a result is not impossible, despite past failures. Thin people are victims of mal-nutrition, a condition which prevents the fatty elements of food from being taken up by the blood as they are when the power of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood, all the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal amount of fat the nutritive processes must be artificially supplied with the power which nature has denied them. This can best be accomplished by eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is a scientific combination of six of the best strength-giving, fat-producing elements known to the medical profession. Taken with meals, it mixes with the food and turns the sugars and starches into rich, ripe nourishment for the tissues and blood and its rapid effect is remarkable. Reported gains of from ten to twenty-five pounds in a single month are by no means infrequent. Yet its action is perfectly natural and absolutely harmless. Sargol is sold by J. S. McKeown's and all other good druggists everywhere and every package contains a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in the treatment of nervous indigestion and general stomach disorders, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh producing effect, be used by those who are not willing to increase their weight ten pounds or more.

Won't Accept German Parole

PARIS, March 18—General Leman, Belgian defender of Liege, now a prisoner in Germany, has refused to accept his liberty under a parole which the Germans have offered him, according to a letter received by one of his friends, a major in a Belgian engineer corps.

General Leman replied to the offer of a parole, he wrote his friend, that his first act on obtaining freedom would be to offer his services to Belgium and his King. He added that the wound in his foot which had troubled him so long had at last healed.

Notable Success For French Army

Military Crest of Hill North of Perthes Captured and Held

PARIS, March 18.—(Special)—A victory of considerable importance has been gained by the French army north of Perthes in the Champagne region, in the gaining possession of the military crest on the west of a hill on a legth of about half a miles and some ground to the south of it a quarter of a mile in depth. This success has given the French forces command not only of the height, but of all it overlooks on the northern side of the ridge which extends from Perthes to Maisons..

The Germans, the war office says, have grasped the importance of this advance and launched a very violent counter attack, led by a regiment of landsturm, supported by regiments of the Prussian Guard. The close formation of the German ranks presented an excellent target for the French machine guns, which literally mowed them down. Only a few survivors regained the German trenches under the terrific French fire. The losses of the enemy were several thousands.

Progress was also made in the region in the woods extending between Perthes and Souain.

North of Arras the French soldiers clung tenaciously to their trenches, that were captured from the enemy the preceding night, and they managed to repel without much difficulty a third counter attack of the Germans.

Violent fighting took place for the possession of an excavation seized by the French troops at Carnoy, near Albert, but the Germans were driven back in disorder.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND IN N. Y. PARADE

NEW YORK, March 18.—More than 15,000 men took part in the St. Patrick's Day parade here to-day. Two companies of cadets from Montreal, half a regiment of Irishmen from the west in ancient Irish uniforms and a company of girls dressed in white and wearing wide green sashes, besides various military organizations participated.

Earlier in the day the 29th United States Infantry landed at the Battery and marched to City Hall to be reviewed by Mayor Mitchel and Major General Wood before leaving for Panama. The regulars have been stationed at Governor's Island. Later the Union League Club gave a luncheon to Major General Wood and the other reviewing officers. Governor Whitman will be a speaker tonight at the annual dinner of Ireland's American friends. Many other St. Patrick's Day dinners are on the celebration programme.

AS TO SWINE

The Germans propose to kill off all their pigs, twenty million of them, because dead they will make good pork, bacon and ham, but alive they reduce the stock of human food by eating potatoes. Such wholesale slaughter may mean a temporary drop in pig-meat prices, but what does it promise for the future, when the products have been consumed? Then will the wise man who has reserved the best for breeding profit exceedingly.

A BILLION WHEAT DEFICIT

According to reliable statistics there are tied up at the present time about two million bushels of wheat, the production of the countries at war. This is in the vicinity of half the world's total production of wheat. A recognized authority argues that granting the warring nations produce a one-half crop in the coming year, a deficit of one billion bushels will still be shown. The three countries upon which the filling of this deficit of one billion bushels will rest are Canada, the United States and Argentina. The combined output of these three countries is only 1,249,000,000; their exportable surplus would, of course, be much less, so, it can easily be seen that the question is not one to be easily solved and it behooves Canada to increase her production as much as she possibly can, for when the war is over and trade begins to re-establish itself and the nations undergo a process of rehabilitation, the demand for all breadstuffs will be enormous.

CARE OF SHADE TREES

Although, of course, nineteen-twentieths of the publications issued by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, and which can be had free on application to the Publication Branch, refer to matters especially of interest to the farmer, there are a few that commend themselves to dwellers in cities. A noteworthy bulletin of this description is No. 19, dealing with "The Planting and Care of Shade Trees". Written by F. E. Buck, B.S.A., Assistant to the Dominion Horticulturist, it is an authoritative handbook on the subject. Practical directions and advice in the selection of shade trees, their planting, transplanting and care are given, along with notes on the principal injuries and unfavorable conditions to which shade trees are subjected, especially in towns and cities. Lists of varieties suitable for street and home planting are also set forth. As Director Grisdale of the Experimental Farm says, this Bulletin should prove of value both to the urban and rural sections of our populations.

Easter

is the great music festival of the year. Without music Easter loses much of its significance. The Victrola brings all the world's wealth of sacred music into your home.

Instead of hearing a few of these beautiful hymns and sacred selections sung only once a year, you can hear them often and come really to know them as they deserve to be known—as they are rendered by the world's best singers, on the Victrola.

Angels Ever Bright and Fair — Lucy Marsh } 35075
Unfold Ye Portals — Trinity Choir }
Christ Arose — Hayden Quartet } 16003
Beautiful Isle of Somewhere — Harold Jarvis }
Creation—With Verdure Clad — Lucy Marsh—60055

"Let Us Get Better Acquainted Gentlemen!"

Our "Direct From the Mills" Proposition Has Met With Splendid Reception From the Citizens of Belleville

Since opening day we have enjoyed a steady patronage, and men who came as skeptics—men who could hardly credit the statements made—have gone away convinced that the Suit or Overcoat we make to measure at $15 cannot be duplicated in any reliable tailoring firm under $25 or $30. There is no secret about it. The facts are plain. We simply abolish all profits of the middleman by dealing direct with the great Scotch mills and delivering the garments to you without the profit of the wholesaler tacked on. It's easy to us, for we command the capital, and our entire chain of stores in the principal cities and large centres creates an immence demand.

COME AND SEE!

We cordially invite you men who have not been here yet to visit our store. Come in and see these splendid fabrics. See the wonderful range of Suitings and Overcoatings that come "direct from the mills." You have unrestricted choice, remember. You pick from any fabric in the store, and there is but the one price—$15—no more, no less.

"WAR"

* * *

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

"Why is all this commotion about armaments," I asked my father, "if neither party plans to use them?" He answered me with the old saying: "In times of peace prepare for war."

Thus each is keeping the eye on the other, and each accuses the other of warlike motives. So again begins the endless circle—the serpent with his tail in his mouth.

On the morning of March 12 my father burst into my room beaming with joy: "Hurrah," he cried, "Good news!"

"Disarmament?" I asked, delighted.

"On the contrary. Yesterday a great council of war was held. We are ready on an hour's notice to send out 800,000 men, and I tell you, my child, Silesia is ours whenever we choose."

"Oh God! Oh God!" I groaned, "must this affliction come upon us once more? Who can be so devoid of conscience that for greed and ambition——"

And my father, denying that it was greed or ambition, only justice and patriotic ardor which pressed for war, harangued on the subject in his illogical manner, jumbling his arguments together, proving that all wished for peace, but if war came it must be met—until I was quite frantic and said, beside myself with emotion:

"You know well, that not only you, but the whole council want war, then why not say it out frankly? Why all this falsehood? Why tell the people they hope for peace when they are madly arming? Show your teeth and your closed fists, but do not the while whisper soft, false words of reassurance. If you are wildly eager to draw the sword, do not pretend that you are only caressing the hilt."

He rose to the height of passion, and finally I burst into exhausting tears. My father was so amazed that he did not utter a word.

Now came a time of hopes and fears, ringing the changes on "Peace is secure," "War is certain." But once the word "war," this little seed of thought, finds its way to the front, it seems inevitably to produce—war.

News came that Prussia was arming the Silesian fortresses. Austria disclaimed any intention of attacking Prussia and demanded that the latter should disarm. Prussia declared herself innocent of warlike intentions, but strengthened her standing army, hence Austria felt compelled to continue her preparations. So the dual game continued, and became a triple game as Italy armed herself with haste.

The excitement became universal and more violent every day. Every newspaper and speech announced that war was in sight. Bismarck was hated and reviled on every side. Letters from Aunt Cornelia in Prussia telling that the war was anything but wished, and that Bismarck was no less hated in his own country. She said the army was reported as refusing to go out in a war against brothers; that Queen Augusta had thrown herself at her husband's feet to pray for peace. Had perhaps our beautiful Empress also done the same and with tears begged for disarmament who knows? Perhaps the Emperor himself wished for peace, but it seemed that not even the throne could stand against the pressure and strain on every side.

On June 1 Prussia declared to the Assembly that she would disarm if Austria and Saxony would. Vienna responded accusing Prussia of planning an attack in concert with Italy. Austria would call the German Alliance to arms and decide the case of the Duchies. Holstein should cooperate. Prussia declared that this broke the treaty, and they moved into Holstein. Bismarck issued a circular letter. The press cried for war and predicted a victory to strengthen the national confidence.

On June 11 Austria proposed that the Alliance should take a hand against Prussia for helping herself to Holstein. On June 14 the vote stood nine to six—accepted. Oh, those three terrible votes! All was over. Ambassadors are dismissed. The Alliance requests Austria and Bavaria to go to the rescue of Hanover and Saxony, who have already attacked the Prussians.

On the 18th, Prussia's war manifesto appeared. On the same date Austria's troops marched out, and on the 22nd Prussia issued her first army orders. King William said:

THE HUN'S DIARY

In the light of the foregoing please consider the tales of barbarism which follow:

(a) Diary of Private Hassemer (Eighth Corps):

"3.9.1914 At Sommepy (Marne.) Frightful bloodshed, the village burnt to the ground. French thrown into the flaming houses, civilians and everything burnt together."

(b) Diary of Lieut. Kietzmann (2nd company, 1st Battalion of 49th Infantry Regiment) under date of Aug. 18th.

"A little ahead of Diest there is the village of Schaffen. Fifty civilians, about, were concealed in the tower of the Church and from above they fired upon our troops with a mitrailleuse. All the civilians have been shot."

(c) Diary of an anonymous Saxon officer (178th Regt., 12th Army Corps, 1st Saxon Corps.)

"August 26. The charming village of Gue-D'Mossus (Ardennes), though guiltless, as I think, has been burnt. I was told that a cyclist fell from his machine and that his gun as a result of the fall went off accidentally. Then they made a fire in that place. Male members of the population were literally thrown into the flames. One must hope that such atrocities will not be repeated."

This was not the first time that the unknown Saxon officer had seen "such atrocities." On the evening of Aug. 25th, at Villersen-Fagne (Belgian Ardennes) where some killed and wounded Germans had been found, he had seen "the parish priest and other residents shot," and two days earlier, Aug. 23, at the village of Bouvigues, to the north of Dinant he had seen things which he thus describes.

"By a gap in the rear we enter the property of a well-to-do resident and we occupy the house. Across a labyrinth of apartments we reach the threshold. There lay the dead body of the owner. Inside the house our men, like vandals, have destroyed everything. Everything has been ransacked. Along the countryside the spectacle of villagers lying dead on the ground baffles description. The shooting at close quarters has almost decapitated them. Every house has been ransacked to its innermost recesses and the little savings of the people have been wrested from them. Men shot; women and children locked up in a convent whence some shots had been fired. For this reason the convent is on the point of being burnt; nevertheless it can be ransomed if it will surrender the culprits and pay tribute of 15,000 francs."

(d) Diary of Private Phillipp (of Kamenz 1st Company, 1st Battalion, 1st Battalion of 178th Regiment.)

"At ten o'clock in the evening the 1st Battalion of the 178th went down to a village burnt north of Dinant. Terrifying splendid spectacle. At the entrance of the village were about fifty villagers shot for having fired on our troops from ambush. During the night many others were shot, so that we counted over 200. Women and children with lamps in their hands had to witness the terrible spectable. We ate our rice among the corpses, for we had eaten nothing since morning."

"Women and children with lamps in their hands had to witness the terrible spectacle." As to whether the spectacle was the actual massacre or the numbering of the poor victims, or both, Private Philipp offers no information.

Professor Bedier shows that the gallant colonel of the noble 178th on that fateful evening was merely acting in harmony with his comrades in arms elsewhere and, as I shall show in another chapter, in strict accordance with the spirit of the official "German War Book." Some extracts may be here cited in proof of the spirit of the official "German War Book." Some extracts from the ignoble proclamations that the Germans posted in Belgium may be here cited in proof of the spirit that inspires Teuton arms in modern days.

The first extract is from a proclamation by General Von Buloy placarded at Liege, Aug. 22, 1914.

"The people of the town of Andenne, after protesting their peaceful intentions, have treacherously surprised our troops. Acting with my aproval the General in command has burnt the entire district and about one hundred persons have been shot."

Here's another extract, this time from a proclamation issued at Grivegnee, Sept. 8, 1914, by the Major Commandant Dieckmann:

"He who fails to comply immediately with the order 'Hands up!' renders himself guilty (sic) of the penalty of death."

The following extract is from a proclamation of Field Marshal Baron von der Goltz posted at Brussels Oct. 5, 1914:

"In future the places nearest to the scene where similar acts (destruction of railroads and telegraph lines) have taken place—Whether accomplices or not matters little—will be punished without mercy. To this end hostages have been taken from all districts adjacent to railroads threatened by similar attacks and at the first attempt to destroy railroads, telegraph wires or telephone they will be immediately shot."

If any critic feels inclined to doubt that the Germans in this case were not true to their word they are referred for a most convincing demonstration to the Sixth Report of the Belgian Commission of Enquiry (Havre, Nov. 10, 1914.)

Belgium Again Denies Infamous German Charge

Gov't Declares on Its Honor Neutrality Was Not Forfeited Befor Ware

LONDON, March 18.—The Belgian Government today issued a protest against the German allegation that documents found in the archives at Brussels showed that Belgium had forfeited her neutrality before the outbreak of the war. After recounting the conversations which took place between the British and Belgian military officers in 1906 and 1912, which, as previously stated by Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Minister, had "reference only to the situation that would be created if Belgian neutrality had already been violated," the Belgian protest says:

"The Belgian Government declares on its honor that not only was no convention ever made, but also that neither of the two Governments ever made any advances or propositions concerning the conclusion of any such convention. Moreover, the Minister of Great Britain at Brussels, who alone could contract engagements in her behalf, never intervened in these conversations and the whole Belgian Ministry are ready to pledge themselves on oath that no conclusion arising from these conversations was ever brought before the Cabinet or even laid before one single member of it.

"The documents which the Germans discovered give evidence of all this. Their meaning is perfectly clear, provided that no part of them is either garbled or suppressed. In face of the calumnies repeated again and again, our Government, faithfully reflecting Belgian uprightness, considers that it is its duty to inflict once more on the spoiler of Belgium the brand of infamy, his only legitimate reward.

"It also takes the opportunity of declaring in answer to allegations, whose malevolence is obvious, that:

"First—Before the declaration of war, no French force, even of the smallest size, had entered Belgium, and no trustworthy evidence can be produced to contradict this affirmation.

"Second—Not only did Belgium refuse the offer of military help offered by one of the guaranteeing powers, but after the declaration of war she earnestly solicited the protection of her guarantors.

"Third—When undertaking, as was her duty, a vigorous defence of her fortresses, Belgium asked for and received with gratitude such help as her guarantors were able to place at her disposition for that defence.

"Belgium, the victim of her own loyalty, will not bow her head before any power. Her honor defies assaults of falsehood. She has faith in the justice of the world. On the day of judgment the triumph belongs to the people who have sacrificed everything to serve with conscientiousness the cause of truth, right and honor."

MAN'S THROAT CUT OPERATOR KILLED

Highwaymen do Great Stroke of Work Near Highland Falls, N.Y.

HIGHLAND FALLS N.Y., Mar. 18.—Highwaymen operating during the night along the West Shore Railway held up one man, robbed him and cut his throat and later entered the railway station here, shot and killed the night telegraph operator and escaped after taking a small sum from the cash drawer.

George Griffen, whose throat was cut, was taken to the Kingston Hospital, in a serious condition. The body of the murdered operator, Omar Hotaling, was found near his telegraph key. There were five bullets in his body and death had been almost instantaneous. Apparently, his assailants had fired from inside the station. An unfinished report which lay on his desk indicated that the shooting occurred between 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning. Hotaling was 24 years old. He lived in New Burgh. Three years ago his cousin, of the same name, was murdered under similar circumstances in the railroad station at Tappan.

Detectives sought Hotaling's murderers today. Two arrests have been made in connection with their investigation.

SIX MONTHS IN JAIL FOR SARCASTIC POEM

BERLIN via London, March 18.—Authorship of a poem containing sarcastic references to Emperor William has resulted in First Lieut. Alfred Humbert of the 31st Regiment of French Rifles, a war prisoner in the fortress at Strassburg, being sentenced to six months imprisonment. The wife of the chief surgeon of the hospital in which Humbert was being treated, and to whom he gave the poem, has been sentenced to one month in prison for utterances unfriendly to Germany.

It Stops the Twinges of Rheumatism, Limbers the Muscles, Eases the Joints

AMAZING RELIEF COMES AT ONCE —CURE EVERY TIME

USE NERVILINE

Aching joints and sore muscles are common in rheumatic people. Inflammation is deep in the tissues. You might use a dozen remedies and derive less relief than Nerviline will give you in half an hour.

Nerviline is a pain-subduer that words do not altogether describe.

It is fully five times stronger than most remedies, not that it affects the skin unfavorably—no, its great power is due to its wonderful pentrative quality—it strikes in deeply, but never burns or blisters.

Just rub Nerviline into sore muscles, stiff joints, and note the glow of comfort, the ease of pain that follows.

You are astonished, delighted; this is because words do not express the promptness and permanency with which Nerviline cures every ache and pain in the muscles and joints.

Marvellous, you'll say. Natural, we say, because Nerviline is different, stronger, more penetrating a true pain-subduer. Just try it and see if it doesn't cure rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, strains and sprains.

The large 50c family size bottle is far more economical than the 25c trial size. Get it today. Sold by dealers everywhere, or direct from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

DEATH ROLL.

MRS. CHAS. W. HODGES

The Brockville Times in its issue of yesterday has the following reference to the death of Mrs. Charles W. Hodges, a son of whom resides in this city:

After a lingering illness Mrs. Chas. W. Hodges passed away this morning at her home, 36 Schoffield ave. Deceased was born in the Township of Augusta, 63 years ago but has been a resident of Brockville since 1893. She was an active worker in Trinity church and was greatly beloved by many friends made through a life of service and usefulness.

Her husband predeceased her. He died in 1903. She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Charles Laundry, Mrs. Isaac Paul, and Mrs. Roy Earl, two sons, Alexander M. Hodges, Brockville, and Charles E. Hodges, Belleville, also four sisters, Mrs. Albert Pennock, and Mrs. Thomas Howison, Brockville; Mrs. C. Gagleish and Mrs. John McLean of Augusta.

Y. M. C. A. Ladies Tie The Bankers

Brilliant Stick Work Not Credited By Referee — Bankers' Play One Hand Only

Not satisfied with being defeated in three straight games, by the High School young ladies, the young women hockeyists of the Y.M.C.A. tackled the bank clerks last evening, and managed to come through with a tie score, it being understood that the bankers were to play with one hand only. The game was a medley of amusing incidents, the gentlemen apparently holding down their natural ambition to win because of an inherent gallantry due the ladies. There were some lively scenes, however, and while the game throughout was not noted for freedom from error, there was much worthy of favorable comment.

Scrapper Morrison, easily the star of the Bankers, in fact he was too fast, made rush after rush, only to be stopped by the strong defence of the girls' team.

Marguerite Sharpe was on her job every minute, making some beautiful stops. Edna Ford kept up a pace throughout the whole game that was both fast and furious, having one goal to her credit.

Gies was a tower of strength for his team, according to the girls who bumped into him.

Mr. Halpin would have played a good game had he not stopped to pick the girls up so often.

Jack Haggerty was one of the stars of the evening, inclined at times to show speed, but he never got far with the puck.

Art. Ferguson was the most genteelly considerate man on the team, giving way when he should have rushed. Time after time he was body checked from which it took him several minutes to recover.

Reg. Haggerty shared the honors of the evening with Scrapper Morrison. He was a splendid stick handler, but at times he was most too polite.

Greta Archibald played a good game, always on her job.

Girls—Goal, M. Sharpe; defence, C. Leavens, L. Sharpe; rover, G. Archibald; centre, M. Waters; wings, E. Ford, F. Stafford.

Bankers—Goal, Gies; defence, F. Morrison; rover, Jack Haggerty; centre, A. Ferguson; wings, Reg. Haggerty, Mr. Halpin.

Referee—Lewis Blais.

It is needless to add the referee had the time of his life trying to keep in touch with the game—but he gave satisfaction.

Letter From Gerald Spafford

Feb. 15th, 1915.

Dear Mother,—

We are now at the front; arrived on the 14th after over a week's continuous travel. Tell the people at home the boys are all well and anxious to get on the firing line. We are within sound of the guns, and at night can observe the flash of bursting shells.

Near where we are billeted are fresh made graves of those who have fallen; was talking to some of the farmers here. My knowledge of French is very useful at present, and they have some thrilling stories of the German invasion which conincide with what we read every day.

We are very comfortable, considering conditions of course; the continuous wet weather and mud is now a secondary consideration with us.

The trip overland was indeed interesting and I enjoyed it very much. I cannot speak too highly of the hospitality extended by the people during our trip.

My boys, Gunner Day, Yatemen, Ross and Carre, wish you to let their people know that they are well. Owing to scarcity of writing paper they cannot write.

You will pardon scribble, etc. As you will note the absence of name of location, etc., this is owing to censorship of letters.

Remember me to all at home. I am in the best of health and will write as often as possible. Concluding with love to you.

Your affectionate son,
GERALD.

Feb. 20th, 1915.

My Dear Mother,—

Received your letters, and as ever was delighted to know that all at home were well and still in the land of the living. This finds me in the best of health and no complaints as regards comfort, etc. Although we are still in mud, everyone seems contented, and believe that reports are as represented in newspapers respecting conditions. While it is disagreeable to be in mud at any time, still, our officers look to our comfort, and plenty of good clothing and food and comfortable billets can be secured under extraordinary conditions such as we have to undergo. On the whole we have fared well, and only the week-kneed and chronic-kicker element have made complaints.

Regarding vermin—would say only careless and dirty individuals have suffered, and naturally some have become infested temporarily; but our officers have provided new underwear at intervals, and so far we are very free from any evidence of vermin.

I wish to thank you, dear mother, for all your good wishes and blessings, and cannot express how sincerely I appreciate them, and hope you will find comfort in the fact that I, your son, at least fulfilled my duty, and can assure you that I endeavor to be a good boy even under the present conditions. I shall remember your sweet message and feel sure you will be rewarded for your goodness to your wandering boy.

Give my kind regards to all the good friends who enquire after my welfare. Tell them all the boys are well and enjoying the best of health and not one so far has been seriously indisposed.

Although we can hear the guns booming and some of our comrades are in the trenches we all feel confident that we shall come marching home, and all our anxious mothers shall be rewarded when they see their heroes back under the parental roof—men who have done their duty and done it well.

Tell Dr. Yeomans I see Pat and Ted quite often and they are getting along fine and are in the best of health. Give him my kind regards.

The country here is very interesting and affords us much interest. We take long rides every day and could write pages describing people and customs, etc., but owing to the lateness of the hour and am acting S.M. for a few days during the absence of our S.M. who is with the Col. in the trenches, I must conclude for the present. With love to all at home.

Your soldier boy,
GERALD.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior

Hopeful Signs Throughout West

Bank Man Says He Never Saw the Crop Outlook so Good

WINNIPEG, March 19.—(Special.)—After a business trip which took him as far as Calgary, C. W. Rowley, manager of the Main street branch of the Bank of Commerce, returned to the city yesterday. According to Mr. Rowley, conditions in the municipalities and rural districts were favorable and the extensive preparations for the crop made the outlook exceedingly bright. One of the most hopeful signs, he said, was the wave of conservatism throughout the prairie provinces which was being manifested in the general desire to work harder and save more.

"I never saw the outlook so good from the crop standpoint as it is this year," declared Mr. Rowley this morning. "The farmers have more land ready for the seed and it is better cultivated than ever before. They have worked harder and exercised more care in the selection of the seed. The effect is bound to be good. With reasonable luck as regards the weather we should get a large crop this year and the prices are sure to be high."

Discussing the Calgary oil situation Mr. Rowley expressed the opinion that the people of the Alberta city had suffered little as a result of the boom and its abatement. Outsiders, he believed, who had been responsible for the excitement and the undue disturbance, were the ones who had sunk their money.

DISASTROUS FIRE AT MARMORA VILLAGE

Number of Barns and Sheds Burned, Also Barber Shop and Pool Room

The Village of Marmora, situated in Hastings County, was at an early hour this morning visited by a disastrous fire, which destroyed some thousands of dollars worth of property. The fire broke out about one o'clock, and before the onward march of the devouring element had been checked several places, chiefly barns and sheds were reduced to ashes. Three horses and a cow were cremated.

The fire started in a shed or barn in rear of Mr. B. C. Hubbell's store. This structure was burned, as were also D. Kelly's barber shop and pool rooms; Daniel Shannon's barn and store house, Gray's barn, P. Sophie's livery barn, Connors & Gray's garage, Sullivan's barn with contents, including a team of horses and a hearse, the property of Wiggins & Marett, and Charles Claremont's barn. Mr. Sullivan lost a horse and cow.

The stores of Messrs. B. C. Hubbell and D. Shannon were somewhat damaged, but were saved from destruction.

TURNED DOWN FOR ARMY HE IS NOW A CAPTAIN

REGINA, Sask., March 19.—Special—Four years ago Theodore Sandys-Wensch came to Canada and joined the R.N.W.M.P, as a bugler. Of Belgian parentage, but British birth, his ambition had been to join the British army, but he was turned down at Sandhurst for defective eyesight. Today, though only 23 years old, he holds a captaincy in a crack British regiment, has been recommended for the Order of Leopold, and mentioned time and again in despatches for bravery.

UNSPEAKABLE TURK ON FRESH RAMPAGE

LONDON, March 19.—(Special.)—The foreign office was advised today that Turkish soldiers recently ran wild in the Urumiah district of northwestern Persia, and killed several hundred civilians. The Turks are said to have burned several villages after looting them.

"LET US BE CANDID"

London Express Gives News Censor Some Advice

LONDON, March 18.—"There can be no question that reasonless censoring of messages sent by American press correspondents in London, many of them English by birth and practically all of them English in their sympathies, has not only irritated America, but it has caused it naturally to be believed that things are not going well with us, and that there have been many disasters we are eager to hide," says the Daily Express in an editorial headed: "Let us be candid."

"The corresponding interference with letters and cables from America," continues the Express, "makes it impossible for us to be sure that we have, to quote Viscount Bryce, 'a just and complete picture of public opinion in that country.'

"There is no reason why the censor should hesitate to determine what is America's real mind, particularly as the Press Bureau feeds America with news and arbitrarily decides what it is able to digest."

Regarding Sir Edward Grey's replies to the American notes, the Express says: "We are determined to cut off Germany's supplies from America and all other neutral countries. America will, of course, protest. We shall consider her protest with all courtesy, but we shall not change our purposes. It is surely better to tell the truth."

COMBAT AT CARNOY COSTLY TO ENEMY

PARIS, March 19.—(Special.)—The combat at Carnoy, which began the evening of March 14 by the explosion of a heavily charged mine in one of the French advanced trenches, was in vain and costly for the Germans, according to an official note issued by the war office today.

"The battle lasted until the 17th," the note adds "and was marked by sharp fighting, numerous counter-attacks and systematic bombardments. The German offensive was finally repulsed and the French succeeded in making a slight gain on this part of the front."

This world still eagerly waits for the joyous excitement of peace and lots of it.

Belleville Patriotic Fund Forces Go Into Action

Notes of the Campaign From The Observation Posts---What is Being Done, Promised and Hoped For

Belleville is going to do unto itself a service. It is going to make an exhibition of true citizenship that will be a credit to the municipality, to the men and women within its borders, and to the aims and objects of the Canadian Patriotic Fund. All this is a fine ambition. That it will be realized there is no manner of doubt.

It is a Citizen's movement. It emanates from the wellsprings of a sense of duty. Surely such is not absent in the case of one of the oldest of the lake cities. Belleville, as well as all other Canadian towns and cities owes a duty to the Dominion at large in this perilous juncture. The sons of Canada are on the battlefield or preparing to take a place in the force that will bring Germany to her knees. It is for those who are behind, who stay or remain, to see that the wives and children and dependent relatives are cared for in a right way. It is true the rejoinder may be put forward that the soldier gets his pay. Pay. So he would if he were at work in the shop. But on the battle field he runs the fearful risk of being killed or crippled for life. Money cannot pay for such service.

So the Patriotic Fund takes up a notable work on behalf of those left behind. And the full benefit of that work calls for money. Not money to be given to and for services but to the wife and family that is dependent. No great national movement has ever been set on foot and run at so little cost.

Now is the opportunity for the citizen to come forward. The man who is content to come into a community and confine his attention to the duties of his profession or occupation is not a citizen in the fullest sense. We go to the Bible, that storehouse of fact and information to get his status and find that he is termed a sojourner. The citizen is one who puts his shoulder to the wheel to help on a good public movement, does his share and a little more. If this old world depended on men who work a stated number of hours this old world would stop in its activities. It is the unpaid service given freely, willingly and helpfully that carries things through. So the committee of the Fund movement invite help. Good, square unflagging interest. To carry the movement through in Belleville will require all the momentum that can be brought to push it forward. That it will go there is no doubt. It must go.

Some one said that to him the sweetest word in the English language was the word "paid." Be that as it may there is one word that stands right at the head of the line of terms, "volunteer." The man who offers. Who will come forward and volunteer for service with the Patriotic Fund Committee. Who will be one of the sixty-four team-mates. Who, one of the eight team captains. Mind you the names of these men will go down to posterity in the annals of Belleville as citizens of the right sort, willing to do and help. Just try and realize that a duty is put before you, one that you should take up and perform. Up at Peterborough the activities of the campaign brought together one hundred and ten men who learned to know one another fairly intimately and who now speak words of praise of the event that enabled them to come to know others better than ever before. When the campaign is over Belleville will find that it has on the roll a body of citizens which can be called together on any future emergency and which can be relied on to take hold and swing any desirable object into line and to a finish. Good thing to have seventy-five men who know one another. And that knowing is and will be not the least of the good to be accomplished.

During the next few days full explanations of the aims and objectes of the Patriotic Fund will be made in the press. The local papers, the Intelligencer and the Ontario, have agreed to do the thing in a handsome way. The verification of their promises will be seen in the size of the advertisement and the amount of space placed at the disposal of the committee, and all for a very small honorarium. There is no enterprise on earth that does so much for so little—in fact for nothing—as the newspapers. Seldom do they get praise, very seldom recognition. So the writer, having been incarcerated in the newspaper business since before the time of the Fenian Raid, and having only recently escaped, desires to say a word of recognition to his late confreres. For what they have done,—and this is important—what they are going to do. They will do it well. Both Mr. Bowell and Mr. Morton have said so, and what they say goes. It remains for the people to read and understand, and doing so there need be no fear of the result. To understand is to be convinced. To be convinced is to give.

Give, was it said. Sure thing. The only kind of giving that will do the most good is to give until it really hurts to do so. To let some cherished expenditure go and put the money into the hands of the Patriotic Fund Committee. Self-denial is a mighty good thing and it brings out the very best that is in a man or woman. This is not to be all of a man's game. The women are in it too. The head of the family should consult with his wife of his heart and let them give together. Let it not be said always, "this is my contribution," but this is what we give. So often have men given hostages to fortune. This is a time to give hostages to the Empire.

Lady opened the door of the committee headquarters, last night and asked if this was the office of the Canadian Northern. Was told it was not. It was now a better place—the home of the committee and headquarters for the Belleville Patriotic Fund, and wasn't it a better tenant than the railway. She said, being a woman of large discernment, that it was, and that the association was an ornament to the block. Thanks, that's some recognition, at any rate.

Any one who saw and spoke to Private Peter Victor, of the 1st Contingent, who was carried from the coach to the waiting room at the station at Peterborough yesterday morning could not fail to be impressed with the fearful possibilities of injury while on the field in action. He was invalided home, well he might be. Almost paralyzed from standing for almost forty-eight hours in ice and water in the trenches while holding the lines against the Germans. We, at home can only look and shudder. We would rather pay hundreds of dollars than go through the same privation. Yet we stay at home and possibly grudge a contribution to the Patriotic Fund to assist the wives and children of such heroes as Private Peter Victor. There are hundreds like him. All honor to the men of the First Contingent.

When the news maps of Canada are drafted there will be certain places marked in a conspicuous way. Those will be the towns and cities and communities that have raised and contributed to the Patriotic Fund. People of Belleville. Don't you want Belleville to be so marked? There is such a thing as public approval, and believe us it counts. When the G.T.R. trains roll past the city and travellers say, "This is Belleville. That's the place that raised $30,000 for the Patriotic Fund." it will be very good advertising, if nothing more. And that advertising is going to come. For the Fund is coming to pass. Not a doubt of it. In other towns and cities the movement started, then lagged, then gathered momentum and rolled up the surprising totals that we hear of. Peterborough started last August or September, in a rather calm way to raise a fund. The lists were circulated. The citizen looked at the list presented to him, and if the average was five dollars put his name down for a similar amount. He did not make any effort to do any better than his fellows. In that sort of way a few thousands were raised. Then the city woke. It felt that it was doing very much less than it should do. Then it made excuses. Next it pitched into itself and then took off his coat and sallied in. The result was, that convinced that it had not done the fair thing the handsome total of $60,000, was rolled up. A notably large number of subscriptions of $500 each. Six or seven of from one thousand to twenty-five hundred dollars were handed to the committee. Hundred dollar gifts were a plenty Factories, stores, shops, business places pooled their receipts of a day's pay and handed it in. The same can be done in Belleville. Who says no?

About this matter of collective giving. There are hundreds of young people, and many not so young, who wish to give something but are timid of offering a small amount. Here is the opportunity to pool the gifts. In all stores, shops, offices, factories and places the employees can give, together, a day's pay. It is, of course, not expected that the managers and those holding important positions will join in this way of giving. Such will no doubt contribute larger amounts in due course. Institutions that wish to contribute more than one day's pay, may well do as the employees of the Bell Telephone Co., at Peterborough. The staff agreed to contribute one day's pay for each of four months. The total amounts to a tidy sum.

Presently we will have the Honor Roll, that of the team captains and team mates. Sixty-eight privates and eight captains. Volunteers, all. They are being selected by a jury of their peers. Sixty-eight men can be had, but what is wanted is the very best sixty-eight. Once selected the details of the campaign are laid before them, and in the next issue of the local press will be told just how the thing is worked out. As it has worked out in other places, and to the profit of the Fund.

The committee rooms are at the corner of Bridge and Pinnacle streets. Nice, new, bright, airy, business place. None too good for Patriotic purposes, but just the thing. Call around and see how things are getting on. Just to offer a word of encouragement. It is needed. It will be appreciated. If you are not with us you need not necessarily be against us. But above all else don't knock. Boost

Sub-committees met at the public library yesterday afternoon and last night. Deep in consultation as to ways and means. The publicity staff have instructions to do some advertising. It will be done. If the fund can be realized at an expense of 1 per cent for publicity it will be money well spent. There are no rake-offs, emoluments, commissions, side privileges or any form of graft. Every expense incurred will be made known. And when it is known citizens will be surprised that so much has been accomplished at so little expense, comparatively. Still it pays to advertise. The papers say so. Now is the time to verify. There is always money in the country when the proper inducements are offered. Those will be put before you for the next three or four days.

The committee looking after details of the big meeting to be held in the opera house on Tuesday evening have secured the speakers for the evening. After some correspondence it is now known that Hon. Senator Corby has arranged for the attendance of Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, Ottawa; E. M. Mcdonald, M.P., Pictou, N.S.; B. Hepburn, M.P., Prince Edward, and probably Hon. Arthur Meighen, Solicitor-General, Ottawa. Senator Corby, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell will also join the battery of speakers. Altogether the oratorical artillery to be trained on the audience will be of large calibre, say quite the equal of the German 42 cent. guns, that have been now outdistanced by those of the allies. It will be a great night of Ireland, so to speak. After the addresses have been given any man who says that he does not understand and appreciate the objects and plans of the Patriotic Fund deserves to be taken outside the hall and striven with. The only recourse will be to pound it into him.

Most people in Belleville will recall the story of the widow's mite. That incident of honorable giving and self-sacrifice has been duplicated scores of times in Patriotic Fund campaigns. Well it may. Lots of people who may not give money gladly pledge service. That is the right thing. It indicates a fine public spirit, even if the service cannot be made practical use of. But here is an instance. Mr. C. H. Massie, the auto and garage man phones in that while the state of business will not enable him to make a cash contribution to the Fund, but that he would place at the disposal of the executive committee, during the campaign, an auto and, thank you, drive it himself. Good. There's Service and Safety. For the machine will be well driven. Good for Massie. Next and step this way and lively.

LOOKING FOR SOME THING TO LAND ON

SENDS A PROTEST

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 20.—The Government of the Netherlands, according to a correspondent of Reuter's at The Hague, has sent to Great Britain and France a protest against the British blockade of Germany.

Ross Herman Killed in Action

Youngest Son of Charles Herman of Frankford, Gives Life for His Country, First to Fall of 49th Regiment

Ross Hermon, the youngest boy of Chas. Hermon of Frankford, 18 years of age has been killed in action, the first of the 49th Regiment. He acted as sergeant in the 49th but had gone as a private in order to get to the front.

His father had received a letter the day before from him, in which he stated that he had had a narrow escape in the trenches, while he was shooting at a sniper, saying that he no sooner gave one than he got one back. His last words were that "if the Great Divide came between his parents and himself they were to remember that he died for His King and Country."

Admiral Craden Reported Killed

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, March 20.—A News Agency despatch from London says:—The report is current in London that Admiral Carden has been killed, although an official account of the operations at the strait states that he is ill and has been relieved temporarily by Admiral do Robeck.

In the Admiralty report it is stated that the battle cruiser Inflexible, the Admiral's flagship was hit by a shell in the forward control station, and was damaged so heavily that she will be laid up for repairs. No mention is made of the fact that the Admiral's cabin is located in that part of the ship.

Plant Suffers From Big Fire

Factory of Gunn's Ltd. Completely Destroyed Early This Morning

TORONTO, March 20.—(Special.)—At 3.15 this morning fire broke out in the fertilizing plant of Gunns', Limited, West Toronto completely destroying this section of the big warehouse. The damage approximately is $30,000, covered by insurance.

At 4 o'clock the fire fighters were putting forth every effort to save the factory building adjoining.

Three C.P.R. freight cars in the yards were destroyed with their contents. In spite of the hour of the morning half a dozen constables failed to keep the crowd within bounds. By 4.30 the fire brigades from fifteen divisions were assisting to squelch the flames which threatened to sweep over the adjoining stock yards.

The cause of the fire is unknown.

WEATHER CONDITIONS HAMPER OPERATIONS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 20.—Six battleships re-entered the Dardanelles Friday, according to a despatch from the Island of Tenedos. This resumption of action after the loss on Thursday of the French battleship Bouvet and the British battleships Irresistible and Ocean failed to accomplish anything for the reason that the unfavorable weather conditions made operations impossible.

BLIZZARD RAGING IN EASTERN WAR ZONE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 20.—A blizzard raged on Friday in Berlin and over the greater part of Prussia, according to a despatch reaching here from Amsterdam, Traffic in Berlin and elsewhere was bound to a stand-still and in the approaches to the Kiel Canal there were several accidents to shipping.

WITNESSED AN INTERESTING FIGHT

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, March 20.—Passengers aboard the British steamer Lapland which reached here today from Liverpool, witnessed a battle in the Irish channel between a British torpedo boat which escorted the Lapland and a German submarine. The Lapland, crowding on all steam, fled in a zigzag line from the combatants.

DEATH OF MRS. WHIMSITT

COBOURG, March 20.—(Special.)—After 65 years of continuous residence in Cobourg, Mrs. George Whimsitt is dead at the age of 85 years. Her husband died nine years ago. Six sons and four daughters survive.

BRITISH AND FRENCH BATTLESHIPS ARE SUNK

Strike Floating Mines in the Dardanelles and go Down—Two Other Ships Damaged by Shells

LONDON, March 20.—(Special.)—The British battleships Irresistible and Ocean and the French battleship Bouvet were blown up by floating mines while engaged with the remainder of the allied fleet in attacking the forts in the narrows of the Dardanelles Thursday.

The crews of the two British ships were virtually all saved, having been transferred to other ships under a hot fire, but an internal explosion took place on board the Bouvet after she had fouled the mine and most of her crew were lost. The Bouvet sank within three minutes of the time she hit the mine.

The waters in which the ships were lost had been swept of mines, but the British Admiralty asserts that the Turks and the Germans set floating containers of explosives adrift, and these were carried down by the current on to the allied ships gathered inside the entrance of the straits.

All the ships that were sunk were old ones, the Bouvet having been completed nearly twenty years ago, and the Ocean and Irresistible in 1898. They were very useful, however, for the work in which they were engaged in the Dardanelles. The sunken British ships are being replaced by the battleships Queen and Implacable, vessels of a similar type. They are said to have started some time ago for near eastern waters in anticipation of just such losses as have occurred. The other ships engaged in the fighting, the British battle cruiser Inflexible and the French battleship Gaulois, were hit by shells and damaged.

The British casualties, according to the official British report, "were not heavy, considering the scale of operations."

The damage done to the Turkish forts by the heavy bombardment has not yet been ascertained. It is stated that the operations against them are continuing. The forts attacked were those on either side of Kephez Bay and on Kephez Point, outside of the Narrows, and those on Kilid Bahr and Chanak in the Narrows.

The Kephez forts replied strongly when the battleships advanced, firing up the Dardanelles, and all the ships were hit. It is asserted that these forts finally were silenced and a bombardment of those in the Narrows was under way when the three battleships struck the mines. The blowing up of the ships did not cause a cessation of the fighting, which continued until darkness intervened. It is understood that the engagement was resumed today.

The British battleship Irresistible was commanded by Captain the Hon Stanhope Hawke and in times of peace had a complement of 780 men. She was the largest of the three allied battleships sunk, being of 15,000 tons displacement and 480 feet long. The chief armament of the warship consisted of four 12-inch and twelve 6-inch guns. She also carried sixteen 12-pounders, six 3-pounders, two Maxims, four submerged torpedo tubes and was protected by Krupp armor. The speed of the warship was 18 knots an hour. She was built in 1898 at a cost of $5,000,000.

The Ocean was commanded by Captain Arthur Hayes-Sadler and had a crew of 750 men. She was 418 feet long and of 12,950 displacement. Her armament was composed of four 12-inch and twelve 6-inch guns, ten 12-pounders, six 3-pounders, two Maxims, four submerged torpedo tubes, and her armor was of Harvey-Nickle make. She was of 18 knots speed and was built in 1898.

The French battleship Bouvet was a vessel of 12,000 tons displacement, laid down in 1893, with a complement of 621 men. Her armament consisted of two 12-inch guns, two 10.8 inch, eight 5.5-inch, eight 3.9-inch, ten 3-pounders and ten 1-pounders, besides two torpedo tubes.

Soldier Seeking Father and Mother

They Formerly Resided in Picton, Ont. Where He Was Born

The young soldier was born in Picton about 20 years ago. His mother died when he was an infant and he was adopted into another family. Since he grew up he had been working at various places and has lost track of his father and sister altogether. After he had enlisted he wrote to Picton for news of them, but has received no reply. As the contingent is expected to depart soon, some Toronto friends have become interested in his case, and are assisting him in his search.

FERTILIZING PLANT BURNED

(Canadian Press Special)

TORONTO, March 20.—Early this morning fire destroyed the entire fertilizing plant of Gunn's, Limited, wholesale provision merchants, St. Clair Avenue, with a loss of $60,000. The destruction included a quantity of Potash imported from Germany, and now almost impossible to procure.

Further Expansion in Federal Notes

OTTAWA, March 20.—(Special.)—It is understood that the Minister of Finance will introduce legislation this session to enable the government to issue Dominion notes to any such extent as the exigency of the war may necessitate. Last year provision was made for the issue of Dominion notes up to $50,000,000 against a gold reserve of 25 per cent. and it is said to be the intention of the government to increase the amount so $80,000,000, and to provide that if war conditions render it necessary, the amount may be exceeded.

It was not until the year 1902 that the amount of gold exceeded 60 per cent. of the Dominion notes in circulation. Before that the percentage was much lower.

However, the course the government is about to adopt has been pursued by other countries in war times.

YOUNG GIRL MISSING

BRANTFORD March 20.—(Special.)—Edna Gardham, a thirteen-year-old girl, daughter of Smith Gardham, 67 Sandwich street, is missing from her home. She left home at noon yesterday for school, but it has since been found that she did not go to school, nor had she been there for about two weeks. She did not return home last evening, nor had she been found up to 2.15 last night.

BERLIN'S OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF OPERATIONS IN FRANCE

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 20.—The German official statement says: On the road between Wytschaete and Ypres, near St. Eloi, German soldiers captured from British troops a group of houses on the south slope of the Lorette heights.

In the Champagne district the day was generally quiet with the exception that early in the morning German troops occupied some French trenches to the north of Beausejour.

French attacks to the north of Verdun, in the Woevre Plain and at a point near Combres, to the east of the heights of the Meuse, all were repulsed and the enemy sustained heavy losses.

French troops made several advances against the German positions at Reich Ackerkopf and Hartmann Weilerkopf, but these attacks soon broke down and the French sustained heavy losses under the German fire. On the Eastern front the day was comparatively quiet. Nemel, a Prussian seaport on the Baltic, has been occupied by the Russians.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

BELLEVILLE

"It's a Long Way to Tipperary; It's a Long Way to go". The Belleville Canning Factory, alias the Barracks of the 39th Battalion, awoke to further strange sounds last evening. The occasion was the first of a series of "home" concerts, by means of which the officers and men of the Battalion are seeking to make life more interesting. Col. Preston occupied the chair; he explained at the outset that the present entertainment had been gotten up by the authorities with the Y.M.C.A. working in the shadows but that he would like future entertainments to be "for" the men and "by" the men.

The programme was largely musical. Mr. Arthur Chapman and little daughter Marion, were present, and delighted the men with several song selections and spirited leadership of the entire audience in some of well known patriotic songs. Private Lord of "A" Coy. with violin and mouth organ, and Mr. Scrivenor with the flute won applause and more than one encore.

During the course of the evening Col. Preston gave a short talk on the subject of a Soldiers' Duty. He spoke of the stern task which lay before the Battalion; of the need of placing the Battalion and its aims ever foremost. "Make this Battalion your father, your mother, your brother, your sister and your sweetheart", he said. "Do this and we will be invincible wherever we go." He asked for "esprit d' corps" among the men, that the 39th should be one, every member of it standing up for other members. He hoped that officers and men alike would soon come to realize that it is better to die than to disgrace the Battalion. He spoke too, of obedience and the virtue of implicit obedience to superiors, not because these superiors were necessarily better men but because they "bore the King's authority." Obedience, he declared, is the first rung in the ladder of authority. Even as Napoleon had said that "Every French soldier carries a baton in his knapsack", so every member of the Battalion carried potentially the stripes of a Sergeant; the stars of a Lieutenant and the crowns of a major. But obedience to superiors is the prerequisite of all.

Lt.-Col. Ketcheson of the 49th, was present and conveyed a fighting message to his old men. Mr. MacQueen, who is in charge of the Y.M.C.A. work at the barracks, also spoke briefly.

Orderly Officer tomorrow—Lieut. L. W. Hopkins. Orderly Officer for Monday—Lieut. G. E. G. Craig. Next for duty—Capt. W. H. Hudson.

The Battalion will parade for Divine Service tomorrow (Sunday) as follows: —Anglicans, Presbyterians, Wesleyans —10.30 a.m. Roman Catholics—10.00 a.m.

The undermentioned men, having been found medically unfit for further service, are granted their discharge from this date and will be struck off the strength of the Battalion accordingly:—

No. A12154 Pte. D. Sands, "A" Coy.
No. A12171 Pte. H. Maracle "D" Coy.
No. A12247 Pte. M. Hawley "D" Coy.

Lieut. G. K. Rackham, having reported for duty, is taken on the strength accordingly.

DEATH ROLL.

W. B. DOCKSTADER

At a late hour last evening Mr. William Dockstater passed away at his home in the first concession of Thurlow Township. Deceased was born in Sidney in 1847, and resided most of his life in Thurlow. He had been ill for about three weeks. There is left to mourn his loss a widow, and one daughter, Grace Evelyn. Deceased was a member of the Canadian order of Oddfellows, Shannonville. He resided in Winnipeg for some time, returning East several years ago.

MELBOURNE MASTIN

At an early hour this morning Mr. Melbourne Mastin passed away at the family residence, 269 William street, after being ill for some time. Deceased, who was sixty-two years of age, was born in Tyendinaga Township, and for years followed his occupation as a carpenter and builder. Deceased had for the past seven years resided in Belleville, where he was well and favorably known. Mr. Mastin was a member of the I.O.F. Society. Surviving is a widow and four sons and four daughters. The sons are John of Calgary; Clayton, Percy and Garnet of Belleville. The daughters are Mrs. C. A. Martin, of Calgary, Mrs. H. E. Wallace of Westport, and Misses Hattie and Carmeleta of this city. Mr. Mastin was a devout member of the Methodist church, being identified with the Tabernacle church, and a man who was esteemed by all who knew him.

RECEIVES COMMISSION

The many friends of Color-Sergt. A. F. Paterson, of the Beauly Comp. of the 4th Camerons, are pleased to observe that he has been gazetted Lieutenant. The eldest son of Mr. John Paterson, Yew Bank, Banley, the new Lieutenant well deserves promotion. One of the best shots in the north of Scotland, he is also an athlete of no mean quality, and is very proud of the fact that he captained the Beauly Shinty Team in 1912-13, when they won both the Scottish and McTavish Cups. Lieut. Paterson has also a brother a piper in the same corps.—From Inverness Chronicle.

Mr. T. F. Wills of Belleville, who for the past nineteen years has been connected with The Singer Sewing Machine Company, needs no introduction to the citizens of Belleville and vicinity. However, it may not be generally known that Mr. Wills has given up his sewing machine business, and has accepted the General Agency of the Manufacturers Life Insurance Company, for the Counties of Hastings and Prince Edward, with headquarters at Belleville.

The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company is to be congratulated on securing such a well known and highly esteemed representative as Mr. Wills. He brings with him that good judgment so necessary on the part of the life insurance representative in order that he may recommend such a form of policy from the many offered by the Company, as will best meet the peculiar needs and circumstances of his client. Anyone, therefore, thinking of life insurance will make no mistake in consulting him.

Then too, Mr. Wills is to be congratulated on his wise selection of a Company, as we notice by the Annual Report of the Manufacturers Life that it is one of the largest and strongest Canadian companies, having over 53,000 policyholders. For 1914 the Company had the largest surplus in its history. With such a low death rate as that experienced, together with a decreasing cost, and an increased rate of interest, splendid results should be made to the policyholders, as we understand according to the Company's Charter with the Dominion Government, "holders of policies participating in profits are guaranteed 90% of all profits accruing on their policies for distribution.

The Manufacturers Life is best known perhaps for the special department which it has maintained for many years for the insurance of Total Abstainers, special rates and terms being granted to policyholders in this Department.

For the present Mr. Wills will have an office at his home, 272 Ann St.

The Best Medicine For Little Ones

Baby's Own Tablets are the best medicine in the world for little ones. They are absolutely safe and never fail to regulate the stomach and bowels, break up colds and simple fevers, expel worms and make teething easy. Concerning them Mrs. D. S. Bernhardt, Port Dalhousie, Ont., writes: "I have been using Baby's Own Tablets for my baby and would not be without them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

Last night, the monthly social was held and the young men invited as their special guests the ladies of the 230 Gym Class and the members of the Apex Club, Mr. C. A. Macfarlane's large class of young ladies, of the Tabernacle Church. After an hour in the Drawing Room, the gathering assembled upstairs in the Auditorium where a delightful program was rendered by different members of the company. This was followed by a few promenades. Luncheon was then served by the young men, who had each brought with him a box of tasties.

Tomorrow afternoon, at 4.15, Rev. J. R. Webb, of Peterboro' will speak.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Forty Year's Anniversary

A unique and enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Farley, Trent Road, on Wednesday, March 17th, when about thirty of their friends and neighbors gathered to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of their marriage. The company assembled at the home of Mr. Manley Farley, next door, and proceeded across the lawn amid the tooting of horns and ringing of bells, Mr. and Mrs. Farley being taken by surprise. After receiving hearty congratulations, a very pleasant evening was spent in music and games, and refreshments served. At the close of the evening Mr. Farley thanked his many friends for so kindly remembering them on this particular occasion, and remarked that, though he and Mrs. Farley had resided in several localities, none surpassed the front of Sidney.

A feature of the evening was the presence of three who witnessed the ceremony forty years ago—the bridesmaid, now Mrs. Rose of Bayside; Mrs. McMullen of Commercial street, Belleville, and Mr. Manley Farley, sister and brother of the bridegroom.

After many happy reminiscences the evening was brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the National Anthem.

You will never be satisfied with your tea as long as you continue to buy it in bulk. Unless put up in sealed packets, tea deteriorates rapidly and often becomes tainted. "SALADA" tea is sold only in sealed aluminum packets and is blended, cleaned and packed by the most modern machinery. It is the enormous demand that enables us to give you such quality at the price.

SENT TO YOUR HOME ADDRESS

FROM ACROSS THE SEAS

N. E. France,
Feb. 16th, 1915.

Dear Mamma,—

I don't know whether or not you received my last letter, which was written in haste on the boat which landed us across here, the ———, and posted in care of a milk-boy, who said he would post it for me. If you did, you know about our trip from ——— to ———, and if you did not you'll have to wait until we get back and are able to tell you then.

We left ——— late at night on Monday, Feb. 8th, and when we woke up on Tuesday were well out in ———. It was a swell day and there was a fine breeze blowing, which caused our old cattle ship to roll around more or less, as you can imagine. Some of the boys—in fact two-thirds of them—were mighty sea-sick, being at the rail most of the time, "feeding the fish." But Ted was not very sick, and I did not feel the slightest illness of any kind.

We were on the water for three days altogether, landing on Thursday night at a port in France, the name of which I am not at liberty, unfortunately, to say. We unloaded right away and proceeded to the station where there was a long train of freight cars waiting for us. We were not ready to move off until next day. Our "Pullman sleepers" were ordinary freight cars, in each of which forty of us were packed, and our beds were of straw—but we were the happiest bunch you ever saw. We had quite a trip, from every point of view—the more so as we did not know the least thing regarding our destination, or what we were to do when we got there.

I think I shall write a book when I get back, entitled "Touring France in a box-car." It was certainly a great trip.

A large part of the distance, which took three days to cover in all, we followed along the bank of a large river, seeing thousands of French soldiers in their crimson trousers and blue coats. The scenery, too, was lovely, and it was interesting to watch the country change as we gradually got farther and farther north. The formation of the country is much like that of England—just a rolling fertile farm country, dotted all over with the quaintest old houses, buildings and appliances of all kinds.

When we detrained we knew we were quite near the firing line. We are now in possession of a farm, and other brigades of Canadians are in other farms all around us. At night we can see the flashes of the big English guns, and can hear them plainly; but are in no danger of any kind and are comfortable as possible in every way—so there is no cause for the slightest worry on your part.

Ted sends his love and good wishes to all, and will write as soon as he gets time. I will write again as soon as I can, but we do not get much time now.

Love to all.
PAT.

N. E. France,
Feb. 20th, 1915.

Dear Mamma,—

I got two letters from you, and Ted got one day before yesterday when we received the first mail we have gotten in France yet; and we were mighty glad to get them. Our mail is the one thing we look forward to when we come back tired out—for we have lots to do all the time.

The afternoon that my last letter to you was written, the Major asked each of the B. C. (Battery Commander's) party—about six or eight of us in all—if we would be willing to go into the trenches the following day, as he had orders for himself, two lieutenants, Sgt.-Major and the B. C. party to do so, but did not want to take anyone into the firing line before the whole Battery went, without his consent. "It would be for one week beginning tomorrow," he said, and he proceeded to asked each one of us if we would go. Of course every man snapped out "Yes" like a rifle bullet, and he grinned as he turned away from the last.

That night we were wildly excited, as you can imagine, and were up at five next morning and away by seven-thirty. After a very hard and cold ride we reached an important town just a short distance—about two miles—from the firing line. Then Major Sherman told Ted and me and four others to go back to bring in the horses that they rode out. You can understand that we were disappointed—I think I never was more so in my life. I just choked back some answer, and we turned back home again in the cold and the rain.

We had been listening to the reports of the big guns getting closer and closer until we could feel the ground shake when they went off; and all kinds of thoughts and resolutions passed through our heads—only to be told to go back.

We have seen aeroplanes here in action, both friendly and hostile, and the other day some of the boys saw a contest between a German 'plane and three English ones. The German had come too near our lines, I think and was pursued. He managed to get away finally, though.

Every night we can see the flashes of the big guns and the searchlights—and occasionally a star-shell, which floats across the sky and illuminates all below it with an intense white light. All day we can hear the big guns thundering in the distance; but have gotten used to them now.

The town which Ted and I were in on that trip Wednesday (I would like to tell you its name, but must not) was originally in the hands of the French and was taken by the Germans in the first part of the war. The English troops retook it, handing it over to the French, who again lost it. Then the English took it again and have held it ever since.

There was a great deal of street fighting, and the whole place—houses and buildings, are shot to pieces. In some spots, especially where there is a crook in the street, or where one street joins another—every here and there is a hole in the wall caused by a shell; and windows are broken everywhere—churches in particular seem to have suffered.

To-day two subsections of the first battery were paraded with two of the second to be inspected by Imperial officers. I think the inspecting officer was General French, but am not quite sure. On our ride the other day I saw Gen. Smith-Dorrien. He is O. C. the second army, I think.

Well, there is no news obtainable—and I could not pass it on to you if there was—that is, news affecting the war. I don't think we will go into the trenches for a few days yet, anyway. But don't worry the slightest, Mamma. Love to all.

Your loving son,
PAT.

Need Attention in February and March or Face May Stay Covered

Now is the time to take special care of the complexion if you wish it to look well the rest of the year. The February and March winds have a strong tendency to bring out freckles that may stay all summer unless removed. Now is the time to use othine —double strength.

This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful that it is sold by druggists under guarantee to refund the money if it fails. Get an ounce of othine—double strength, and even a few applications should show a wonderful improvement some of the smaller freckles even vanishing entirely.

With the "Y"

Mrs. John Williams has been elected to fill the vacant Presidency for the remainder of the year.

The plan of work of the "Ys" Red Cross Committee for the next few weeks will be, first, socks, and second more socks. This department is under the energetic management of Mrs. Alex Ray. Seventeen pairs of hand-knitted socks were contributed to the last box packed by the Women's Patriotic Association and this number will be largely exceeded when the next box is sent.

"The "Ys" are grateful to Lt.-Col. Marsh for his kind permission to use the lecture room at the Armouries for their big public meeting next Friday evening. Mrs. Hector Preuter of Toronto, the lecturer of the evening, is widely known for her talents as a "wise and witty speaker", and her address on "Woman as a Citizen" will be well worth hearing. Mrs. Preuter speaks in Trenton Friday afternoon.

Fire Apparatus Of City Tested

Between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the fire alarm was sounded and immediately the fire fighting apparatuses were rapidly hurrying to the city building, where it was stated the fire was located. It proved to be that the alarm was sounded as a test, in consequence of an official of the Underwriters' Fire Association being in the city. The hose carts made excellent time in reaching the scene of the supposed fire. To test the water pressure, etc., 8 leads of hose of 250 feet in length were run out and attached to hydrants on Front, Bridge and Pinnacle streets. When streams were turned on from all the branches the pressure was most satisfactory in every respect.

IN TROPICAL COUNTRIES LIVER CHILL VERY COMMON

In Northern latitudes also the liver is a very unruly organ and requires careful watching. The concentrated vegetable juices in Dr. Hamilton's Pills act directly upon the liver and stimulate its action to a normal basis. The blood is purified, the skin grows clear, headaches disappear and robust health is firmly established. No medicine for the stomach, liver or kidneys can compare with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. box at all dealers.

D. D. D. IN HOSPITALS; STANDARD SKIN REMEDY

How many hospital patients have been soothed of their frightful itch, of the scorching pain of skin disease, by the famous D.D.D. Prescription for eczema, a soothing fluid, washed in by a nurse's hand!

A SUPERVISING NURSE (name of nurse and institute on application), writes regarding a patient: "The disease had eaten her eyebrows away. Her nose and lips had become disfigured. Since the use of D.D.D. her eyebrows are growing, her nose and face have assumed their natural expression."

Doctors, too, use D.D.D. in private practice. DR. GEO. T. RICHARDSON frankly writes: "D.D.D. is superior to anything I have ever found. Soft and soothing, yet a powerful agent."

To do the work, D.D.D. Prescription must be applied according to directions given in the pamphlet around every bottle.

All druggists of standing have the famous specific at 25c, and $1 a bottle.

But we are so confident of the merits of this prescription that we will refund the purchase price of the first full size bottle if it fails to reach your case. You alone are to judge.—J. S. McKEOWN, Druggist.

ATTEMPT AT SLANDER

A most vigorous and emphatic denial was given in the British Columbia Legislative Assembly to the reckless insinuations Hon. William Pugsley made in the House of Commons that there was something crooked in the purchase of the two submarines for the defence of the Pacific Coast, made the day before war was declared, and that the boats were useless.

Sir Richard demonstrated by a plain statement supported by a letter from the vendors that not a single cent of commission had been paid to anyone, that the two vessels were of the highest type, that they had before purchase been inspected by the Admiralty, and that they were immediately placed in effective service. Sir Richard completely disposed of the slanderous innuendoes of the ex-Minister of Public Works.

Sir Richard made it clear that had these craft not been secured there was a certainty that both Vancouver and Victoria would have been subjected to a bombardment by German ships which were in the vicinity of the ports. Just before the declaration of war he had been informed by Captain Logan of the London Salvage Association of the possibility of getting the submarines. He strongly recommended their purchase. Negotiations for their purchase had been at once opened. Anticipating the declaration of war at any moment there was need of haste. The price set by the vendors was $1,150,000. A cheque for this amount payable to himself was issued and this was at once handed by him to Lieut. Pilcher, who in turn gave it to the vendors when the purchase had been completed on the high seas. There was not, so far as he knew, one single cent paid for brokerage, commission or for service to any person.

"On the advice and representation of Captain Logan," said Sir Richard, "I personally undertook the purchase of these two war vessels, and was successful in consummating the business. At the same time the Federal authorities were fully apprised of what was going on, and just as soon as the negotiations had reached the proper stage, I advised the authorities at Ottawa. The $1,150,000 purchase price was paid over in the form of a cheque, which was made out to me and endorsed to Lieut. Pilcher, then senior naval officer here, and which I am advised Lieut. Pilcher handed over in turn to the Seattle Construction and Dry Dock Company.

"There were no commissions, no brokerage or exchange or profits of any kind or description whatever, retained by me or any one; or any agency or one dollar or one cent of money retained or paid over to another person that I know of. It was a clean-cut business transaction. There was no time to be lost, the price was fixed, and all I had to do was to act, and act quickly; and I did not hesitate one moment after I had decided it would be wise in the interests of the country for our coast defence, to secure these vessels, to close it up. It was closed up just in time, as a day or two later it would have been too late, and under international conventions impossible to have that defence of our Western coasts.

"I say it is too bad for a man of Mr. Pugsley's standing, an ex-Minister of the Crown, of broad experience and considerable prominence in public life, to make these charges against me before he had looked over the returns and informed himself of the true situation; but he was anxious and he was eager to hold out to the people of Eastern Canada, and especially to the people of British Columbia, that in respect of this transaction I had been guilty of wrong-doing. I think, perhaps, if I had not availed myself of the opportunity on behalf of the Dominion Government to secure these vessels, I would have been equally culpable in his eyes, because I had not acted in the interests of the people as I did act.

"I ask for no credit; I thoroughly believe that any one else in my position would have acted as I did. Sensible that there was no time to be lost, and with the likelihood of a declaration of war at any moment, I think any gentleman who was similarly situated as I was would have taken up the affair and dealt with it as I did."

Sir Richard showed that Hon. William Pugsley and certain Liberals had actually employed a detective agency in Seattle in an attempt to discover something which could be used to blacken the character of Sir Richard and to make political capital for the Liberal party.

FARMING AND ITS POSSIBILITIES

A recent leaflet issued by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa gives some figures showing the average and possible production per acre of leading field crops. The comparison is striking. In bushels the record between what is ordinarily raised and what might be raised is as follows:

	Average	Possible
Fall Wheat	20	52
Spring Wheat	14	33
Barley	16	69
Oats	36	91
Corn	70	200
Peas	15	37
Beans	19	50
Potatoes	119	450
Turnips	421	1,000

By "possible" is meant what has been actually obtained on experimental farms under what is called "intensive" cultivation. This cultivation is not generally practicable on farms whose owners have to do most of the work themselves. Between the average and the "possible," however, there are various stages, the reaching of any one of which in a general way would mean much gain to all concerned. Efforts to secure them are in the highest sense for the public good.

CURRENT COMMENT

Frank Stites, an aviator, employed by a film company in the making of a war scene, fell to his death near Los Angeles while attempting to drop bombs on fortifications. A moving picture war seems to be as dangerous as the real thing at times.

A Schenectady newspaper remarks that the rule is fairly true that one can judge how much dirty politics there are in a city by the number of dirty streets in it. At that rate Montreal seems just now to be the exception. The streets are being rapidly cleaned of the winter's snow and ice; but local politics remain fairly dirty it must be confessed.

An importer of French goods, who has just returned to New York from France, denies that the war has adversely affected to any extent the Paris dressmaking and millinery trades. These industries, he declares, have at no time been disorganized, and the usual exhibits are being given complete in every detail.

It is announced in London that more than 12,000 boy scouts have entered military service of one kind or another and that 2,000 more nearing the enlistment age, are in training. Baden-Powell, the originator of the boy scout movement that has spread to many lands, no doubt was looking into the future when he first put his great idea into execution.

The Carnegie Steel Company of Pittsburg has issued an appeal to its thousands of employees to lead a moral life as a means of increasing their own safety while at work and of improving their chances for promotion. If to be good is to be successful, it will not be the company's fault if its workers who accept the advice do not develop into benevolent and rich old gentlemen like its founder.

A manufacturer declares that Canada has more railways than it can sufficiently support. This statement is sure to be contradicted by enthusiasts in the newer parts of the country, whose idea has always been that the main line of a transcontinental road should run through the village or town they are directly interested in and which is bound to develop into a metropolis in the very near future.

Deport Cow-Girl

Will be Sent to Her Home in the Old Country After She Spends a Month in Jail

KINGSTON, March 19.—Mable Joyce, alias Hilda Margaret Holland, and other names too numerous to mention, who was arrested by constables on a charge of vagrancy, stood before the magistrate in her "cow-girl" suit and long blue overcoat. When charged with vagrancy her head dropped, and she mumbled something which could not be heard by the spectators.

Special Immigration Agent Reid was on hand, and it was explained to the magistrate that arrangements were being made to have the young woman deported. The magistrate sentenced her to jail for one month, and after her time is up, she will be sent to her home in the Old Country.

The accused, who claims to be eighteen years old, has been in the city for some time. She was brought out from the Old Country last January as a domestic, and was employed in a Kingston home until just recently. It is believed that she is weak-minded. Although she has a "cow girl" suit, and claimed that she had played with a Wild West show, and could shoot and lassoo just like Buffalo Bill, it is stated that her story is a pure "fake." This week she endeavored to put on a show at one of the local theatres, but her offer was turned down by the theatrical men. She smokes cigarettes, and no doubt received her wild west ideas as a result of reading dime novels. Her trunk and suit case were secured by the police, and both bore marks of overseas travel.

Frances Patterson, a middle-aged woman, was charged with vagrancy, but she denied the charge. She said she had been working, but that she was at the present time out of work and also out of money. She claimed Campbellford as her home, and was very sorry she left there.

Early last night she called at the police station and told her story. As she had no place to stay overnight, she was taken in and the magistrate will arrange to have her sent to her home in Campbellford.

TELLS OF PETTY CRIMES

OGDENSBURG, N.Y., March 19.—John Barber, arrested on the alleged charge of taking camping goods from a cottage near Brockville, revealed a list of petty cases extending back several years.

The alleged crimes were committed in various villages in the north country and have always remained a mystery. A number of men have been implicated and their arrest is momentarily expected. One of the crimes charged was stealing cattle. The men hid in cattle cars leaving the city, and when a few miles out the cars were opened and a calf thrown out, later to be slaughtered and sold.

At the hearing James Tuttle was held for the grand jury on a charge of receiving stolen property; John Barber and Alfred Blair for bringing stolen property into the state, and Charles Defore for receiving stolen property.

Each report brings fresh proof of the great part that Canadians are playing in the war in Europe. The Dominion's brave sons at the front are ably upholding the best traditions of their native land.

"Let Us Get Better Acquainted Gentlemen!"

Our "Direct From the Mills" Proposition Has Met With Splendid Reception From the Citizens of Belleville

Since opening day we have enjoyed a steady patronage, and men who came as skeptics—men who could hardly credit the statements made—have gone away convinced that the Suit or Overcoat we make to measure at $15 cannot be duplicated in any reliable tailoring firm under $25 or $30. There is no secret about it. The facts are plain. We simply abolish all profits of the middleman by dealing direct with the great Scotch mills and delivering the garments to you without the profit of the wholesaler tacked on. It's easy to us, for we command the capital, and our entire chain of stores in the principal cities and large centres creates an immence demand.

COME AND SEE!

We cordially invite you men who have not been here yet to visit our store. Come in and see these splendid fabrics. See the wonderful range of Suitings and Overcoatings that come "direct from the mills." You have unrestricted choice, remember. You pick from any fabric in the store, and there is but the one price—$15—no more, no less.

Radium Cures

Institute in London Has Shown Good Results

LONON, March 19.—Out of 748 cases treated at the Radium Institute during the present year, nineteen are described as cured, and 328 improved. As to the rest, the results were not apparent at the time the report was prepared. The diseases treated ranged from cancer, in which the results were varying, to spring catarrh, of which even the severest cases were cured. Superficial growths such as birth marks of the "port-wine stain" type, were rendered unnoticeable. One of them to get rid of facial birth marks was a hotel porter, who had been kept out of work because of his disfigurement. Warts that defied acids, quietly melted away under the influence of radium. The Radium Institute is maintained by public subscriptions, and its work is carefully watched by scientists.

Gunman Held Up Druggist's Clerk

With Levelled Revolver He Demanded and Received $30 From Till

MONTREAL, March 19.—One of the coolest hold-ups to come to the attention of the police for some time was committed last evening, when a young man walked into the pharmacy of J. E. Nadeau, at 321b Rachel Street, east, covered the clerk with a revolver and forced him to hand over the contents of a cash-drawer. After a chase of over a mile, in which several shots were fired by the gunman at another clerk, who followed him, the robber escaped; his hat, which he lost in his flight, being the only clue in the hands of the police as to his identity.

The robbery occurred at 7.15, at a time when Albert Brossard, one of Mr. Nadeau's clerks, was alone in charge of the store. A young man entered, proffered a prescription, and asked the price. When Brossard started for the rear of the store, the customer followed him behind the counter, and when the clerk turned, he found himself covered with a revolver. The hold-up man demanded that he turn over the contents of the cash register.

"Take it yourself," said Brossard.

"You give it to me, and give it to me quick!" was the response of the intruder. The clerk complied, and handed over about $30.

Stuffing the money in his pocket, the man demanded, "Have you a cellar here?" When Brossard replied in the affirmative, the robber said, "Well, you walk right down into that cellar." With the muzzle of a revolver poked between his shoulder blades, Brossard walked down the cellar stairs, the robber following to the bottom, then returning and slamming the door shut after him.

FIRED AT PURSUER.

James Maurice, another clerk, just returning from dinner, met the robber coming out the front door, but the latter did not betray himself by any sign of nervousness. It was only after Brossard heard the slamming of the door that he rushed up the stairs and shouted: "Arrest that man, he is a robber!"

Maurice ran outside and saw the robber take to his heels down Rivard street. Maurice gave chase and was closing in on his man at the corner of Rachel and Duluth streets when the latter turned and fired two shots at his pursuer. In turning the robber lost his hat, and Maurice picked it up as he continued the chase.

The drug clerk was once more gaining when the fugitive reached the corner of Roy and St. Denis streets. Here fortune favored the robber, as he was able to catch a car passing the corner.

Maurice missed the car by about fifty yards, and was unable to attract the attention of the conductor. He hailed a passing automobile a minute later, and was again after his man. The car was overtaken at St. Louise Square where Maurice saw the robber jump off, dart across the square, and disappear in a lane.

Belleville's Patriotic Fund!

$30,000

AND WE'RE GOING TO GET IT!

THIS IS A NATIONAL MOVEMENT. WE ARE IN IT!

The Following Specific Statement of the Aims and Objects of the Movement is placed before the People to afford full information. Read it carefully.

DO YOUR PRETTIEST! --- DAD'S FIGHTIN'!

TO THE CITIZEN'S OF BELLEVILLE

Belleville has decided to raise $30,000 for the Patriotic Fund. You should, therefore, know all the facts in order that your enthusiastic support may be assured.

This is a National Movement.

Its object is to see that no one in Canada, in the families of our Soldiers who have gone to the Front, shall suffer want.

The Canadian Patriotic Fund deals only with cases where assistance has become necessary to the families of those who have gone to the Front.

HOW THE FUND WILL BE ADMINISTERED

The Wardens of the National Patriotic Fund have decided that the Fund shall be administered on the following basis:

Every case will be investigated separately.

Where families do not need assistance none will be extended.

Where assistance is required its extension will be governed by considerations given herewith.

The basis of relief adopted for families is as follows:

A wife, $1.00 per day, or $30.00 per month.

A child under 5 years, 10c per day, or $3.00 per month.

A child, between 5 and 10 years, 15c per day, or $4.50 per month.

A child, between 10 and 15 years, 25c per day or $7.50 per month.

Thus a family of a mother, and three children of the ages of 5, 8 and 13 years respectively, would receive a total of $45.00

From this is deducted the amount which the Canadian Government pays to the families of soldiers who have gone to the front (termed separation allowance), $20.00 per month; also any other assistance such as remittance of rent, continuation of wages paid by former employer to soldier, etc. The balance is paid out of the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

When soldiers are reported to have been killed or to be missing after a battle, their Government pay ceases forthwith

In such cases the Patriotic Fund will provide all the funds necessary to look after their families welfare until such a time as the Government is ready to commence payment to them of the regular pension which it is be expected will be provided in due course.

WHY A NATIONAL FUND?

Some small municipalities and rural districts in Canada have sent a large number of soldiers to the Front.

All these soldiers, no matter where they are from are fighting for our defence just as truly as are the soldiers who went direct from Belleville.

Some of our small municipalities may not be able to provide adequately for the needs of all the families of the soldiers whom they have sent forward.

Other municipalities may be able to over-provide for their local needs.

Therefore a National Patriotic Fund has been established for the purpose of providing adequately on the same basis of relief for the assistance of every soldier from Canada that has gone to the Front.

A DOMINION ORGANIZATION

The President is His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught.

The Honorary Secretary is Mr. H. B. Ames, M. P., of Montreal,

The Auditor is the Auditor-General for Canada.

An Executive Committee composed of representative men from all parts of the Dominion determine the policy of the fund within the scope of the Act of Incorporation

WHAT BELLEVILLE PROPOSES TO DO

The payment will be optional with the giver, whether to make payment in a lump sum, or to spread the payment over periods during nine months. It is the hope that people who are willing but not able to make a substantial payment in one sum, may thus have time to spread the payments over several instalments in the future. Let this fact be borne in mind.

HOW THE MONEY WILL BE PAID OUT

Each month the Belleville Patriotic Association will prepare an estimate of the funds required for the coming month for a ssistance in Belleville, in the Families of the soldiers.

A requisition for the amount will be sent to the Canadien Patriotic Fund at Ottawa, and a cheque forwarded to the Local Treasurer for the amount.

The Local Committee will handle directly the money for relief purposes.

Should Belleville raise more money than is required locally, the surplus will be used by the National Committee. Should Belleville not raise enough for its own needs, the National Fund will be drawn upon for whatever sum may be necessary.

We desire to raise much more than will be required locally.

WHAT OTHER CITIES HAVE DONE

The $30,000 we propose to raise is a comparatively small sum for a city like Belleville. In round figures

Kingston	raised	$52,000	Hamilton	raised	$200,000
Berlin	„	95,00	Ottawa	„	300,000
London	„	100,00	Toronto	„	1,000,000
Peterboro	„	60,00	Renfrew	„	28,000
Welland	„	25,00	Montreal	„	2,000,000

Let us, therefore, raise as much more than $30,000 as we can. Because of the great issues that are at stake, let each of us give until it hurts. There will be no real blessing to us if we do anything less than that.

HOW THE FUNDS WILL BE RAISED

On THURSDAY, March 25, and FRIDAY, March 26, the citizens of Belleville will be given the opportunity of contributing to the Fund.

The canvas will be conducted by eight teams of eight men each, 64 in all.

Each day the people of Belleville will be kept posted as to how the canvas is succeeding.

Should the canvassers fail to call on you, please hand your contribution to some member of the Committee, or to a team Captain, or call at the headquarters.

Don't forget HEADQUARTERS, corner Pinnacle and Bridge Streets.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

To the last I have worked for peace with Austria, but it was refused.

Kaiser Francis Joseph announced: Prussia shows her desire to set might in the place of right, therefore this unholy war of German against German cannot be avoided. Before the judgment seat of history and Almighty God I summon him who has brought this misery down upon our families and country.

The war is always the desire of "the other side." It is always the other one who chooses to overcome justice with might, "German against German makes an unholy war"; quite right to step beyond Prussia and Austria and appeal to Germany. But why not in every war reach to the higher plane, and recognize it as a war of humanity against humanity? and regard every battle as an unholy contest?

BOOK IV.

CHAPTER I.

The greatest of all human misfortunes was again upon us, and, as usual, the public was jubilant. Regiments marched out (how would they return?) with blessings and good wishes and followed by the shouting rabble of street urchins.

Frederick had been ordered to Bohemia before the declaration of hostilities, when I was still confident that matters would blow over, so I was somewhat spared the agony of parting. When my father came triumphantly with the news, "Now the war is begun," I had been alone a fortnight, and I had made up my mind for the worst, as does a doomed man in his cell when he knows that the death-sentence must come.

I raised my hand imploringly: "Father, one wish! Leave me to myself."

Not being fond of pathetic scenes he hastily retired, and I, crushed in spirit, wrote in my red journal:

The death-sentence! A hundred thousand men will be executed. Will Frederick be among them? And for that matter, who am I that I should not perish with them? Oh that I were already dead!

On the same day I received from Frederick these hasty lines:

My wife! Be brave and do not lose heart. We have been happy. That past no one can take from us even if to-day the decree "it is finished" should be issued for us as for many others. To-day we meet the enemy. Perhaps I shall recognize some of the old Prussian comrades—even my Cousin Gottfried. We march upon Liebenau with the advance guard of Count Clam-Gallas. There will be no leisure for letters—at most a line to assure you of my safety. But on this leaflet—in case it be the last—I wish I could put into one single word all the love I bear you. I can find only this: "Martha!" You know what that means to me.

Conrad had also been ordered to march. He was full of ardor and felt enough hatred of the Prussians to make his start a pleasure. Still, parting with Lilli was hard, for the marriage license had arrived just two days before.

"Oh, Lilli, Lilli, why have you put me off so long? Who knows if I shall ever return?"

Upon his departure her remorse was pitiful, and she wept bitterly in my arms. I consoled her with the thought that had she been his wife it would have made the parting even harder.

The family now removed to Grumitz, and I joined them, oppressed with the premonition of widowhood. Occasionally in the midst of my dull grief would come the bright thought: "He is alive. He will come back." Then the horror of agony that he might be wounded, perishing for water, or that heavy wagons were rolling over his torn limbs, or that flies were in his open wounds, or, worse yet, that they were throwing him into the trench while yet he lived!

I would spring up with a shriek at this thought.

"Shame, Martha," my father would remonstrate; "you will become insane if you brood in this way. Drive such wicked fears from your mind."

WILL BELLEVILLE DO ITS DUTY?

In this hour of trial the Empire calls for every man to do his duty. Will Belleville do its share? Belleville, the Loyalists' nursery, the spot where our ancestors, the United Empire Loyalists, found their haven of rest from the persecutions which bleeding Belgium is suffering now, because of the magnificent spirit of loyalty which actuated these pioneers of our land. What must we do to prove our loyalty? No city of its size in the Dominion has contributed a larger number of men to Canada's fighting force in France today, in proportion to its size. But does our duty end with that. NO! What have we, who are at home, comfortably enjoying the liberty which our brothers in France are preserving for us, done? What have we done? Nothing, compared with the sacrifices which they are making. Therefore, it is our duty to do all that we are asked to do to make the task light for them, by relieving them of the anxiety by knowing that those they love, which they left at home to fight for us, are being taken care of by us.

There is not one man in Belleville, no matter how hard his circumstances, who is not able to do something towards helping those dependents.

Belgium, ravaged Belgium, is paying, and paying in hard earned savings of years to their ravagers, a toll which is out of all proportion to the lowliest contribution of our most impoverished resident.

Here is an example of patriotism which should make every loyal citizen of this loyal old city jump to the breech. Berlin, Ontario, German Berlin, with a population of somewhere around 18,000, contributed $96,000 to the patriotic fund in three days. Can Loyal British Belleville contribute $30,000 in two days? As a citizen of Loyal Belleville we say it will and IT MUST. The individual loyalty of each Belleville citizen will be measured by the extent of his GIVING. Berlin has proven its individual loyalty. WILL BELLEVILLE? This will be answered by the figures of the campaign next Friday night. DO YOUR SHARE.

COUNT TEN! BAD COLD RELIEVED FIGURE THREE HOURS--COLD CURED

NEVER A FAILURE WITH CATARRHOZONE; IT CURES COMPLETELY.

Don't sniffle and sneeze with a nasty cold. Kill it at once by "Catarrhozone." It's the surest thing on colds ever known; simply knocks them out in no time. The medicated vapor of CATARRHOZONE spreads through all parts of the breathing organs, and its beneficial action is felt instantly. Doesn't matter whether the cold is in the head, chest or lungs, Catarrhozone will reach it and cure it quickly.

Easy to use—you bet it is—not a single drug to take because you simply breathe in the most healing and soothing of piney vapors that come from the wonderful Catarrhozone inhaler.

"I can cheerfully testify that Catarrhozone is simply a magical cure for colds," writes P. F. Clement of Augusta. "For days last winter my head was completely filled up with cold. My eyes ran water. I sneezed and coughed constantly. I took many medicines. I was sick of the sight of them. Finally, I tried Catarrhozone. Its effect was magical. It soothed the inflamed membranes, stopped the sneezing, and cured in no time. I never met anything to kill a cold like Catarrhozone."

The Markets

CHICAGO, March 19.—Splendid crop promise on a big acreage had a good deal to do today with lowering the wheat market here. Values were unsettled at the close, which was 5-8c to 3 1-8c under last night. Other articles, too, showed net declines—corn, 5-8c to 7-8c, oats 1-8c to 5-8c, and provisions 7½c to 22½c.

CATTLE MARKETS

Union Stock Yards

TORONTO, March 19.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 998 cattle, 1035 hogs, 76 sheep and lambs and 163 calves.

Heavy bulls were reported by commission dealers to be from 25c to 50c per cwt. lower. Choice heifers and steers that would dress around 600 lbs. were scarce and firm in price

Fair to medium butcher cattle were selling better on account of greater demand for feeders, which caused the butcher classes of cattle, 800 to 900 lbs. each, to be invaded.

Some feeding steers were bought at prices which were within 40c or 50c of what the best butcher cattle sold for.

Stockers and feeds were selling at higher values.

Lambs and hogs sold at higher values.

Butchers' Cattle

Good to choice steers and heifers sold at $7.25 to $7.50; good at $7 to $7.25; medium at $6.60 to $6.85; common at $6.25 to $6.50; choice cows at $6.25 to $6.50; good cows, $5.75 to $6; medium cows, $5.25 to $5.60; canners and cutters, $4 to $4.50; choice bulls at $6 to $6.50; medium bulls at $5.25 to $5.75.

Stockers and Feeders

Choice steers, 750 to 1000 lbs. each, sold at $6.50 to $6.75; steers, 600 to 700 lbs., at $6 to $6.40; stockers at $5.25 to $5.75.

Milkers and Springers

Choice fresh milkers and forward springers sell readily, but few are coming and too many of the common, light, half-starved kind that few people want are being offered. Prices ranged from $13 to $80. One extra quality cow was reported at $100.

Veal Calves

Choice veal calves sold at $10 to $11.50; good at $8 to $9.50; medium at $7.50 to $8; common at $6 to $7; eastern rough calves at $4 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs

Sheep, light ewes, $6 to $8; heavy ewes and rams, $5 to $5.60; lambs sold from $8 to $11.25 per cwtt.

SPRING IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

A TONIC MEDICINE IS A NECESSITY AT THIS SEASON

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all year round tonic, blood-builder and nerve-restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as a result of the indoor life of the winter months. There is no other season when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these Pills helps to make new, rich, red blood. In the spring one feels weak and tired—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give strength. In the spring the appetite is often poor—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid weak digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, erysipelas and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is at this time when all nature takes on new life that the blood most seriously needs attention. Some people dose themselves with purgatives at this season, but these only further weaken themselves. A purgative merely gallops through the system, emptying the bowels, but it does not cure anything. On the other hand Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood, which reaches every nerve and organ in the body, bringing new strength, new health and vigor to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring—they will not disappoint you.

You can get these health-renewing Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Crawled Into a German Trench

In Order to Lay a Mine—He is a Royal Military College Graduate

KINGSTON, March 19.—Lieut.-Col. G. S. Maunsell, Ottawa, director-general of engineer services, has a son attending the Royal Military College, and if he proves as good a soldier as his brother, the family name will be well kept up.

H. S. Maunsell, who will be remembered as one of the best football players the R.M.C. ever had, is now a second lieutenant in the Royal Warwickshire Regiment, and has been mentioned in despatches. He is one of the most daring men at the front. At one time, in attempting to set a mine, he crawled into a German trench. He was trying to reach a certain position in the dark and worked his way ahead of one line of the German trenches to the second. Before he quite realized what had happened, he was among the Germans bailing water out of the trench. He worked away at this until he was able in the dark to quietly crawl to the place he wished to plant his mine.

He has performed so many daring deeds that he has received a star already, and will no doubt be given a captaincy in his regiment.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

The Answer
To Your Clothes Question!

YOU are doubtless reading, these days, many advertisements concerning Clothes—big type and small type!

YOU have been appealed to in plain figures and plied with "wonderful reductions" which you may have discovered exist mostly on paper!

YOU have been bored with fabric, fashion, and fit, and served with dissertations on Style!

YOU have seen argument exhausted—exaggeration run rife and good horse sense depleted!

BUT!

Don't Forget When All Is Said That It's The Clothes That Count!

This being the case, allow us modestly to remark that our Spring Suits and Top Coats at the moderate prices we have mentioned below are the best of Clothes, the best of Values and they should be the Clothes for you!

BOARD OF EDUCATION IN REGULAR SESSION

Another Room to be Furnished in Queen Mary School—High School Building Well Filled—Number of Pupils Attending School Increasing

At a regular meeting of the Board of Education, held last evening, a number of matters of more or less importance were attended to. According to the reports of the School Inspector and the Principal of Queen Mary School, it is apparent that another room will have to be opened up in that school on account of the increase in pupils. The High School building is also well filled; in fact, there is the largest number of pupils in attendance in the history of the school.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Several communications were read from the chairman of the Board in regard to matters which had transpired since the last meeting, some of which had been attended to.

Misses Cora Mozier, S. Mills and Mr. E. J. Eagle applied to be appointed on the teaching staff should a vacancy occurred.—Referred to the School Management Committee.

Principal Barrager of Queen Mary School, wrote stating that in February there were 363 children enrolled as pupils in that school. At Easter it was estimated that there would be 30 new scholars and additional room was required.—Laid on the table.

Mrs. Grace Graham wrote in reference to th work of the Women's Institute at Queen Alexandra School, and the success attending the same.

Mr. John Wills applied for the position of caretaker of a school.—Filed.

Mr. A. A. Thrasher asked to be reappointed as the Board's representative at the entrance examinations.

Mrs. Williams wrote requesting the presence of the members of the Board to an address to be given in the Armouries on Friday, 26th inst., by a lady on school matters.—Laid on the table.

Mrs. A. McFee wrote in regard to medical inspection in the schools, and asked the Board to co-operate in the same.—Laid on the table.

REPORTS.

Inspector Clarke reported that in the month of February 1,389 scholars were enrolled, and the average daily attendance was 1,189. The falling off in attendance was amongst the primary pupils. The report also called attention to the fact that another room was necessary to be opened up in Queen Mary School. The Inspector requested the use of the assembly room and two other rooms in the High School for the holding of examinations in June. The report was on motion laid upon the table.

QUEEN MARY SCHOOL.

Principal Barrager, of Queen Mary School, being called upon, addressed the Board relative to having another room prepared and a new teacher secured for teaching primary scholars. At Easter at least thirty new scholars will be admitted. A number of teachers will be leaving the Normal Schools at Ottawa and Peterborough at Easter and he would like the Board to secure a teacher for at least three months. There were two rooms available in the school building.

The matter of securing a teacher was referred to the chairman of the Board, the chairman of the school, Mr. O'Flynn, and the Inspector, and the procuring of the necessary equipment was referred to Mr. Deacon, chairman of the Printing and Supplies Committee.

Col. Ponton, at this stage of the proceedings, referred feelingly to the fact that Harry Wilkins, a High School graduate, who was at the front, had been seriously wounded.

The Board went into Committee of the Whole on reports, etc., Mr. McCrodan in the chair.

The Finance Committee's report, recommending the paying of the following accounts, was passed.

Trenton Electric Co.	$ 4 05
J. Richards	2 50
W. H. Lattimer	3 00
Singer Sewing Machine Co.	21 14

R. E. King	3 00
F. Andrews	1 50
H. Wallace	3 75

The High School Committee reported in reference to holding the art exhibit in the school and the fact that the school will soon be over crowded. Another room was available in the school. As the report of the High School Inspector had not been received the matter was referred to the School Management Committee.

The report also stated that additional lavatories were needed. This matter was referred to the Sites, Building and Repairs Committee, with power to act.

A window was asked to be placed in the cloak room.—Referred to the Sites, Buildings and Repairs Committee.

It was decided that a new flag pole will be erected on the grounds of the High School.

The privilege asked by the School Inspector for the use of two rooms in the High School for examination purposes was granted; also the use of the assembly room for the same purpose.

Col. Ponton suggested that a High School advisory board be named to be associated with the committee of that school in reference to educational matters of an industrial nature.

Mr. C. M. Reid named Messrs. T. H. Coppin, W. B. Deacon, W. C. Springer and H. A. Ackerman as the committee, and the Board accepted the same.

On motion the names of those who had applied to be placed on the teaching staff were referred to the School Management Committee.

The application of Mr. Thrasher to be appointed examiner at the departmental examinations was on montion referred to the School Management Committee.

An advisory committee for Queen Alexandra School will be appointed later in pursuant to the Act governing the same.

Mr. C. M. Reid stated that the ladies of the Women's Institute had asked him to allow them the use of the Domestic Science building for teaching on Friday evening.

After some discussion it was decided to leave the matter as it now stands.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

Col. Ponton spoke of the group picture of the members of the Board and suggested that one be placed in the High School as well as the Public Schools. He also suggested that a roll of honor of those from our schools who are serving at the front be prepared and suitably framed and hung up in the schools.

A motion prevailed that a picture of the members of the Board be placed in the High and Public Schools, and the roll of honor referred to be placed in the schools.

Board adjourned.

A SPLENDID WAY TO REDUCE ONE'S WEIGHT

There is, perhaps, no one thing that shows the passing of our youth so much as the horrible tendency of some of us to put on too much weight after we have reached the age of 25 or 30. However young our face may appear, our figures "give us away."

The cause of this over-stoutness is that our stomachs convert the food we eat into fat because there is not enough oxygen in the blood to produce a proper combustion to destroy the fatty tissue. To reduce your weight go to a good druggist and get oil of orilene in ca ulofrm,sp eul orilene in capsule form, and take one after each meal. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Oil of orilene taken at meal-times gives you all the benefit of the food you eat and at the same time dissolves the fatty tissue from any part of the body where there is excessive fat. In this way many have reduced their weight at the rate of about a lb. a day, and no flabbiness is left.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

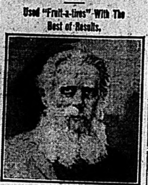
A FAMILY REMEDY FOR MANY YEARS

Used "Fruit-a-tives" With The Best of Results.



GEORGE McKAY Esq.

KIPPEN, ONT., June 17th, 1913.

"I have been using "Fruit-a-tives" as a family remedy for many years. They are the best medicine I have ever tried. "Fruit-a-tives" do me the most good—they never gripe and their action is pleasant.

"I have used them for Indigestion and Constipation with the best results, and I heartily recommend them to anyone similarly afflicted.

These troubles have left me completely and I give "Fruit-a-tives" full credit for all this. A nicer pill a man cannot take."

GEORGE McKAY.

The enormous demand for "Fruit-a-tives" is steadily increasing, due to the fact that this wonderful fruit medicine gives prompt relief in all cases of Indigestion, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Rheumatism, Chronic, Headaches, and Neuralgia, and all Kidney and Bladder Troubles.

TOOK HIS OWN LIFE BY CARBOLIC ACID

John B. George Found Dead in Bed By Fellow Border

TORONTO, March 19.—With an empty bottle of carbolic acid lying next to him, John B. George, aged 55 years, was found dead in bed today at a rooming house at 152 York street. Another boarder, James Marshall, made the gruesome discovery, and notified the police. The body was removed to the Morgue, and an inquest held. George had a sign writing place at 9 Maitland street, but his business had been far from prosperous. This, it is believed, caused him to take his life. Five cents in coppers were found in his pocket

THE HUN'S DIARY

Women and Children Slaughtered

After the raid of the Zeppelins in England recently a prominent German-American wrote to the American newspapers expressing a regret that a woman and a child should have been killed by the bomb throwing by the Germans. He stated that the Germans "in war, as in peace, have a profound respect for women and children," and he defied any critics to say that any of the Kaiser's soldiers had been guilty of killing women and children in the present campaign. Accusations to the contrary he denounced as "malicious libels circulated by a subsidised press to defame the honor of German manhood and the glory of the German Army." It was evident that the indignant correspondent had not read either the reports of the Belgian Commission of Enquiry, or the report of the French Commission presented to the President of the French Cabinet, Sept. 23, 1914, and that he was equally ignorant of the testimony of Germans themselves with which work is more exclusively concerned.

Here is the first extract from a German war diary—unsigned this time but the original is open for inspection—by way of answer to the prominent German-American.

"Langeviller, (Aug. 22.) Village destroyed by the 11th Pioneer Battalion. Three women hanged on trees—the first dead I have seen."

Who were these three women? asks Professor Bedier. Had they fired on the troops or "telephoned to the enemy" and were therefore "justly punished" by the 11th Pioneer Battalion? And was there no officer in the troops that followed after to cut down their bodies and consign them to the earth? No, they were left to swing, an example of "frightfulness" not only for the French but also for the German troops fresh from home "to season them."

Yet he was not easily seasoned, the private who saw the dead women on the trees. A week after—a week with the German Army!—he notes in his diary:

"We thus destroyed eight houses with their inhabitants. In one alone two men with their wives and a girl of eighteen were killed with the bayonet. It went to my heart to see the girl killed, she had such an innocent look, but there was nothing to be done with the excited mass, for then they are not men but beasts."

Just to show that the slaughter of women and children are not exceptional crimes for German soldiers, Professor Bedier cites the author of another unsigned diary who reports that at Orchies (Nord)

"A woman was run through for not having obeyed the command 'Halt!' whereupon we burnt the place."

The officer of the 178th Saxon Regiment already quoted reports that on the outskirts of Lisognes (Belgian Ardennes)

"An infantryman of Marburg having placed three women one behind the other brought them down with the same bullet."

And then there is the evidence of Reservist Schlauter (3rd Battery, 4th Regiment of Field Artillery of the Guard) whose handwriting has already been reproduced in these pages in facsimile:

"Aug. 25 (in Belgium.) Of the inhabitants of the town 300 were shot. Those who survived the volley were requisitioned as gravediggers. The women were a sight! But it cannot be helped. Things went better on our march to Wilot: the inhabitants who wanted to leave were allowed to go where they desired. But those who fired at us were shot. As we were marching out of Owele rifles rang out, but there—there were fire, women and everything else."

Schlauter mercifully leaves that "everything else" to one's imagination!

German Nation Dishonored

There are some crimes in war which dishonor not merely those who practice them but the army which permit them and the nation which can applaud them. Surely no excuse can be found for the action of German troops who, desiring to capture a position, deliberately placed before them civilians, men, women and children, a veritable barrier of living human flesh. It is base strategy which relies for success upon the appeal made to the humanity and chivalry of the enemy, as if one said to him "I am sure you won't be so mean as to fire upon these poor people and so I hold you, unarmed, at my mercy because you are less cowardly than I." French, Belgians and English have accused the Germans of such practices and the evidence seems incontrovertible. The official reports are the authority and they have not been disproved. Professor Bedier in "Les Crimes Allemands" asks this pertinent question: "How can you doubt that the German nation accepts these blackguardly exploits as deeds worthy of Germany, that she is indeed grateful for then, pleased with them, when the following narrative, signed by a Bavarian officer, First Lieutenant A. Eberlein, is paraded in one of the most famous newspapers of Germany, the "Munchner Neueste Nachrichten" in its issue of Wednesday, 7th Oct. 1914 (no. 513, Vorabendbladtt, p. 2)? Everlein describes the occupation of Saint Die at the end of August. Having entered the village at the head of a column, he was obliged to barricade himself in a house while awaiting reinforcements. Here is the story which he tells under an approving headline in the "Munchner Neueste Nachrichten," a somewhat conservative sheet in Germany and quite opposed usually to the traditions of saffron journalism:

"After arresting three civilians a happy idea came to me. We placed them on chairs and gave them to understand that they must sit in the middle of the street. Their entreaties were answered by blows with the butt ends of our muskets. Little by little a man becomes terribly hard. At last they are seated in the street as we direct. How many agonizing appeals they made I cannot say but all the time they held each other's trembling hands I pitied them but the ruse answers. The enfilading fire directed upon us from the houses very soon decreases; now we are able to occupy the house opposite and in that way become the masters of the principal street. Henceforth anyone who shows himself in the street is shot. Meantime our artillery has also been hard at work and when, towards seven o'clock at night, the brigade advances to the attack in order to support us, I am able to make the report 'Saint-Die is empty of enemies.'

"As I learnt later the, ... th Reserve Regiment which entered Saint-Die more to the north had experiences precisely similar to ours. The four civilians that they compelled to remain seated in the street were killed by French bullets. I saw them myself lying in the middle of the street near the hospital."

Plunder and Arson

Article 28 of the Hague Convention, 1907, signed by Germany specially forbids pillage of a town or even a place taken by assaut, and Article 47 says "pillage in occupied territory is forbidden."

German soldiers, as we shall se, are not to be handicapped by mere conventions of the Hague—they also are "mere scraps of paper."

"Aug. 8th, 1914, (Belgium.) The Belgians having fired upon German soldiers we soon applied ourselves to the task of robbing the freight station. Boxes, eggs, shirts; everything that could be eaten was taken away. The safe was smashed open and the gold distributed amongst the men. The securities we destroyed."

This event took place on the fourth day of the war and it helps us to understand how in a technical article upon the operations of the Military Treasury (der Zahlmeister in Felde,) the Berliner Tageblatt, 26th November, 1914 (1. Beiblatt) notes in a simple incident a somewhat strange economic phenomenon. "How is it," the "Tageblatt" asks, "that as a matter of experience there is sent by postal order much more money from the scene of operations towards Germany than vice versa.

The testimony of Petty Officer Herman Levith (160th Infantry, 8th Army Corps) is quoted as showing that pillage is only the prelude of incendiarism.

"The enemy had occupied the village of Bievre and the outskirts of a wood from behind. The third company advanced in the first line. We captured the village then plundered and burnt almost all the houses."

Hear also the evidence of Private Schiller (133rd Infantry, 19th Army Corps):

"Our first fight took place at Heyl-es (Ardennes) on Aug. 24. The second battalion enters the village, runs through the houses, pillages them and burns those from which there had been shooting."

Private Sebastien Reinshaupt)3rd Bavarian Infantry. 1st Bavarian Corps) writes:

"Parus (Meurthe-et-Moselle) was the first village we set afire; after that the fun commenced; one village succeeded another; by field and meadow we cycled along to the ditches at the side of the road and there we ate cherries!"

"Schnapps, wine, marmalade, cigars," writes this humble private—nothing escaped their clutches. And the distinguished officer of the 178th Saxon Regiment who was at first indignant at the "vandalism" of his men confesses that he, in his turn, on Sept. 1st at Rethel has stolen "from a house near the Hotel Moderne a splendid waterproof and a camera outfit for Felix." They rob without distinction of rank or corps not excluding the doctors. Johanes Thode (4th Reserve Regiment) writes in his diary:

"At Brussels 5 10 14. An automobile arrives at the hospital and brings spoils of war; a piano, two sewing machines, plenty of albums and all sorts of other things."

Professor Bedier in his comments upon these warspoils—Kriegsbeute as the Germans call it—suggests that the two sewing machines had been stolen from two poor Belgian women. "And at whose instance?" he asks.

Soldiers Who Protest

viewed by Professor Bedier there were only six or seven which failed to relate some misdeed and there were actually three in which the authors describing some disgraceful happenings expressed astonishment, indignation and grief. He does not tell us the names of the latter because they are deserving of our good-will and incidentally he does not wish to expose them to the risk of being blamed when they return home or even punished. Private X ——, who belongs to the 65th Landwehr Infantry speaks thus of his comrades in arms:

"They do not behave themselves like soldiers, but rather as highway robbers, bandits and brigands and are a disgrace to our regiment and army."

Another soldier, Lieut. Y. ——, of the 77th Reserve Infantry, says:

"No discipline: ——pioneers aren't worth much: as to the gunners they are a band of thieves."

And the third witness, Private Z——, of the 12th Reserve Infantry (1st Reserve Corps) writes:

"Unhappily I am forced to note a fact which ought never to have been possible; but even in our army there are some wretches unworthy to be called men, swine to whom nothing is sacred. Despite locked door, one of them entered a Sachisty where the Holy Sacrament was kept. Out of respect a Protestant had refrained from sleeping there but this man defecated there. Why do such beings exist? Last night a man of the Landwehr, more than 35 years old, married, wished to outrage the daughter of a villager in whose home he had found shelter—a young girl; and because the father interfered he prodded him in the chest with his bayonet."

Apart from these three soldiers the thirty other diarists seem made of the same base clay, differing from each other only in degree, some writing approvingly, some sneeringly, and there were some amongst them, their ugly work ended, who would open their book of canticles and sing psalms. Such a person was the Saxon Lieutenant Reislang who describes how he left an orgie to attend a "Gottesdienst" but having eaten and drunk too much he was obliged to hurry from the meeting house! Another was Private Moritz Grosse of the 177th Infantri who, after describing the sacking of Dinat (Aug. 23) wrote this sentence:

"Discharge of fire grenades into the house; evening, military chorale; Nun danket alle Gott!" (Now, thank we all our God!)

Professor Bedier notes that the culprits resemble each other and he adds this trenchant summary: If, he says, you will just reflect that I can multiply the extracts given by others similar not less cynical, taken for instance, from the diary of Reservist Lautenschlager (1st Battalion, 66th Infantry Regiment,) or the diary of Private Edward Hohl (Eighth Army Corps,) or the diary of Petty Officer Otto Brandt (2nd Reserve Ambulance Section), or the diary of Reservist Martin Muller (100th Saxon Reserve), or the diary of Lieut. Karl Zimmer (155th Infantry) or the diary of Private Erich Pressler (100th Grenadiers, 1st Saxon Corps,) etc; and if you will note that of the enormities already reported there are very few which may be charged to individual, isolated ruffians (such as may be met and are met, alas! in the most noble of armies;) and that I have confined myself here chiefly to crimes committed in routine service, (service commande) which concern and disgrace not the individual only but the entire company, the officer and the nation; and if you will observe finally that these thirty diaries, Bavarian or Saxon, Baden or Rheinlander, Pomeranian or Brandenburger, taken at random are most certainly representative of hundreds and thousands of others either similar or of surprising uniformity, you will be forced, I believe to conclude that M. Rene Viviani speaking from the elevation of the French tribune was well within the limit when he alluded to "This system of collective plunder and murder that Germany calls war."

Prisoners Massacred

Belgian and French official reports, let alone unofficial statements by English and Russian, teem with proofs that the Hague Convention of 1907 which provides in article 24 for the safety of prisoners of war and to which the Kaiser was a party, has been violated again and again.

The following is the text of an Order of the Day addressed by General Stenger, commander of the 58th German Brigade to his men on August 25th:

"From this day forth there will be no more prisoners. All the prisoners will be slaughtered. Even prisoners already formed into convoys will be massacred. Behind us we will leave no living enemy. (signed) Stoy, 1st Lieutenant Commanding; Neubauer, Colonel Commanding; Stenger, General Commanding."

It happens that thirty soldiers of Stenger's Brigade (112th and 142nd Regiments of Baden Infantry) were questioned in the French depots of prisoners. Professor Bedier saw their depositions, given under oath and signed with their names. All confirm that this terrible order was conveyed to them on August 26th., to one unit by Majojr Mosebach, to another by Lieut. Curtius, and so forth, the majority professing to ignore whether the order was executed by three amongst them alleging that it was in their presence in the forest of Thiaville where ten or a dozen Frenchmen, already received by a battalion as prisoners, were despatched. Two others saw the order executed along the Thiaville road where some wounded, found in the ditches by a company on the march, were slaughtered.

The Professor does not, in this case produce the autograph of General Stenger and naturally he is not giving away the names of the German prisoners who testified. He has no difficulty, however, with his great mass of evidence, in proving crimes quite similar and he presents a number of German autographs in his book. Here is an extract from the diary of Private Albert Delfosse (111th Reserve Infantry, Fourteenth Reserve Corps:)

"In the forest (near Saint Remy, Sept. 4th or 5th) met a very fine cow and calf slaughtered; and again some French corpses shockingly mutilated.

It is just possible, of course, that these corpses may have been cut to pieces by shells but in view of the following "Soldiers Letter" published by the local paper of Jauer, a town of Silesia other interpretations are clearly permissible. Professor Bedier gives a facsimile of the Jauersches Tageblatt of Oct. 18, 1914. This letter written Sergeant Klemt (1st Company, 154th Infantry) is published under the headline: "A day of Honor for Our Regiment."

Klemt tells how on Sept. 24 his regiment which had left Haunonville in the morning supported on the march by some Austrian batteries were suddenly fired upon by artillery and infantry. The enemy remained unseen and the losses were terrific. At last, he says, "we noticed that the bullets were coming from the tops of the trees where some French troops were ensconced." Let Klemt's words tell the rest:

"We made them scamper down like squirrels and gave them a hot reception with the butt end of rifles and bayonets; they had no more need of doctors; we were no longer fighting honorable enemies but low brigands. By leaps and bounds we crossed the clearing. Here and there we found them hid in bushes and we go for them right and left. No quarter is given. Standing erect we let fly; few indeed fire from the kneeling position; nobody thinks of sheltering himself. We came to a dip in the ground, dead and wounded 'Red Trousers' (French) lie about in piles, the wounded are beaten or stabbed to death, for we know that as soon as we have passed these rascals will shoot us in the back. A Frenchy lies stretched out there, his face to the ground but he is only feigning death. A kick from a strapping private lets him know we are there. Turning over he cries: 'Pardon!' but the next moment he is pinned to the earth with the words: 'There you——that's how we give you some of your own medicine.' The uncanny cracking by my side comes from the blows which one of our men is raining down with the butt end of his musket on the bald head of a Frenchman. He was sagely using a French rifle for this work in order not to smash his own. Particularly softhearted men finish off the Frenchmen with a bullet, the others hack and stab as hard as they can. Our foe struggled bravely; they were picked men we had before us; they had allowed us to approach within ten to thiry yards—too near! Knapsacks and arms thrown in a heap indicated that they had wished to run but at the sight of the Kaiser's Own, fright paralyzed their feet and upon the narrow path they took, German bullets gave them the command to halt! At the entrance of the leafy shelters they lie slightly and seriously-wounded, vainly whinnying for quarter, but our brave soldiers spare the Fatherland the expense of nursing our numerous enemies."

The narrative goes on to say that His Royal Highness, Prince Oscar of Prussia being informed of the glorious achievements of the 154th and of the Grenadier Regiment, brigaded with the 154th, declared them both worthy of the title "Konigsbrigade" ("The King's Own") and winds up with this literary flourish: "Evening arrived, we went to sleep with a prayer of thanksgiving upon our lips and with hope for the day to follow." This German tale of war is certified true by Lieutenant de Niem who signs his name. It is addressed by Kelmt to his town of Jauer where he is assured in advance of a complaisant editor to accept, publishers to print and quite a population to enjoy.

Ghost Asks Girl To Join in Dance

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 19.—Legends, like the fragrance of lavender hang about the old buildings in Chartres street, eight blocks below Canal. Tenement houses now, in the old days they were abodes of cavaliers and fair ladies. Even now when the lights are out and the neighborhood is dark, swords and silks swirl in ghostly sarabands as the dwellers of other days come back and take possession for the night of their former abodes. At least that is one of the legends, and the imaginative of the neighborhood will vouch for its authenticity.

Miss Lucille Lacoste ever since she was a little girl has lived in one of these "haunted" tenements. She and her mother have a dingy little room, and oftentimes the girl would waken her mother and bid her hearken to the gallants and their ladies as they danced the olden dances on the vacant floors below.

Lately she had become imbued with the idea that one of the cavaliers nightly sought her for a partner in a minuet. The idea of the phantom follower grew and grew until the girl could stand it no longer and she decided to kill herself and to seek release from the "ghost" which followed her so relentlessly.

Away from the city, in the swamps back of Port Chalmette, the girl poised on the railing of a bridge over a deep ravine. She was ready to hurl herself over when she was discovered by Sheriff Fred Hahn of St. Bernard. She jumped into the water as Hahn rushed to the rescue. Hahn followed. In the water there was a struggle, the girl fighting to die, but at last she was taken to the home of Constable Serpas and held until her mother arrived.

COULD THROW STONE TO ENEMY'S TRENCH

LONDON, March 19.—Some Canadian trenches are only sixty yards from the enemy. An officer in the Canadian Scottish, writes from the vicinity of Neuve Chapelle that a stone could be thrown across to the opposing lines. The marksmanship of the German snipers is deadly, their bullets often finding the loopholes in our trenches. They have killed a great number of British soldiers. The Canadian Scottish were just returning to their billets after a period in the firing line when orders came to them to hold their positions. Then came the battle of Neuve Chapelle and, with it the well earned distinction of the contingent. Surgeon-General Jones has just returned from France very much pleased with the Canadian hospitals, and proud of Canadian soldiers.

The extension of 600 beds to the Dutchess of Connaught's hospital on the estate of Mr. W. Astor, at Cliveden will be completed in six weeks.

Nurse on a Hospital Train Has Adventure

Army Sister's Ambition Is to Serve In This Branch, Although Life Is Strenuous

A writer in The Queen says:

"It is with some dread that, when the necessary permission has been accorded, one goes down to a French station to watch the unloading of an ambulance train which has brought several hundred sick and wounded soldiers from the front, for the dreadful takes told in the earlier days of the war are still fresh in the memory and one dreads the sight of so much misery. But things have altered, and the old scenes of horror are no longer to be witnessed at the main stations, for, thanks to the care the men receive on board the trains, they arrive looking as if they had just come out of hospital. The disembarkation of one of these trains is a wonderful sight, with such perfect ease, precision, and quietness is the task performed. As the hundreds of men suffering sometimes from terrible wounds are carried past, one notices how every possible ghastly trace of injury has been removed, how carefully they have been bandaged, and how comfortable they have been made, and one realizes that during the journey the staff of the train has worked very hard.

"It is said to be the ambition of every army sister to serve on a hospital train, for then she may have exciting adventures, she gets as near the firing line as a nurse may go, she visits from time to time all the chief English hospital bases in Northern France, and she has the satisfaction of rendering almost the earliest aid to the men brought down from the front by ambulance cars.

"On each ambulance train there are three doctors, four army nurses, and forty or more orderlies who do the housework on the train, and give invaluable help with the wounded. There is accommodation for from 220 to 250 patients.

Makes Compartments Homelike

"The nurses have very snug quarters in a first class coach, where one compartment serves as a mess room, and others are what Bloomsbury knows as bed-sitting-rooms, two nurses sharing a compartment between them. These are very small as living-rooms, but the sisters contrive to make them bright and homelike with pictures, draperies, and a dozen little pretty compact contrivances for stowing away their belongings in the daytime. The staff is on army rations, and of course the food is very good.

"The sisters have the supervision of the wards; they see that they are in order before the wounded arrive, and they help to receive the patients, but their work really begins when the men are settled, and they help to feed them with all the good things that the train provides, cocoa or soup when they first arrive, and good solid food later on, stews, tinned meats, with milk and eggs, as well as the bread and jam, which is of course less appreciated. Their other work is comparatively light when the men are simply being transferred from one base hospital to another, or to a hospital ship, but when they are straight from the trenches, when they must be washed, their wounds dressed, and fresh clothing must be found to replace the ragged, soiled and often altogether insufficient garments which they wear on arrival, the sisters are kept busy indeed. Each train has its Red Cross room supplied lavishly with stores of woollen things, shirts, pyjamas, and outdoor things, for often the men are almost destitute.

Patients Astonishingly Brave

"Usually the trains are filled with both lying down and sitting-up cases, but sometimes after a fierce engagement all the cases will be severe, and the dressings take hours. Lately the trains have been largely occupied with cases of frostbite, and these they say are often agonizing to watch, for the pain as the circulation returns is almost unbearable. The soldiers are delightful patients, astonishingly brave, jolly, and delighted with the comfort of their travelling hospital and the excellence of the food. It will be understood that the staff works at very high pressure for at least the first hours of its journey, and that often the strain is maintained until the wounded are all unloaded. The sisters themselves do not speak of the strain, but it is said that the authorities do not mean to leave them on train duty for many months at a time.

"The trains frequently set off late at night and then the staff works ceaselessly through the midnight hours and as conveniently as if it were day, for the electric lighting of the carriages is very good. All the trains are made as comfortable as possible, steam-heated, well supplied with hot and cold water, with good kitchens and supplementary heating arrangements, but they vary in other ways. Some of them have all their carriages connected, and the staff can pass from one end to the other, but there are others with carriges which can only be reached by the doctors at the station, unless indeed they will adopt the perilous method of walking along the footboards, and in these the sisters have of course more work and responsibility.

"Arrived at the base, the train is unloaded, a work that takes an hour or more, the sisters see that the wards are put in order for another load, and then they may rest for a few hours—if as often happens they go on with a fresh load to a base still further south; or, if they are sent right back to the front for fresh cases, they may have days of inaction.

Must Always be Ready

"This is the first part of their duty that wearies them most. They potter about the lines, waiting for orders, sitting for days in sidings watching transport trains passing up and down, or waiting in the distant suburbal stations near the base towns. They cannot make full use of their leiurse to go for the long walks they would like, for at any moment orders may come and the train may start almost without warning—an ambulance train once it receives its orders will not wait for anyone, not even the commanding officer himself, much less for a sister, so their expeditions even in the main town are necessarily hurried. There is no one to talk to, nothing to do, and they probably often envy the hard, monotonous but regular work of the sisters in a general hospital.

"Then after days of such inactivity they may be whisked off to a railroad, to learn that the platform to which they are sent has been shelled the previous day, that the cracking sound they hear is the English firing at an enemy aeroplane, still overhead, while they may sleep with the roar of the not far distant cannon in their ears and wake to prepare for the reception of hundreds of men fresh from an engagement whose severity loses nothing in the telling."

HAS ITS PARALLEL IN CIVIL WAR INCIDENT

Counsel For the Would-be Bridge Wrecker Outlines His Plan of Defence

BANGOR, Me., March 19.—Werner Horn's claim that his attempt to blow up the international railroad bridge at Vanceboro on February 2, was an act of war, will be argued before United States Commissioner Reid here tomorrow. Joseph F. O'Connell, of Boston, who will appear for the defence, said last night that he would contend that Horn's trip from New York to the Canadian border was a raid similar to that made by Confederate sympathizers into Vermont from Montreal during the civil war, when a St. Alban's bank was looted. The British Government then refused to surrender the raiders, who sought refuge on the neutral soil of Canada, claiming that the act was an incident of the war.

In the event that the United States Commissioned shoule refuse to discharge Horn from custody, his counsel said last night they would appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Canadian authorities have asked for Horn's extradition on a charge of damaging Canadian railroad property.

What Baby Needs

if he has to be partly or altogether hand fed, must be most carefully understood and provided for. His future depends so much on his feeding during the first few months. Next to healthy mother's milk, there is nothing so satisfactory for your Baby as the 'Allenburys' Foods.

There are three Foods, each scientifically adapted to his needs. Milk Food No. 1, from birth to three months, is easily digested, completely nourishing and may be used in conjunction with the breast, so alike are the natural and prepared foods in this instance.

Milk Food No. 2, from 3 to 6 months—to meet Baby's increasing needs, for building up the rapidly-growing brain and nervous system: Malted Food No. 3, from 6 months onward. These foods are perfect in every sense—effectually replacing human milk, when this is not available. Doctors throughout the world have testified to their excellence.

HELPED TO DEVELOP THE COAST PROVINCE

Lieutenant-Governor Barnard of British Columbia Long a Big Figure in Public Affairs

Hon. Frank S. Barnard of Victoria who was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia in succession to Hon. Thomas W. Paterson, was only four years of age when he went to the West, in 1860, twelve years before the coast province entered Confederation, and his career therefore covers almost the whole period of British Columbia history. It was in 1860 that the first session of the Second Parliament of British Columbia was held, and when the idea of a truly popular government began to be entertained by the people.

The future Lieutenant-Governor was born at Toronto, May 16, 1856, the oldest son of Francis Jones and Ellen (Stillman) Barnard, and is a brother of Mr. G. H. Barnard, K.C., M.P.

Mr. Barnard went with his mother to British Columbia in 1860 to join the husband and father, who had preceded them in 1859. He attended the Victoria Collegiate School, and later entered Hellmuth College at London, Ont. His first business experience came as a clerk in the offices of the British Columbia Express Company, and his rise to positions of greater and greater responsibility followed rapidly as a recognition of his developing powers and wisely directed talents.

HON. F. S. BARNARD

In 1881 he was appointed general manager of the British Columbia Express Company, an enterprise founded by his father in 1862, known as Barnard's Express, which operated lines of stages from the coast into the Cariboo country and generally throughout the interior, as well as doing a banking, freighting and fast express business, with its head office in Victoria, to all points in the province.

In 1888 Mr. Barnard resigned the position, upon his election to the House of Commons; but his interests and activities were constantly broadening. He has been prominently identified with the growth of Vancouver, having been a director from 1885 to 1889 of the Hastings Sawmilling Company and the Vancouver Improvement Company. He was manager of the Consolidated Railway & Light Company of that city in 1894-95. Associated with a London, England, firm, he promoted the British Columbia Electric Railway in 1896; was managing director until 1898, when he became chairman of the local advisory board.

With the Kootenay country Mr. Barnard was intimately connected in the early days. He was one of the founders of the Columbia & Kootenay Steam Navigation Company, the Nakusp & Slocan Railway Company, and the Nelson & Fort Sheppard Railway Company, all of which enterprises have been absorbed by the larger transportation companies.

In Victoria Mr. Barnard is connected with various big mercantile and shipping companies. In the Okanagan country Mr. Barnard was at one time owner of the famous B.X ranch, and Barnard Avenue, the principal street in Vernon, was so called in his honor, as was Barnard Street, Vancouver.

He served as alderman of the City of Victoria in 1886 and 1887, and was elected to the House of Commons as Conservative member for Yale-Cariboo in 1888. He was again chosen at the general election of 1891 and sat until 1896, but did not stand at the general election of that year. In 1902 he unsuccessfully contested Victoria City.

His broad business experience and his public spirit combined to make him a most useful and valuable factor in shaping affairs of general interest.

Ignorance Is Bliss.

Manuel Quezon, the Philippine delegate to the United States congress and the first man always to appear in white clothes upon the floor of the house, went to New York recently. While there he was introduced to Charles Murphy, chairman of the New York state Democratic organization, and grand sachem of Tammany hall.

Now, Manuel's last name is pronounced "Ka-zon," and Mr. Murphy thought it something else. The mistake was to Quezon's advantage, for everyone in Tammany hall now knows him as Manuel Casey.

FARM MANAGEMENT

Good Judgment Necessary to Get Good Crops and Fair Return

No business needs better management all around than farming. So many chances for failure are present that it is the exceptional farm that is strong in every particular. Most farms succeed in spite of certain weaknesses. Some of these weaknesses can be corrected; others are due to conditions that can not be improved, such as naturally poor soil, short growing seasons, steep hills, etc.

Much worthy effort is expended in producing good crops, but oftentimes a gain in the best of crops is lost by feeding to inefficient live stock. There is no surer way of losing money than by feeding crops to animals the products of gain from which do not pay the cost of feeding.

Some men attribute their successes to the particular kind of crop they grow or the particular way of feeding live stock. More likely their success is due to a good sized farm business, good or average crops, and a good quality of live stock.

On fourteen selected farms where the receipts per cow were less than $40, not a farm made as much as $1,000 labor income. On twenty-four farms in the same district, with only a slightly larger acreage but with the receipts per cow between $101 and $115, only three farms made a labor income of less than $1,000. Half these farms made more than $1,500. The first group of farmers were growing fair crops, but they could not possibly succeed when the other part of their business was so weak. The second group not only produced good crops, but they utilized them efficiently.

Another way in which some farmers fail is in the use of labor, both man and horse. Everything they do seems to take about twice as long as it should, hence they receive only half pay for their work. Farming does not pay for inefficient work any more than any other business. An acre of hay normally requires about ten hours of man labor for each cutting. Some men will waste nearly this much time in just getting started. They may grow good crops and have good stock, but their inability to work lessens their chances of success.

Successful farming calls for hte best of judgment. It means good crops, good live stock well fed and handled, and a thoroughly balanced business in every way.

Pruning Young Trees

Severe pruning is needed when fruit trees are planted, but during the next few years it is not the best system to prune heavily. During this time the object is to encourage growth, to shape the tree and prepare for fruiting.

It is a common idea among orchardists that the more a tree is pruned the more it will grow, but this is only true within very narrow limits. If the roots have grown freely and spread extensively as in a healthy tree they are sure to do, then the heavy pruning of the branches will upset the balance. The tree will endeavor to restore the balance by forming new wood to support the place of that cut away.

In this case the severe pruning would entail extra work upon the tree without a corresponding increase in growth.

Many orchardists have come to recognize this fact and prune no more than necessary to shape the growth, prevent limbs crossing or coming out where not wanted. One must take into account the natural habit of each variety, but there are very few sorts that need much thinning out or heading back before they come into bearing.

An Indigestion Tip

Try exercise instead of medicine for indigestion. When digestion is poor build up the stomach muscles.

When one builds up his general muscular tone, he builds up his heart muscle tone and his stomach muscle tone.

Exercise in the open air, well planned and persistently carried out, is better for dyspepsia than pepsin, or soda, or tablets, or several of these combined.

A Shire Mare's Fetlocks

dymbiotic mange is produced by the action of parasites. The treatment must be directed to the destruction of the parasites and their eggs. Three dressing at intervals are necessary; but the bedding should be burned, and the floor should be scrubbed with boiling water, caustic soda, and 5 per cent. of carbolic acid. Woodwork, stable brooms, and all utensils used should also be treated similarly. The following dressing well rubbed in legs with a spoke brush, and repeated two or three times at intervals of seven days, will generally effect a cure: One pound of soft soap; simmer over fire in a gallon of water, constantly stirring till dissolved; remove from fire, and add three-quarters of a pint of paraffin oil; stir well till it looks creamy, when it is fit for use.

Responsibility

The most important point in selecting an automobile is to know the reputation of the Company—"Who is Behind It?"

New makes of automobiles come and go year after year.

Do not buy an "orphan" car, for which you may have difficulty in securing repair parts and service, after purchasing.

The question of service should be considered carefully.

Buy from a well-established company.

The McLaughlin Carriage Co., Limited, of Oshawa, is one of the oldest vehicle industries in Canada—built upon Canadian capital—in business for over forty-five years building high-grade carriages, and in the eighth year of automobile manufacturing.

This company has such an extensive organization that an owner can secure dependable service at any of the twelve branches conveniently located throughout Canada.

Every McLaughlin-Buick has the famous VALVE-IN-HEAD MOTOR, that is guaranteed to produce and deliver more power than any other motor of equal size of any make, and on a lower consumption of gasoline.

Six models ranging from $1,150.00 for a Runabout to $2,250.00 for the famous McLaughlin "Six."

OXO CUBES

BELGIUM

Mr. Duncan J. Robertson of Glasgow, Scotland, a kinsman of the late W. B. Scarth, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa, wrote the following poem on Belgium and forwarded it to relatives in Canada:

The Kaiser and his War-lords,
They spoke the words of fate
That loosed the raving eagles,
Set free the hounds of hate.
They thought to crush the heart of France;
To break Britannia's pride;
And Belgium, little Belgium,
To take her in their stride.

The Kaiser and his War-lords,
They laughed their oaths to scorn;
Their path is strewn with broken vows,
With sacred treaties torn.
"Who for a scrap of paper
To-day would draw the sword?"
But Belgium, little Belgium,
Held to her plighted word.

She knew the fate that faced her—
The scourge of steel and flame;
But higher than her life she held
The honor of her name.
In fort, and trench, and city,
Up rose her valiant sons,
And Belgium, little Belgium,
Checked the advancing Huns.

The Kaiser and his War-lords,
They felt the staggering shock,
As when some ocean billow
Falls shattering on the rock;
They heard the bugle calls afar,
Where the free people woke,
For Belgium, little Belgium,
Had foiled the tyrant's stroke.

The Kaiser and his War-lords,
They heard the bugles blow;
"Our German honor Belgium knows,
Our mercy she shall know;"
Their legions, like a tidal wave,
Fell thundering on the land,
And Belgium, little Belgium,
Reeled from her gallant stand.

They burned her storied cities;
They slew and they defiled
The priest before the altar,
The mother by her child;
"The maiden to the Uhlan's lust,
The babe to flesh his steel!"
Till Belgium, little Belgium,
Writhed 'neath the mailed heel.

For honor and for freedom
Her sons have shed their blood;
Their widows and their little ones
No shelter have, nor food.
The smoke of farm and homestead
Is darkening her skies.
And Belgium, little Belgium,
In blackened ruin lies.

If, in our quiet islands,
It is not ours to feel
The talons of the eagles,
The scourge of flame and steel,
Remember, oh remember,
In our homes inviolate,
That Belgium, little Belgium,
Met the foeman in the gate!

Late Admiral Mahon's Advice

Almost the last public utterance of Admiral Mahon before Belgian neutrality had been violated, was emphatic counsel to Great Britain to throw her preponderating fleet against Germany for the maintenance of British world power against what he regarded as a pre-determined war of calculated aggression by its most dangerous enemy.—London Chronicle.

BEARS' TERRIBLE COMBAT

Fought to the Death in Cage in Edinburgh Park

As the result of an unequal fight waged in the bear-pit at the Scottish Zoological Park, Edinburgh, the smallest of the brown bears, a favorite among the juvenile visitors to the park, was kiled.

Seven bears in all—five brown and two black—were accommodated in the pit, and the fight originated through the small brown bear grabbing a biscuit which a larger bear considered was intended for it. This beast attacked the smaller one with deadly fury.

Some laborers hurled stones at the attacker, but the stones had little effect, and an attendant, who was hastily summoned, gamely went into the pit to the assistance of the overborne animal. He got hold of one of the large bear's hind-legs, but was unable to pull the bear off its victim.

With a heavy club the keeper drove off the attacker, but only for a moment or two. The keeper also used a heavy whip until it broke.

In deadly grips, the two bears rolled into the water, but the fight continued for some time, until the big bear was eventually beaten off. Badly mauled, the victim got into a cage, and its wounds were dressed and restoratives applied, but without avail, for the animal died later in the evening.

An examination of the carcass showed the terrible power in Bruin's claws. From the manner in which the big bear commenced to beg from the spectators immediately after the fight had ended the unequal nature of the combat was evident, for he appeared to have suffered little hurt.

TATTOOED FOR LOVE

White Man's Sacrifice Failed to Win Dusky Belle

Martin Johnson went "Through the South Seas with Jack London," the author, and writing of his experiences he says:

"On one of the small islands we met a man who was an interesting subject. He had come years before, when only a young man. He was in the employ of some trading concern that he still worked for, and on his rounds among the islands he had met and fallen in love with a native girl, but she only laughed at him, saying that he was not nearly so good-looking as the natives because not tattooed. The girl's brother was just learning this art, and as he thought the white man's skin would be fine practice, he persuaded the trader to be tattoed.

"The man quit the company, and for six months lived in a native house in the mountains while the boy practised tattooing on him every day, until the work was done and the skin healed up. Then he made his way to the girl's home. At first the girl was frightened, then she nearly went into hysterics, and ridiculed him; and finally, she insulted him in the worst possible manner—she spat upon him, and ran away into the jungle. And the tattooed white man never saw her again. Now he is one of the wealthiest men in Polynesia; pearl shell, copra, and sandalwood have reaped him a fortune that is no use to him, for he can never return to civilized people again."

Great Future For Fisheries

That Canada's future in the fishing industry has even greater possibilities than Norway's was a statement made by Dr. H. Hjort, Deputy Minister of Norwegian Fisheries, in an address to the Canadian Institute at Toronto. Dr. Hjort, one of the greatest authorities on fishing in the world, was brought to Canada by the Government to study conditions here and make some suggestions for the assistance of the industry. The varieties of fish found here, he explained, were identical with those found in Norway, the greatest fishing centre in the world.

Incubators For Big Flocks

To make money in poultry-raising the incubator is absolutely necessary, and, what is more to the point, it is profitable to raise your own chicks that you may know the breeding of them. It is demonstrated that a chicken-raiser is able to increase the egg production of his own flock by breeding and selection.

EXPLORER'S CIGAR NOT SO VALUABLE

A Conspiracy That Failed—Famous Discoverer Cherishes a Poor Substitute For Good Smoke

Sir Ernest Shackleton was once a very junior officer on a passenger boat, and it happened that on one voyage Lord Rothschild was a passenger. He became quite friendly with the young "fourth," and one evening gave him a magnificent cigar. He wrapped it up in silver paper and kept it as a cherished memento of his friendship with the great man.

SIR ERNEST SHACKLETON

On subsequent voyages he developed a habit of exhibiting his treasure to favored lady passengers, recounting at the same time how he and Lord Rothschild had been "quite chummy." The chief engineer, a dour old Scotsman, thought he would teach him a lesson, so he conspired with the doctor to steal the cigar and replace it with one of a much inferior kind—in fact, with a weed that had cost him twopence at the last port. They wrapped the imposter carefully in the silver paper and in the silk handkerchief, and they bore the real Rothschild smoke to the chief's cabin.

With a five-shilling cigar in their possession for the first time in their lives, they found it difficult to decide who should have the smoking of it, and so they tossed a coin. The doctor won, and bore his prize off in malicious triumph to his own room, there to enjoy it in solitary state. His triumph was, however, somewhat short-lived, for in five minutes he was back again with the chief, very woefully countenanced and swearing volubly. The Rothschild was a somewhat inferior smoke to that which they had left in its place. Somebody had been before them!

The joke was never divulged aboard that ship, and Shackleton left the line soon afterwards, so that it is remotely possible that the intrepid Antarctic explorer still treasures, in some secret cabinet, a cigar which he believes to have been given him by Rothschild, but which actually was, in its prime, poor value for two pence.

Poultry Cleanliness

Cleanliness is one of the most important factors for poultry-keeping. Dirt means disease, and when disease appears the death-rate is usually high. Houses should be kept clean by sweeping down the walls, by removal of all rubbish, by renewal of the material in nest boxes, and by occasional lime-washing. Disinfectants are most valuable, but do not remove the cause. The air in houses must be purified by constant circulation, and plenty of sunlight should reach every part of the house. The soil must be kept sweet by cultivation, or, in the case of small plots, by removal and renewal. All appliances of whatever kind must be kept clean. Parasites cannot live unless the conditions are favorable. Food troughs and waste vessels should be regularly washed in hot water. The body-feathers of fowls must be kept clear of parasites by nature's own method, a dust-bath. The food should be carefully prepared, the birds should be fed regularly and they should receive just as much as they will clear up rapidly.

LEADER OF INDIANS MADE A POOR START

General Sir James Willcocks Ran Away to Sea as a Boy—Has More Medals Than Any Officer

"Indian Willcocks," as the man who is in command of the Indian Expeditionary Force is so often termed in the service, is a leader whom the natives would follow to the death, for he always shared with Lord Roberts their love and admiration, while "Tommy" himself has never forgotten the tribute which Sir James paid to him when he said: "A man braver and more human than 'Tommy Atkins' was never created."

In view of the fact that in his very youthful days Sir James was regarded as the bad boy of a family which has produced many distinguished men, his achievement and the manner in which he has carved his way to military fame without the influence of money or powerful friends make his career a veritable romance of soldiering. He was the despair of his teachers, who could never get him to concentrate on his studies, and when he ultimately ran away to sea there were not wanting those who wagged their heads and prophesied a more or less terrible ending for the venturesome lad who, because of his restlessness, was nicknamed "Perpetual Motion."

GENERAL WILLCOCKS

And Sir James himself told how he was really in despair when he twice failed for the first examination for the army, after which he wandered about in tramp steamers, suffering many hardships and gaining bitter experience, and ultimately landed at Newhaven with twopence in his pocket. Finally he entered Sandhurst, and, on passing out creditably, was gazetted to the Leinster Regiment in 1878

Sir James was only a freshly-joined subaltern when the Afghan War broke out, and it is characteristic of his fighting spirit that, although his regiment was not ordered for active service, he sent a telegram to Simla asking to be employed. Then he packed his scanty kit and calmly waited. In two days the answer came, and, to the surprise of his brother officers, "Jim" Willcocks was ordered to the front.

Since those days he has participated in every "scrap" of importance in which India has been engaged, fought in over a dozen campaigns, and is reported to have more medals than anyone else in the service.

Like his men, Sir James is a fatalist, which partly explains the unconcerned manner in which he has performed many acts of individual bravery. And by some people Sir James may be regarded as a faddist, as well as a fatalist. Possessed of a splendid frame and physique, he has never neglected an opportunity of preaching the value of physical fitness. "Never let a day pass," he once said to some of his officers in his mess, "without taking as much physical exercise as you can endure. Never keep on wet clothes a moment longer than you are absolutely obliged, and, lastly, whatever else you may dispense with, hold fast to your mosquito curtain." Whether he still continues the habit it is difficult to say, but for years Sir James attributed not a little of his good health to the fact that he always made it a rule to run a mile every evening before dinner.

He also has his own rules of diet, to which he rigidly adheres. One of his articles of belief is that most people eat too much. For himself, he has never taken breakfast for many years, holding that two substantial meals a day ought to suffice. He never takes liquid in any form at the table, but, though moderation is his creed, he is not a teetotaller. He always insists that in steamy, malarious districts a moderate amount of alcohol is beneficial.

It is only after a man becomes rich and famous that you recall the fact that you and he were schoolmates.

A TRIBUTE TO THE COW

Of all the animal creation the best friend to man is the homely cow. As a food producer she is our mainstay and dependence. From the new-born babe to the aged invalid we are all more or less dependent on her for our existence. Her produce commands the highest price in all the best markets of the world. Without her we would be deprived of many of the luxuries of life and not a few of its bare necessities. Without her the infant would cry in vain for sustenance, while the nations of the earth, deprived of her life-sustaining products, would become impoverished and disappear.

In prosperity and in adversity the cow is ever man's best friend. She can be depended upon to do her share in lifting the mortgage from the old homestead. She piles the tables of the rich with rare and costly viands She paves the way for many a poor farm boy to enter the High school and the agricultural college. She tides the farmer over the hard times and helps boost him into prosperity. When he has fallen into a rut and "a friend in need is a friend indeed," she can be relied upon to come to the rescue and with her produce set him on his feet again. Indeed, it may be truly said that of all the animals that contribute to the support of mankind none rewards us so promptly and so liberally for kindness and food and care as the homely cow.—Our Dumb Animals.

OXYGEN FOR INSANITY

Remarkable Treatment Discovered Used Successfully by French Doctor

A new and extraordinary use for oxygen has been found by Dr. Toulouse, chief physician of the Villejuif Insane Asylum. He finds it a most valuable aid in the treatment of madness.

Dr. Toulouse makes certain that the oxygen in the steel cylinders in which he receives it is pure and free from nitrogen; then he fills small glass flasks with it. A rubber bulb enables him to regulate the pressure in the flasks, and a rubber tube connects these with a fine hypodermic needle. Through this 250 cubic centimetres of oxygen are injected under the skin.

A physician who watched the operation and its effects upon patients says the results are remarkable among patients in a condition of acute mental confusion, who are always greatly improved and often cured entirely by a few injections. The excited and victims of insomnia become calm and lucid.

In cases of acute mania, dementia, epileptic fits, and certain cases of melancholia good results have been obtained. The oxygen treatment is now being tried upon other forms of insanity.

THE EMDEN'S GRAVEYARD

Romantic History of Cocos Island Where German Raider Was Lost

The island where the Emden put up its last fight—Cocos—is one of the most romantic in the Pacific. It is a coral reef, really, fringed with palm trees, and lying about 350 miles from the Dutch East Indies.

The king of the island is a colored man named Ross, rich as a trader, and despotic among his own people. He is the descendant of a Scottish sailor of 1830, who established himself on the island, planted palm trees by the thousand, and settled down with a colored spouse. Life went very well in those solitudes then. Of course, there was always the fear that a tidal wave might sweep the island with a sudden tornado of waters, and Ross was never quite certain whether his strip of land would make up its mind to stay where it was, or whether it would sink back again to the depths. But he chanced it. And the island stayed on top and Ross stayed with it.

The Eastern Extension Cable Company secured a lease on the island for cable relays, and a station was built which was of the greatest value to the commerce of nations. The operators have to pass their time as best they may, and they usually row out in spare hours and harpoon the sharks which infest the waters thereabouts.

When their quarters were being built, the contractor experienced a lot of trouble with his Chinese workmen owing to the fact that beri-beri had broken out among them, and that they had got it into their heads that the island was being haunted by a devil. They erected a joss and prayed to it; but the disease continued to get worse, and it became so bad that, after turning the face of the joss to different parts of the compass to ascertain whether he was punishing them because he was not being made to face the right quarter, they smashed him up. After his destruction the epidemic died out.

The Emden was the second German cruiser to threaten the island. The cable was cut shortly after Japan declared war on Germany; it was repaired speedily, and its repair contributed to the destruction of the Emden.

NAVAL PUNISHMENT

Severe Penalties Inflicted For Misdemeanors in Old-time Navy

When Rear-Admiral Troubridge was thought to have made a mistake in connection with the escape of the cruisers, the Goeben and the Breslau, from Messina, he was tried by court-martial, and acquitted. In the past sea leaders who made mistakes in war were drastically punished. At the time of the second Dutch war with England when De Ruyter played havoc with the shipping in the Thames and Medway, the captains of the three ships, Blessing, Blacknose, and John and Elizabeth, which had been stationed off Gravesend, were charged with carelessness in carrying out their duties. Each captain was ordered to be sent on board the Victory Prize at Deptford, where he had a halter put about his neck and a wooden sword broken over his head. The culprits were then towed through the water at a boat's stern, from the ship to Deptford Dock.

Naval punishments were very severe in all ranks in the old days. A man who killed another at sea was tied to the body of his victim and both were thrown into the water. Keelhauling was also a popular punishment amongst the fleet. The latter was a fate doled out to gamblers in the navy, who, according to the law of the period, "were to be dipped into the sea every morning for three days, after the manner of seamen." Another drastic naval law stated that "A thief or felon being lawfully convicted shall have his head shorne, and boiling pitch poured upon his head, and feathers strewed upon the same, whereby he may be known, and so at the first landing-place they shall come to he shall be cast up."

The "War Department" of the Young Men's Christian Association recently announced that it had established 600 centres of Y.M.C.A. work in the British army.

"Wherever Kitchener's army encamps, there goes the Y.M.C.A.," says the association's war secretary in a report. The association is following the army abroad, not only into France and Belgium, but also into India and Egypt.

Even if the anti-kissing bill introduced in the Kansas legislature should pass, how would the guilty be discovered?

JEWS' DEBT TO ENGLAND

"My brethren, England deserves that her Jewish sons should gladly die for her. In what other country are the teachings of Holy Writ so venerated and obeyed? What other country is so free of prejudice on the score of religion and pernicious racial antipathies. England has honored the Jew as no other country has."

In a message breathing unswerving loyalty to the Empire Rabbi Jacobs, speaking to the Holy Blossom Synagogue, Toronto, called upon the Jewish people to put forth every effort to aid the cause Britain had made her own, to take their places in the firing line, to help the distressed and to minister with unwearying generosity to the sick and wounded. The service was a special one of intercession and prayer for the success of the allied cause and the speedy coming of peace.

A great English writer had said, "To engage in war without a clear necessity is a crime of the blackest dye. When the necessity is clear it then becomes a crime to shrink from it." It was this principle which had always guided Brititsh statesmen. England had no alternative but to fulfil her solemn pledges and protect weaker nations to whom she was bound by sacred treaties.

England's Protectorate of Egypt

Great Britain has placed the final seal upon its great work of civilization in Egypt by formally terminating the shadowy suzerainty of the Turkish Sultan over the country and proclaiming a protectorate. This is the logical outcome of more than a quarter of a century of devoted labor by British administrators to convert a nation from utter bankruptcy, disorder and decay to peaceful prosperity and progress. The severance of Egypt from its ancient allegiance to the Sultan and the formal recognition of the paramount position of England as its guide and protector have been long foreshadowed. With the Khedive in exile and the British Consul-General and agent replaced by a high commissioner, the work of government should be simplified, the security of the reforms safeguarded and the British control over the main trade route between Europe and the East protected.

There is still a large and noisy element in Egypt which fails to realize the blessings of modern civilization, which prefers the misrule of Turkish methods to good government under British guidance. German intrigues to intensify this feeling of discontent failed of their purpose, and Egypt under direct British protection is likely to enter upon a new era of growth and prosperity.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Golf Men as Trench Diggers

Dr. Mackenzie, of Leeds, who is well known as a golf architect, asked the War Office to allow him to enlist, through the Golf Greenkeepers' Association, a force of experts to act as instructors in the art of trench-making. Constructed on the scientific lines of the golf bunker, he guarantees trenches which would be invisible to an enemy 100 yards away.

The Tragedy of the Poles

The tragedy of Poland in the war is one of the most terrible in history. It is fratricide on an immense scale. There are about 600,000 Polish soldiers in the three armies, 120,000 Austrian, 80,000 German, and 400,000 in the Russian army.

The public never forgets a scandal. Lately attention has again been directed to the fact that Adam and Eve never were married.

Eat Less and Keep Well

Many people are martyrs to indigestion and its attendant ailments without taking any thought of what lies at the real root of the matter. They eat and drink too much, often at the wrong times, and then complain or else dose themselves with medicine because it cured some one else. If the same individual consumed the barest amount of food for a few days, and that of the plainest description, he or she would find their indigestion vanish at once. There is nothing like semistarvation for anything wrong with the stomach. The body requires food, but if the amount we eat was cut down one-half it would still be sufficient. Study the diet, and drop all foods that cause indigestion. In this respect what agrees with one person may be poison to another. Therefore test the food yourself.

A Proposal of Peace

A Carleton County farmer offered his services to the Dominion Government as peace envoy, and laid down some remarkable rules for the holding of the peace conference. It must be held, he said, in Jerusalem, the throne of David being occupied temporarily by him during the proceedings. The latter must open at dawn in order to conclude at mid-day. The man who made these proposals saw some of the Ministers, and wrote to the Prime Minister. Freak offers reach the Government at the rate of about two a week.

THE PRESS AND PEOPLE BOOST PATRIOTIC FUND

Some Random Comment on What is Being Done, and How They are Doing it

The committee rooms are now officially equipped for busness. The gentlemanly emissary from the local telephone headquarters called, dropped a receiver on the table, bored a hole in the floor, an accomplice down below shoved up a wire. It was hitched to the phone and the thing was done. Just as easy as rolling off a log. So now subscriptions may be telephoned direct to the rooms, where they will be spiked and put in sweet pickle for safe keeping. Do with your subscription just as the other willing fellow is going to do but do it first.

Mr. Stewart Robinson is a good man to look at and a fine man to work. With fifty such men to hustle any government could be turned out. But that is beside the question. The Fund will be the larger and better for Mr. Robinson's efforts. Now is the chance to hand your name down to posterity. Get it on the Patriotic Fund Honor Roll. Belleville has a whole raft of real good men. Now is the time to bring them out. They will never be paid in money but should get recognition out of pure gratitude. Next name, please.

Collective bargaining has been a feature of industrial life. So collective giving cannot but be a good thing. The working out of this idea is seen in the happy work done for Patriotic Funds in several cities where clubs, societies and associations have as collective units given to the Fund. Golf Clubs, Social and Fraternal Clubs and Associations, Sporting organizations and Charitable Societies and others have helped materially to roll up the grand total. Why not pick up this idea, friends. Surely there is in each of these institutions some one to set the ball rolling. Go to it. Have it ready when the team and captain call. He who gives well and wisely gives quickly. Then the example set counts for a lot. The thing becomes infectious, and well it may. What the Fund needs is a generous rivalry as to which institution will head the collective roll.

Another suggestion as to the rooms phone. The number of 30,000. Thirty-thousand. The amount we are after. So call for the number as stated. The rooms are opposite the post office. Just a step from the front street and only a short distance further to carry the subscription you have already brought down town. All contributions thankfully received and large ones in proportion.

Coming back to the grouping of givings. This is important. To those who think of ways to help the Fund ways will occur. We want to get away from the idea that if a man cannot make right off the bat a substantial subscription, such as he thinks he will be willing to have his name associated with, he might not give anything. That is all wrong. Here is how the manager of the Oriental Hotel, at Peterboro' for the hotel, handled the proposition. He advised the committee that from the date on which the communication was written until further notice, the hotel would contribute 50 cents per day for each guest who stopped at the hotel and who paid the regular rates, and the regular rates would be charged. That was on Dec. 8th. The contribution is still coming in. See? It is the accumulation that counts.

It is always well to have things understood. For instance with regard to the big mass meeting to be held in the opera house on Tuesday night. A rumor drifted into the headquarters that an admisson fee would be taken to assist the fund. No such thing. The meeting is open, free and all welcome. There will be several fine addresses by men of note in our national affairs. You will hear these speakers at their best, for any speaker who has ability rises to the higher flights on such an occasion, and to such a theme. The subject is an inspiring one. The audience sympathetic. Who is not? The net result should be that all who hear the addresses should go away realizing that each man has a part to play in aid of the Fund and that he should be up and doing. Don't fail to help pack the house on Tuesday night.

Now another word as to subscriptions. These are, of course, the whole objective of the campagn. Why else all the trouble. There be willing souls who may not give money or pledges for money at such a time as this. But there are other ways in which to respond. When a man says that he has the will but hesitates about the deed don't let him off. Get the deed. It is a safer proposition for the Fund. Then again there are gifts in kind that is something that may be turned into money. Just a few as an illustration. At Peterborough one man, a good mechanic, but who had been out of work, sent in a couple of fox terrier puppies, real cute little fellows. Put up at auction the puppies realized $7.50 each. One was taken by a dentist, who afterwards wanted his money back because he found, out that the puppy was of the wrong sex. No, sir. A bargain is a bargain. A fine rug brought good money. A city lot is held at $500 and will presently be sold. All sorts of things were sent in and turned into money. Over $500 was in this way realized.

City Councils may be relied to do what is best for the interests of the city, whose interests the council represent. That happens, in Belleville, to be the whole people. On a good proposition the people will stand behind the council. If this were not the case few councils would act on an emergency as a unit. It follows that what appeals to the good sense of such a representative body appeals to the people. Very well. The council meets this evening. It may be waited on and asked to make a grant of public money to the Patriotic Fund of, say, $5,000. About the cost of an important sewer. Such a sum as the city would cash in for an extension of water mains. Such an amount as would be expended on the necessary trimmings in fitting up a ward school. Any old example will do, for comparison. Here is the defence of the Empire. Just as surely as it can be. If a well fed, well clothed mechanic makes a contented workman, to have his family cared for should make the enlisted man a better soldier. That is what the Fund is for. So, if the council will take the bit in its teeth—so to speak—and vote $5,000 every man in the city will say well done. Sure thing. Peterborough committee made up such a mind as it had to ask for $5,000. Ten minutes before it waited on the council it changed that mind, went in and boldly asked for $10,000, and by Jinks, got it. Hurrah! Cheers! Today that council could not be induced by any process of argument or expostulation to even think of rescinding the grant. Feels now that it was a happy inspiration that asked for the larger amount. Fancy what a help it will be to announce from the platform on Tuesday night that the City of Belleville has pledged itself to start the Patriotic car going with a $5,000 shove. The thing will roll along as if on ball bearings. It is true some civic economies may be necessary afterwards. Just as well. A partial diet is often good for the individual. Short rations may be good for a city. But so long as we know the reason we are practicing abstinence and on account of the civic grant to the Patriotic Fund everyone will be content. Who, of the city council will achieve the distinction of moving and seconding the resolution. Gentlemen, don't all speak at once. Thanks, very much. Carried.

A word about the meeting. Ladies invited. Not only invited but beseeched to come. Woman's influence is a mighty factor. So come to the meeting. It is a really national event. Orchestra chairs reserved, in the opera house, for ladies. Come early. It will be the finest gathering of the year.

Another suggestion as to the Civic Grant says made it a mill on the dollar. It amounts to the same thing as mentioned in another paragraph. Mill on the dollar. Figure it out for yourself. Not a serious proposition, is it. Only one-tenth of one cent. The admission to a picture show represents the extent of the levy, or tax, on $100.00. There you have it. $1.00 on one thousand. $2.50 on a twenty-five thousand dollar home. Who is going to set in and kick at that. (Voice in the gallery says "sit down, you man in front, sit down."

Of course there will be mis-statements that will have to be overtaken. Might just as well start in to overtake them right now. No, Mr. Doubter, not a dollar of the subscriptions is used for expenses, as a whole. No one gets a rake off. No one makes any money out of the Fund. So far, and it is likely under wise management to continue, the bank interest on the amounts deposited have been sufficient to defray every expense incurred in administering the Fund, leaving it intact for use and assistance to the families of enlisted men and soldiers. When you hear—and it is just as well to refer to this now—that the committee and team captains and team-mates are lunching together, do not hastily run away with the idea that the collections are being drawn on for home consumption. All such expense will be met by personal subscription, outside of anything else. Lunching together pays. It never pays the caterer. Of that be assured. But the comradeship, the association, the genial companionship excited is a hopeful and inspiring feature of the campaign. Then when the evening's work begins there are no stragglers to wait for. Business starts with the clearing of the tables and having been fed the men are ready for work.

The big meeting will not be all speeches. There will be short intervals of cessation from oratory. Of these intervals the singing of Mrs. A. P. Allen will form one. Mrs. Allen will, at the request of the committee, sing "Tipperary." Sing it as the lady only can. There will be a new inspiraton in the sing, both on account of the talented vocalist, the rousing air and the association that the words recall. So whether the plaster is securely fastened to the ceiling of the opera house is no concern for the audience. For the men are invited to bring their lungs with them, to turn themselves loose and let the chorus ring until it can be heard in Tweed. Then everybody will feel better, and look around and say to his neighbor in the next seat, "we are the people." Certainly we are, only we're not quite sure of it.

Miss Anna Ponton will sing a recently published transcription of a familiar and world wide known song. While the air so long in use is a household word all will be delighted to hear the new rendering as given by Miss Ponton.

Some of the Publicity features of the campaign are now ready to send out. Across the front of the rooms has been placed a big placard, telling its story that we are doing business for the Old Fund in the New Stand. Bright, cheery place. Walk in. There is no "Pay-as-you-enter" sign on the door. You will not be implored to subscribe, at the rooms. Can if you will. But you may catch a little of the spirit of the place and go out and tell some one that the Fund is a great, big, hopeful thing and deserves to be supported. On Wednesday will be circulated a four-page folder, which will contain good sound and applicable argument and appeal. These will be distributed to every home in Belleville and to business places as well. Read very carefully. The claims and objects of the Fund are there set out. Should convince any reasonable man, open to conviction.

These folders will be distributed by the Cadets from the schools, who have volunteered for the work. Will do it well and thoroughly. The boys recognize the importance of such a duty and will cheerfully assist. The committee are indebted to the kind assistance of Major Barrager in arranging this detail.

Full-sheet cards, printed in colors will be placed in the store windows. These cards tell in short pithy sentences of the Fund and its claims. As you walk the street stop long enough to read and then remember. Only another way of calling to a sense of duty. Other publicity features will follow.

Spy May Have Murdered Private in B C.

VANCOUVER, B.C., March 21.—Military authorities in Vancouver are co-operating with the police in attempting to solve the mystery of the probable violent death of Pte. Peter Wassel, of the 29th Vancouver Battalion. His body was found lying in a pool of stagnant water a few hundred yards away from Hastings Park, where the thousand men of the second contingent are quartered. A coroner's jury brought in an open verdict.

Wassel came to Vancouver late in October, 1914, from Cambie, Oregon, having first written on October 22 to Col. Tobin as to the chance of enlistment. He joined the Sixth and signified his willingness for overseas service, whereupon he was sent out to Hastings. He was issued a uniform, but had not been examined, and attested for the overseas force, when, on November 7, he disappeared.

When he first joined Wassel seemed cheerful and anxious to be sociable, but after another recruit named Skrimp, now known to be a German-American, got in touch with him, he changed, and became morose, and held aloof.

The impression is that Skrimp tried to get Wassel to do some spying that Wassel did not want to do it, that Skrimp was afraid that Wassel might betray him, and so murdered him.

VIOLENT FIGHTING IN VICINITY OF ARGONNE

Secret Mobilization Reported From The Bulgarian Army

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 22.—Despatches from Paris report that a Zeppelin passed over there Sunday morning dropping bombs which caused several small fires and wounded two persons. A night attack by a heavy force of Germans on the British front north of Albert ended in disaster for the enemy, who were routed with heavy losses. There is violent fighting in the Woevre district. In the latter district French artillery exploded a whole park of German ammunition wagons.

Bucharest reports the secret mobilization of the Bulgarian army has been completed. A revival of the Balkan League is said to be imminent.

BRITISH BATTLESHIP OUT OF COMMISSION

Shell From Turkish Land Batteries Wrecked Engine Room

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 22.—A despatch from Constantinople via Berlin says the British battleship Suryshs has been put out of commission in the Dardanelles operations by a shell from the Turkish land batteries, which wrecked her engine room and killed the engine room crew.

A Petrograd despatch says official reports issued today state that operations in the Carpathians are entirely in Russia's favor. A desperate sortie by the Przemysl garrison yesterday resulted in a rout of the Austrians and the capture by the Russian forces of 107 officers, 1,000 men and 16 guns.

A Rome despatch states that all officers on the reserve list of all ages, were called to join the colors yesterday.

ONE DEATH FROM ZEPPELIN RAID

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 22.—One death resulted from the visit of Zeppelins to Paris early Sunday. Madame Hesson, an aged woman, was frightened to death by the explosion of a bomb in her street. Many bombs which failed to explode have been found on examination to be incendiary bombs, composed of phosphorus, tar and benzine.

COL. F. D. FARQUHAR IS KILLED IN ACTION

Commanding Officer of the Princess Patricia's Falls in the Fighting in France—Three Other Officers of Canadians and Several Men Killed

OTTAWA, March 22.—(Special.)—Colonel Farquhar of the Princess Patricias has been killed in action.

The message from the War Office to the Chief of Staff read:

"Colonel Farguhar, Princess Patricias, dead. Lieut. Martin of same regiment dead. Three killed, twenty wounded." The Militia Department has no information as to Lieut. Martin's identity. It is likely he is a British officer attached to the Princess Pats.

The official list of casualties given out in Ottawa last night also included in the list of dead:

Lieut. F. L. Eardley Wilmot of the Princess Patricias. His next of kin reside in England.

Five other Canadian soldiers appear as killed in the latest casualty list, issued in Ottawa last night.

Col. Francis Douglas Farquhar, D.S.O., succeeded Brigadier-General (then Colonel) Lowther in 1913 as Military Secretary, or Chief of the Duke of Connaught's staff at Ottawa, being temporarily promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, but resigned that position to take command of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. Previous to his coming to Canada he served for some time on the General Staff at the War Office, London, Eng. He was the only surviving son and heir of Sir Henry Thomas Farquhar of Gilminscroft, Scotland, and was 40 years of age, being born Sept. 17, 1874. The late Colonel Farquhar is survived by Mrs. Farquhar, who was Lady Evelyn Hely-Hutchinson, a sister of the sixth Earl of Donoughmore, whom he married in 1905, and by two daughters. He joined the Coldstream Guards about twenty years ago, served in the South African war, 1899-1900, when he was mentioned in despatches, won the Queen's medal with five clasps, and received the D.S.O. Colonel Farquhar participated in all the engagements of Lord Methuen's division up to and including the ill-fated engagements at Magersfontein, and took part in Lord Roberts' advance to Pretoria. In 1901-2 he was attached to a Chinese infantry regiment, and in 1903 participated in the Somaliland Expedition, again winning a medal with clasp.

KAISER AND TURKISH AMBASSADOR HOLD A LONG CONFERENCE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 22.—A despatch from Paris reports a further British advance at Eparges.

A Berlin despatch says the Kaiser and the Turkish ambassador held a long conference today regarding the progress of the allied fleet in the Dardanelles, which is causing anxiety in Germany. It is reported that a fleet of German aeroplanes and submarines is now assisting the Turks in the defence of the Dardanelles.

A Rome despatch states that the King and Premier will hold a private meeting of the Cabinet tomorrow. All subjects of Austria have been warned by their consuls to leave Italy within the shortest possible time.

WAR MIGHT HAVE BEEN AVERTED DECLARES SIR EDWARD GREY

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 22.—"War might have been averted by a European conference when and where Germany, desired," Sir Edward Grey told an audience in London this afternoon. He was acting as chairman of a gathering which was listening to a lecture on the strategy of war. Continuing along this line the Foreign Secretary said "Germany, from her experience in the Balkan Conference, knew she could count on our good will, and that we were ready to do last July what we did before. But Germany refused every suggestion, and on her rests for all time the appalling responsibility for the war. We now know Germany had prepared for war, and only those who have planned for war can prepare for it." Amid loud cheers Sir Edward added: "This is the fourth time within living memory that Prussia has made war upon Europe, and we are determined that it shall be the last."

ALLIES RECAPTURE TRENCHES LOST ON SATURDAY LAST

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 22—An official statement says: We recaptured yesterday some trenches which we lost Saturday evening at Notre Dame de Lorette, north of Arras.

At La Boisselle, northeast of Albert, we blew up one of the enemy's galleries and occupied the large part of the excavation thus formed.

In the Argonne district near Bagatelle we blew up three mines and two companies of ours stormed a German trench in which they maintained their positions despite strong counter attacks. At a point nearby the Germans, after bombarding our trenches and exploding two mines, attacked fiercely, but were hurled back despite reinforcements, and coming under fire of our artillery, suffered heavy losses.

FRENCH ATTEMPT TO TAKE GERMAN POSITION FRUSTRATED

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 22.—A German official statement says a fresh attempt made by the French to take a German position on the south slope of the Lorette heights last night, resulted in failure. A French night attack north of Lemesnil in the Champagne district, failed, and French efforts to win back their position at Reich Ackerkopf also resulted in failure. The statement also says that the Russians were driven out of the East Prussian town of Nemel yesterday.

WITHOUT BREAD FOR A WEEK

(Canadian Press Special)

VENICE, March 22.—Many districts in Vienna are reported to have been without bread for a week. One quarter of the bakeries are closed as they can get no flour. Between now and August 1st the city requires 6,000 carloads of flour, but only two thousand can be reckoned on.

NOMINATION AT PICTON

PICTON, Ont., March 22.—(Special.)—At a Liberal convention held in the town hall here Saturday, Mr. H. H. Horsey, of Ottawa, was selected as the Liberal candidate for Prince Edward County for the next Federal Election. Dr. M. Currie, ex-M.P., who was urged to accept the candidacy, declined to allow his name to come before the meeting.

City Family Doubly Afflicted

Mr. and Mrs. John Cracknell, who reside at 36 Sinclair street, in this city, were yesterday doubly amicted, owing to the deaths of their son and son-in-law, which occurred during the afternoon. An attack of fever was the cause of death.

The son, Charles Cracknell, was 12 years of age, and was the only son of his parents. He was born in Madoc Township and had lived in the city but a short time. Charles was a bright boy and a general favorite with all who knew him. He had been ill for some time.

The son-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. Cracknell was 22 years of age. He was born in Hungerford Township, being a son of Mr. John Phillips. By occupation, he was an electrician, and employed at the cement works at Point Ann, where he was taken ill. In September last he was married to Miss Cracknell. Deceased had made his home here but a few months.

Many friends of the afflicted family will sympathize with them in the bereavement they have been called upon to bear.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. John MacLaren of Brockville, is visiting friends in this city.

Miss Hazel Baker of Toronto, is in the city visiting relatives and friends.

Judge Fraleck left on Saturday for the north, where he will hold Division Court.

Mr. P. R. Mulherron, of Campbellford, is in the city for a short visit with friends.

Mr. John A. Mastin of Calgary, arrived here to-day to attend the funeral of his father, the late Mr. Melbourne Mastin.

Worthless Mexican Bills in Circulation

Belleville is being inflicted with some unscrupulous person or persons, passing Mexican 5 pesos, which look somewhat like a Canadian genuine $5.00 bill. Some of these have passed through the hands of our local merchants and found their way to some of the banks.

The local branch of the Standard sent one of these 5 pesos to New York asking for a quotation as to their worth. The answer came back, "that at present, they are worth about 25 cents."

Keep your eye open for this phoney money, as it is easy to have one slipped over you.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

The Sunday afternoon meeting for men was addressed by the Rev. C. G. Smith. His subject, "The Masculinity of The Master" was very appropriate to a group of young men.

In the campaign for new members for the Boy's Department, Harold "Twigg" Woodley, captured first prize, a silver wrist-watch. Max Herity, a close second, won a year's membership in the Association. The new members are invited to the full advantages of their membership.

The Fathers' and Sons' Banquet, which was to have been held this Friday night, will instead, be held Thursday night, April 1st, in order to convenience Mr. G. A. Warburton, B.A., Metropolitan Secretary of the Toronto Y.M.C.A.'s, who will be guest and the chief speaker.

COMING TO TOWN ON MARKET DAY

Being Impressions Formed During a Visit to What is Modestly Claimed to be Ontario's Best Farmer's Market—Which Means the Best Anywhere

Market day is quite an event. From all points of the compass rigs drive in during the early hours of Saturday. Back as far as 15 miles the blackest hour before the dawn sees hustle and bustle about the farmstead. Butter and eggs are carried out to the democrat, which had been loaded with its potatoes or beans or grains the night before. The stock is fed, horses harnessed and the whole family pile into the rig, bound for market.

Belleville and the "Bellevillians" claim to have the best farmers' market in Ontario. It is a big claim, and The Sun is not going to declare its accuracy. One thing, however, is sure, any market which beats it is going to get up early in the morning, and maybe stay up late at night. Everything "goes" on this market, from quarters of beef to bottles of horse radish—and at prices that are right. It is little wonder then that on market days the roads are black with rigs, buggies and waggons, democrats and phaetons—all sorts of rigs, aristocratic and plebian.

But it is not to farmers alone that market day is quite an event. In Belleville the household equipment seems to be never complete without a market basket. There is just as much variety in these baskets as there is in the vehicles which bring in the produce. Of course there are fruit baskets and veneer baskets, but the favorite for Belleville's elite seems to be a dainty little wicker affair of a rich yellow and brown, with a stout handle and lids that open up from the centre to each end—just large enough to hold a dozen or so eggs, several pounds or so of butter and a lifeless chicken, maybe. Charming young ladies, happy matrons and even venerable grandfathers were seen by The Sun turning their steps to the city hall to lay in a stock of produce, "direct to the consumer." And soon again the flood ebbed; the baskets turned homeward, bulging with the good things that bespoke at least one square meal again for Sunday.

In the large market building row after row of counter-like tables displayed the butter and eggs, with the alert owners (ladies, nearly all of them) standing behind, eager to drive a bargain.

"How do you sell the horse radish", ventured The Sun, of a bright little woman who had some for sale. It was 20c. a bottle, and it was the genuine article, prepared the night before. The interviewer had weepy memories of boyhood days when the meat chopper had to be turned to prepare the relish, and so commiserated the lady. "Yes", she said, "I often declare I'll never do it again, when I'm making it." Horse radish is worse than onions.

While the townspeople carry home the light stuff, vendors will deliver the potatoes and other bulky articles. This service is charged for. For instance: parsnips sold at 15c. per peck on the market, but 20c. if delivered. The same was true of beets and carrots.

Butter sold around 34c. and 35c. per pound, and was all sold off. Eggs were more of a drug on the market. Opening up at 25c. per dozen they soon fell to 20c. per dozen, which was the prevailing price.

"What are you asking for your straw?" asked one farmer of another.

"Oh, $7.50 a ton."

"How much for the load?"

"About $5."

"You mean $2 don't you?"

With this joke they passed on, but the joke was typical of the atmosphere of the market. Neighbors meet and talk over things. Men from down in Prince Edward rub shoulders with men from up above Foxboro in Hastings, and get acquainted. It reminded one of the little verse:

"God put us all upon this earth
To suit His own good ends;
And then to give the place some worth
He made some of us friends."

In the market building the buzz of conversation was as lively as at the average church social. A lady behind one stall held her child on the counter before her and exchanged greetings with the lady across the way, when just then a customer started the day's business for her.

And, as said before, everything goes on the market. Dressed meats are sold, flowers raised by local florists are in demand, and an extensive system of market gardening is represented by the numerous wagons backed up behind the market buildings.

Belleville claims to have "the best" market; and beyond dispute it has a marvellously effective one, which puts the surrounding farmers in a good position there. Why, farmers are even members of the city's board of trade. They get a square deal in Belleville; as square as anywhere.

ADVERTISING

(From Beck's Weekly Montreal)

The Montreal merchant who spends twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars a year in newspaper advertising doubtless thinks he is accomplishing great things. As a matter of fact he is a mere "piker" when his spendings are compared with those of some of the great American merchants for the same purpose. For instance, last year Marshall Field & Co. spent $350,000 for advertising in the Chicago daily newspapers alone. One paper, the Chicago Daily News, carried $90,000 worth of advertising for that firm. Several others were not far behind. Marshall Field & Co.'s advertising bill was duplicated by several other Chicago firms. It was exceeded by those of a number of New York business concerns. In Philadelphia one firm is said to have spent half a million with the newspapers. It is significant, too, that these firms are among the biggest profit-making concerns in the country. It pays them to advertise. The average rate for store advertising in the daily papers of the three largest American cities runs close to twenty cents a line; the average rate in Montreal is about six cents. In population Montreal ranks ninth in the list of cities on this continent; in the matter of newspaper advertising it ranks about fortieth. Perhaps that's the reason so many of our merchants complain that they are constantly on the brink of bankruptcy. They haven't learned how to use printers' ink.

OPENING OF THE NEW TABERNACLE ROTUNDA

Many People Admire New Structure at Front of Local Church—Dedicatory Services—The Culinary Department and Sunday School Annex

Late last fall ground was broken at the front of the Belleville Tabernacle church with a view to erecting a more commodious entrance. At the same time work was started at the rear of the church for the purpose of building an annex for the Sunday school. Since beginning operations the scene has been a busy one, with the result that yesterday the three front entrance doors were thrown open to the church-going public, when dedicatory exercises for the front addition were carried out in a most auspicious manner. Those who attended yesterday's services had little idea of the magnitude and beauty of the work until entering the roomy rotunda, which is semi-circle in form, 26 feet, 2 1-2 by 46 feet, with three magnificent entrances.

The woodwork is oak finish, with stucco finished walls, amply lighted, with a canopy in the dome of art glass, giving a beautiful effect in the daylight, while at night eight 60 candle power tongston lights, located about the variegated glass sends down a ray of brilliancy beyond description. Beside this several white lights are placed about the ceiling to excellent effect.

At each side of the main steps leading to the large platform between the broad stairways branching up to the church towers, to which outside stairs had for years led, are treble arches supported by circular columns of staff-plaster corbels, with archives. The ceilings are plastered cornishes with sunk stucco panels, and the well-hole under the canopy light is decorated with numerous members and panels of staff-plaster work.

Passing to the right, through broad openings below the south tower, one finds entrance to the Sunday school parlors, while beneath the north and larger tower is a modern and very convenient lavatory, all of which is so neatly arranged that the visitors to the church is really surprised at the plan of it all.

In place of the doors in each tower, to which the old steps led, will be windows to harmonize with those of the front, the effect being a decided improvement. The stone steps leading to the new rotunda and the general door and window trimmings are of fine bush hammer stone, the main roof is covered with old process IX merchant's tin, and the dome roof plated with copper.

The effect of the general plans and specifications, which were prepared by G. M. Miller & Co., Toronto, and as carried out by the general contractors, Messrs. T. G. Bell and R. H. White, of Belleville, is not surpassed in Ontario, and considered among the most spacious and pretentious in the Dominion, which is all the more creditable when it is stated that, with the exception of the art glass, furnished by the Luxfer Prism Co., of Toronto, the work was performed wholly by Belleville men. In a word, it is a work of which the architects, the contractors, the pastor, officials and members have every reason to feel proud.

Passing to the rear of the church edifice, we find an admirably fitted up culinary department, possessing extensive shelving accommodations, roomy cupboards, a large zink-covered table, a fine new coal range, a gas stove, a porcelain sink, draining boards, and every convenience for an up-to-date kitchen, with beautifully whitened walls, and abundance of light.

Other improvements in this section of the building is a new flight of stairs leading to the pastor's private vestry, and an electric blower for the organ, the latter doing away with the old-time water power.

At the north side of the vestry class-room No. 11 has been turned into a neatly arranged library, doing away with the box-like quarters at the end of the main Sunday School platform, while adjoining is a roomy passage leading to the new annex just completed, giving the Sunday School ten well-lighted class rooms, five on each floor, with two flights of stairs leading from the first to second floors, an especial feature being an entrance and exit at the north side of the church, which adds much to the general convenience of this department.

By the alterations as completed, there are now seven easy exits, where only three were provided under the old plan, more than doubling the opportunities for escape in case of fire.

The arrangements for comfort and safety are as nearly perfect as they can be provided, and the care with which every detail has been carried out is a credit to those having the work in charge.

While all the work was directly under the supervision of Messrs. Bell and White, the plumbing and sheet metal work was done by the Smith Hardware Co., Front street; the electrical work, Greenleaf & Son; painting, John Cornelius; plastering the rotunda, Charles Watkins; plastering the annex, Carter & Slater; the mill work furnished by the Pringle Co.; the stonecutting under the superivsion of Robert Leonard; the floor matting was furnished and expertly laid by the Ritchie Co. Ltd.

Opening and Dedication

Yesterday was a day long to be remembered in the Tabernacle church, the opening and dedication of the new rotunda being attended by large crowds both morning and evening. As an assistant and preacher, Rev. W. G. Clarke, B.A., the pastor, had secured the services of Rev. J. C. Speer, D.D., of Toronto, who delivered two brilliant discourses, concluding the morning services with the regular dedicatory exercises, the day's work proving extremely interesting to all.

The large choir, under the leadership of Mrs. Jams Grand, appearing for the first time in neat surplices, rendered excellent service, hymns, anthems, quartettes, trios, and solos being of an unusually high order. Too much praise cannot be extended the choir of this church for their services from Sunday to Sunday, yet yesterday was an exceptional day, carried through in an exceptionally biliant manner.

This evening the Ladies' Aid Society will initiate their new kitchen into service by a tea-meeting, which promises to be an enjoyable event, and on Sunday next the annex for the Sunday School will be brought into use with special services of which The Intelligencer will speak later.

The Bugle Blast To Canada

Readers of the newspapers and followers of the course of the war must long ago have become convinced that the situation grows more and more intense and critical day by day. Great Britain is faced not alone by outside enemies, but by labor troubles and by lack of those immense internal resources in the matter of food production that Germany and Austria-Hungary possess. She cannot feed herself, and is compelled to rely on other countries for a supply of the necessaries of life. In such a case the duty of her children is distinctly plain. It is noteworthy of her enemies that they are not only thoroughly united but that they are enduring with what fortitude they possess the rigid military enforcements that are placed upon them for the conservation both of food and material. Every man, woman and child, from the Kaiser down, has been put on rations. The idea is three-fold, to guard against any possible emergencies, to mislead the foe into over-confidence, and by thoroughness to bring such pressure to bear as will hasten the final decision. Britain is pursuing the same course. She has not yet found it necessary to place her population individually on short rations, but she has found it desirable to take over munition factories in order to ensure supplies that mean either life or death to the nation. Meantime, Germany by cowardly submarine assassination is endeavoring to starve her people and cripple her resources.

With such a state of affairs existent it is hardly necessary to explain to stay-at-home Canadians how best they can fulfil their manifest duty and show the burden-bearers how completely they possess their sympathy. But the bugle blast has its rallying power in peace as in war. To all the people, and to farmers, breeders and settlers in particular, the Patriotism and Production movement that is in progress is blowing its bugle, or, in other words, carrying its message. Its object is to arouse all and sundry to the part they are called on to play. That part does not of necessity mean harder work nor increased acreage; but it does imply the exercise of every faculty in attention and vigilance. It does imply in order to secure increased and improved production, by which alone cultivators of the soil can contribute towards the credit of the county and Empire, the greatest care in the selection of seed, in the breeding of live-stock and in economy of the land.

Roumanian Statesman Says it was on Return from Norway Chance of Peace Vanished

LONDON, March 20.—In an article contributed to the Grande Revue, M. Take Jonesco, distinguished Roumanian statesman, traces the causes of the war and in the course of it he asks, "When did the German Emperor first become a partisan of immediate war."

"I believe," says M. Jonesco, "even after the assassination at Serajevo he had not quite yet made up his mind. There are two facts which incline me to take this view. On July 9, King Charles assured me I might take a quiet holiday, that peace was certain for three or four years to come at least and this he maintained even after I had drawn his attention to the equivocal attitude of Austria after the assassination and to the suggestions of Marquis Pallavicini in the Spring of 1914. And yet the Emperor of Russia told King Charles at Constanza that if Austria attacked Serbia this would mean war, notwithstanding his devotion to the cause of peace.

"The second fact is one of which I have many proofs, and that is what German Ambassador at London was convinced peace would be preserved. In March, 1914, Prince Lichnowsky declared that nothing stood in the way of good relations between Germany and England so long as Germany did not seek to attack or irritate France, in which case England would sacrifice her last shilling and her last man.' Even in July, when he was uneasy on the subject of what was being prepared at Vienna, he was still convinced of the maintenance of peace.

"On the evening of Wednesday, July 22, that is to say, on the eve of the sending tuo of the ultimatum, the Ambassador did not conceal from me his aneasiness on the subject of the Austrian note to Serbia. He knew Berlin had left Vienna a free hand; he was afraid the note was too stiff and he suggested to me that Roumania should use any influence she might possess at Belgrade in order to secure acceptance of the ultimatum as it stood, promising that with regard to its application it could always be attentuated or evaded. As a matter of fact, in Vienna after the ultimatum had been dispatched there was only one thing that was dreaded and that was that the Serbians might accept it."

M. Jonesco goes on to relate that so late as July 27 the German Ambassador firmly believed peace would be maintained and inclinnes to believe he says, that the Kaiser left for Norway without having definitely made up his mind to provoke war at any price as he did on his return.

"I think," he proceeds, "that Emperor William only decided in favor of immediate war on the day on which he returned to Berlin or the day before. He succumber to the warlike atmosphere. Suddenly he conceived the idea that Russia and France were unprepared, that internal troubles existed in France and England, in England especially, and his mind was made up. Nothing could stop him. Austria became a party to the salutary terror and at the eleventh hour showed a disposton to listen to reason, but Emperor William would not hear of it and with his incorrigible impetuosity, precipitated the war.

"In brief, then, it was Germany that created the situation, resulting in the European War, but, it was not Germany alone which fixed the date and precipitated the outbreak. Her responsibility, nevertheless, is great, for never would Austria have dared if Germany had not left her a free hand."

It is said that Roumania will enter the war in April. "Everybody's Doing It" should be a popular tune soon.

RELIEF FOR PRISONERS

With such a record of horrors as has marked the history of the war so far, it is gratifying at last to note one successful step toward the restoration of humane practices. The United States government announces that an agreement has been reached between the governments of Great Britain, Germany and Austria under which representatives of the United States will inspect and report upon the prison camps in those countries and will attend to the distribution of such food and supplies as may be sent to the prisoners. The British note published on Thursday, after stating that the government has received the most terrible accounts of the treatment of prisoners in German camps, added: "We have proposed, with the consent of the United States government, that a commission of United States officers should be permitted in each country to inspect the treatment of prisoners of war. The United States government has been unable to procure any reply from the German government to this proposal and we remain in continuous anxiety and apprehension concerning the treatment of British prisoners of war in Germany."

German reports, less official, but doubtless carrying great weight to the minds of Germans, have also alleged barbarous treatment of prisoners in British and French camps. The life of a prisoners of war at best must be a very miserable one and, if the food supply in Germany is as short as some reports state, the prisoners are likely to be on very short, rations unless food can be on very short rations unless food can be sent them by their governments. Negotiations are also under way for an exchange of civilian prisoners over military age, and it is expected that similar agreements will be reached by the other belligerents.

The state department, in a well-meant offer to shown equal and impartial confidence in the humane principles of all the belligerents, says: "This situation has been aggravated by sensational stories of abuse and maltreatment of prisoners on both sides, which have been given wide circulation in the newspapers in many countries, and although for the most part without foundation of fact, have been popularly accepted as true. The result of all this has been to excite and inflame public feeling in all of these countries to the extent of demanding retaliation and reprisals."

This verdict of general acquittal sounds a bit superfluous, considering that in advance of investigation the state department cannot possibly know whether the stories are true or not. Moreover, it is hardly diplomatic in view of the fact that some of the strongest charges have been made officially by the governments concerned. The importance of getting the prisoners under some kind of neutral supervision, however, and of securing for their friends the right to send them some relief is too great to admit of quibbling. Next to the relief work that is being accomplished in Belgium and Poland, this success in securing better conditions for prisoners is the most important work for humanity that has been accomplished since the war began, and the part which the United States has been able to take in it is cause for congratulation.

THE AFTERMATH

Kitchener is reported as saying that he could not tell when the war would finish, but it would begin in May, 1915. While business men are watching the prologue, they are guessing, too, what will happen in business realms after the war. Kitchener's terseness, the guessing, and the acceptance of only one possible result of the conflict, are typically British. There is to be a business future, and there is faith in that future. Without precedents for guidance, men are trying to figure what is likely to be the situation immediately after peace is declared.

Mr. Charles Gide, a French economist, predicts a trade boom for the allies after the war. "It seems certain," he says, "that a victory for the allies will be the best possible advertisement for the goods of the allies—an advertisement the results of which are almost beyond calculation. England and France will certainly gain a large share of the German foreign trade."

Before the Royal Society of Arts, London, in February, Mr. O. C. Beale, past president of the Australian Manufacturers' Association, stated that British industry would expand after the war beyond doubt, "but it is incumbent upon us to apply our minds keenly to consider the channels for expansion before the war closes, because the rush and demand, according to experience after other great wars, will be so great that preparations for new work will be costly to the extent, perhaps, of exclusion."

When Mr. Lloyd George presented his war budget in November, he pointed out that during the war and the period of reconstruction which would follow it, there would be no competition in the neutral markets of the world, except from America, and that therefore England would command those markets. He looked forward to a period of four or five years when the manufacturers of Great Britain would have an artificial stimulus because of the abnormal conditions. When that period was over the country would be faced by the most serious industrial situation it had ever had to face, as capital would be exhausted, and customers crippled and their purchasing power depressed. He hoped that there would be a great reduction in the cost of armaments after the war, but predicted that even for the first few years the country must expect heavy increased charges for interest in the sinking fund, separation allowances and pensions.

A Cabinet Minister at Ottawa is said to have predicted for Canada a few months of great activity after the war and then another quiet period of several years. The Canadian situation after the war will depend largely upon the action of individual course pursued by the men who guide the nation's destiny. Proper economy, common sense, an intelligent immigration policy, concentration upon production, clean politics and hard work would all help to shape a satisfactory future situation in Canada.

What About The Babes

That Will be born to the Outraged Women

LONDON, March 20.—In the Despatch a number of notable people are discussing the question of what is to be done in the case of the women—including English girls—who are expectant mothers as the result of atrocious outrages by the German troops in France and Belgium?

Every woman in Britain has been asking herself that question since Max. Pemberton drew public attention in The Dispatch to the terrible problem confronting these innocent victims of the Huns. Horror and indignation, but, most of all pity, have prompted hundreds of mothers to write about this question.

The majority fervently desire that the babes should live and that the mothers should be provided for by the State. But a considerable minority agree with the English father who declares that the child of his sixteen-years-old daughter, violated by the Huns, shall not live.

Many of the women correspondents who agree with the attitude of the father of the English girl mother-to-be state that nearly all the women they have spoken to are of like mind.

Mrs. Flora Annie Steel, the distinguished authoress, says: "On lines of strict justice, and a human being with right of free will and personal choice, there can be no question but that a woman when she finds herself made mother without her physical and mental consent, should have freedom to rid her life of a responsibility she did not seek. To say otherwise is comparable to asserting that a man is bound to honor a forged check. However, if women are wise, they will set aside the natural wrath of men and remember that through their humiliation and disgrace, their lothing, their disgust, they may be bringing a great gift to the world."

Dr. Clement Philippe, president of the Belgian Medical Society in London, says: "Maurice Barres, the distinguished French author ,has gone as far as to demand that the law should close its eyes should the despairing victims take justice into their own hands at the supreme moment.

"As a medical man, however by very profession a guardian and preserver of life, how can I dare to pronounce a verdict?

"Think of our situation, seeing prostrate at our feet some unfortunate victim crying aloud in shame and pain for deliverance from both the stigma and the torture, the agony of body and of soul—crying out for their lost innocence and begging us not to allow them to be eternally branded with the dread infamy!

"Yet what can we do? What can we advise? What must we not do?

"God give us light, within whose knowledge is the power of life and death!"

Mrs. Despard, sister of Field-Marshall Sir John French, writes: "The suggestion that there should be any violent interference with the child of one of these unfortunate victims of Hun brutality and outrage, either before or after birth, is utterly repelent to me. However, we may regard the circumstances of the birth of the child, it must always be remembered that the child itself is in no wise to blame and therefore ought not to suffer. It must be cared for and properly brought up, and the problem, to my mind, seems to resolve itself into a question of how the future of the child may be safeguarded without prejudicing the future of the mother.

"To my way of thinking the best course to be adopted is to remove the child as soon as possible to a foundling hospital where it can grow up without knowing its mother or the tragic surroundings of its birth. The child should be brought up the same as the other children in the hospital so that it might eventually fall into the population and the dreaded secret be permanently preserved."

FALL THIRTY FEET WHEN ROPE BREAKS

TORONTO, March 19.—Falling a distance of thirty feet when the cross bearer on a staging broke at the Polson Iron Works shipyards to-day, three men received painful injuries. They had to be taken to St. Michael's Hospital. W. Shields, aged 31, 150 Sherbourne street, had his back hurt; Arthur Gilbert, aged 28, 203 Logan avenue, had his left foot fractured; and Hugh Smith, aged 18, 53 Bolo avenue, sustained sprains and bruises to his foot. The men were working on the side of a boat when the cross bearer broke.

FELL AGAINST SAW LOST HIS FINGERS

TORONTO March 19.—The question of how far a lumber company must go in protecting its men employed at rip-saws was discussed in the County Civil Court today during the action brought for $500 by Caleb Johnson, a mechanic, against the Chelew Lumber Company, at the corner of Dovercourt and Van Horne.

Johnson alleges negligence on the part of the company for failing to guard the saw, for not cleaning sawdust from the surrounding floor by means of a blower, for refusing to shut off power just before the accident happened. In consequence, says Johnson he slipped and fell against the saw, cutting off two fingers of his right hand.

A sample of lumber and saw cut was produced in court today where the case is proceeding before His Honor Judge Denton.

A Call to Belleville in Name of Women and Children

"Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, Lest we forget."

The tramp of the bread-winners is in the streets. They are going to the front. They are leaving families behind.

Every man with women of his own--every man with little children--knows what a tragedy to the home is the going of the bread-winner. We call on the people to rally to the protection of these mothers, sisters, wives and children so suddenly deprived of their natural protectors.

$30,000 IN TWO DAYS

A great campaign is under way to raise $30,000 in two days for a war relief fund. This money is for the women and children of the soldiers who go to the front--money for fuel, for rent, for clothing, for food.

Now is the time to raise the money--not weeks hence when hardship and suffering have already begun. Now is the time to wipe away every care of the soldier going to the front. Now is the time to wipe away every barrier to enlistment. Now is the time for Belleville to show the world the Canadian's conception of his duty to dependent womanhood and childhood.

Surely no contribution permitted by your means can be considered too great for such a cause as this : and no contribution can be too small to be welcomed.

The standing of the men associated with this work is a guarantee of the able administration of the fund. It will be expended under the most careful supervision. The need and the worthiness of every case will be clearly established.

Britain calls for her best sons in this great emergency! Let no man who would fight for the glory of the British Empire be held back because he is needed at home.

Give! Give! Give!

Now is the time to remember the Women and Children.

"Lord, God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget."

The idea of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is this :

The soldiers have gone to fight, not for their home town or for any particular locality, but for all Canada.

The whole of Canada should combine to take proper care of their families.

The Fund is one Fund, and in each locality is administered by the local branch.

In Belleville, for instance, the families of the soldiers will be looked after by the local branch acting for the National Association.

All the families of soldiers throughout Canada will receive aid on the same basis, and none will be neglected.

This is a sensible and patriotic plan. Belleville will fall in line. Do all you can, but do it now.

On Thursday and Friday, March 25th and 26th, eight teams, eight of each, citizens of Belleville, will give their time to the work. They will see personally, every one who should contribute. Be ready for them. Don't disappoint. It is your duty to yourself, your home, your country.

PATRIOTIC MASS MEETING, OPERA HOUSE, TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 23

There still are a number of sterling citizens whose notion of the proper place to wear evening clothes is in a photograph.

A Cleveland judge has decided that a man has a right to choose his wife's women friends, but he is not advising to insist on the "right."

If a German soldier lacks enthusiasm he is court martialed. Patriots made so by force are never patriotic at heart.

"WAR"

• • •

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

Again he would say, "Your husband is a staff officer, and will not be neglected as a common soldier. Besides you should think about the grandeur of the result of the war, and not about your own petty nervous feelings."

"Yes, not to think about it. That is always the way we treat human misery. All kinds of barbarity exist because we are trained not to think about it."

The Red Cross was a new organisation. I read Dunant's pamphlet, which urged its necessity. The tract was a heart-rending appeal. He had hurried to the field of Solferino, and told the world what he saw. Hosts of wounded lying five and six days without help. What could a single man do to save this mass of misery? Many needed only a drop of water or a bite of bread; others were buried still breathing. He spoke out, and for the first time—the world echoed the cry. The Geneva Convention was called and the Red Cross was founded.

Why had not Austria sent delegates? Why is everything new met either with opposition or indifference? The law of mental inertia and the sanctified custom are to blame. My father argued: "The idea is all right, but impracticable!" How could military authority allow private service on the field? And then there were spies! And the expense! Is not war costly enough without it? Volunteer nurses were an unnecessary burden. Tactics came before friendly offices. It was even argued that this unnecessary burden would increase the cost of supplies and bring a rise in prices.

Such is official wisdom! so learned, so prudent, so heartless, and so immeasurably stupid!

The first engagement took place in Bohemia at Liebenau, June 25.

"It is a magnificent beginning," said my father. "Heaven is with us. Our 'Iron Brigade' will reduce these windbags. They will punish these fellows well."

(However, the next news showed that, after five hours of fighting this same brigade, forming a part of the advance guard of Clam-Gallas, retreated to Podol. I learned later that Frederick was in this engagement, and the same night General Horn attacked Podol.)

"But," continued my father, "even better news comes from the south. At Custozza, dear children, we have gained a most glorious victory. I have already said it: Lombardy must become ours. I regard the war as decided. We must send some of our regulars and finish off these Italians, and then it will be easy to deal with these 'tailors' apprentices.' This impertinent Prussian militia is not fit to engage with regular soldiers. They are all from the shops, the bench, and mere rubbish, and they cannot stand against such blood and iron as our men are made of. Hear the good news from the paper this morning: 'The cattle-plague in Prussian Silesia has broken out in a highly threatening form.'"

"Cattle-plague—threatening! Is this your good news? Nice thing we must accept as pleasure in these war days. However, the black and gold frontier posts will undoubtedly keep the plague from crossing over to us."

But my father went on reading the pleasant intelligence:

"Fever is raging among Prussian troops. Such results must necessarily abound in the villages, with the miserable shelter, unhealthy swamp land, and bad treatment. Austrians have no idea how miserably the Prussians handle their men. The nobles do as they please with the common people. Three ounces of salt pork is all that is allowed for each man. They are unaccustomed to forced marches and the hardship of short rations, and are close to starvation.

"The papers are full of startling news. You ought to keep them, Martha." And I have kept them. This one ought always to do, and when a new struggle is in prospect one should read not the latest news but the accounts of the preceding wars, and weigh how little truth is contained in all these boastings and the prophesying; that would be instructing.

THE HUN'S DIARY

The question naturally arises in what other country except Germany would such a disgraceful effusion be printed and heralded under big scare headlines—all faithfully reproduced in facsimile from the Jauersches Tageblatt in "Les Crimes Allemands"—and what is one's estimate of the state of "Kultur" in which such a thing is possible let alone commendable? Speaking from experience of Europe and of eleven years on this side of the Atlantic, I believe that in Germany alone under the present system would a family newspaper become the accomplice post facto of Klemt and his fellow Criminals. To approve by publication such deeds as this "soldier" describes is to condone and encourage them. I need not add that it is no more "perfidious" or illegal to fire upon the enemy from the branches of a tree than from the top of a window or the bottom of a trench and soldiers know perfectly well that such a practice is not less brave and dangerous. One might add in passing it is far more brave and dangerous for soldiers so ensconced to fire upon a well armed and numerically superior foe than. for example, battle cruisers to cannonade defenceless watering places on England's East Coast or for Zeppelins at night under the cover of darkness to drop bombs upon sleeping women and children in England's home counties—two vivid chapters in the Gospel of Frightfulness which have elicited the royal approval of the Kaiser and incidentally entailed a further depreciation in the value of the once coveted Iron Cross.

111—ARSON, PILLAGE, MURDER

The numerous official reports made by French and Belgian Committees of Investigation corroborate in every essential detail the crimes recorded by the German diarists and they add much other evidence which German apologists will find it impossible to contradict. In due course there will be another inquiry made by neutrals which will command special attention in the United States where we have been told that the accusation against German soldiers on the field are based either on the wild imaginings of irresponsible witnesses, or the malicious inventions of surviving belligerents in hostile armies. The Germans have not thought it worth while to institute an enquiry of any sort. If such a task is ever undertaken by them one may suggest by way of a start that they study the "findings" of the highly authoritative and capable committees appointed by the Belgians, French and English. The French and the Belgian have been published in full in French; both give details regarding places, dates, names, and testimony. The English has not yet left the press.

I quote the following passage from the French "Journal Officiel" 8th Jan. 1915, which prints, in full, the report of the French Commission appointed to investigate German atrocities in France:

"The proof upon which we rely for our findings consists of our personal observations, photographic documents and numerous testimonies given in judiciary form under other. In a general way one may affirm that

"Never before has a war between civilized nations been marked by such savage and ferocious features as that now being waged upon our country by an implacable adversary. Pillage, rape, incendiarism and murder are practiced commonly by our enemies and the facts which have been daily revealed, while they constitute astounding crimes against the common law punished by the codes of all countries with the most severe and exacting penalties, show incidentally that German mentality since 1870 has deteriorated amazingly.

"Assaults upon women and girls have been of unheard-of frequency. We have proved a great number which represent, however, only an infinitely small proportion of those with which we might have been able to deal, but for the sentiment of modesty upon the part of the victims of hateful acts who refuse generally to reveal them. No doubt there would have been less committed if the chiefs of an army in which discipline is most severe had taken the trouble to issue warnings. These crimes against the person may be considered as individual acts of unchained brutes but such cannot be said of the campaign of incendiarism, theft and assassination. For these commanding officers must be held responsible before humanity.

"In most of the places where we made our investigations we were able to justify ourselves that the German Army showed a perpetual disregard and contempt for human life; that its soldiers and even its chiefs did not think it wrong to slay the wounded; that they killed without pity inoffensive villagers of territories invaded and that they did not spare in their homicidal rage either women, aged men or children. The shootings of Luneville, Nomeny and Senlis are terrifying examples and you will read in the course of our report descriptions of scenes of bloodshed in which officers themselves were not ashamed to take part.

"One's mind refuses to believe that all these killings took place without offence. Such, however, is the case. The Germans, it is true, always gave the same excuse, pretending that civilians had commenced by firing upon them. This allegation is untrue and those who have made it have been unable to give it a semblance of truth even when they went to the extent of firing their own rifles in the neighborhood of houses, as they were accustomed to do, in order to represent that they had been attacked by innocent people upon whose ruin and massacre they were bent.

"Not alone human life but also personal liberty is an object of complete disdain on the part of the German military authority. Almost everywhere we found their citizens of all ages have been dragged from their homes and led into captivity. Many died or were killed en route. Incendiarism is ever a more customary practice with the enemy than murder. It is constantly employed by the Germans either as a means of systematic devastation or for purposes of intimidation. To this end the German Army possessed an up-to-date plant including torches, hand-grenades, fuses, petroleum pumps, rockets and finally, little packages containing tabloids of a most inflammable powder. The rage for incendiarism expressed itself chiefly against churches and monuments possessing an artistic or historical interest. In the various departments where we have investigated, thousands of houses have been found burnt but we have taken no record except of those which were the result of exclusive criminal intention, ignoring fires caused by shells in the course of pitched battles or due to causes which it has not been possible to determine in precise fashion. Robbery, we report, has been perpetual and we do not hesitate to allege that wherever an enemy troop has passed, the place has been handed over in the presence of the officers and often with their participation, to a systematic and organized pillage. Cellars have been emptied of their last bottles, safes have been smashed open and considerable sums have been taken. A great quantity of silverware and jewels, also pictures, furniture accessories, artistic objects, linen, bicycles, women's clothes, sewing machines, even the children's playthings have been taken away and placed upon vehicles destined for the frontier.

"Against all such robbery, as against all manner of crime, there has been no appeal and if some wrecked villager ventured to ask an officer to intervene in order to spare a life or to protect property, the only reply received, sometimes accompanied by threats was an unwavering formula to the effect that the war was responsible for everything, even the cruelest of abominations."

The French report deals with the investigations of German crimes in the Provinces of Seine and Marne, The Marne, The Meuse, Meurthe and Moselle, Oise and Aisne, and deserves to be republished in full for the benefit of American readers, even of hyphenated citizens who desire conclusive proof of allegations to which unofficial reference has been made in the diaries of German soldiers already quoted.

One might write an entire chapter describing deeds committed by German soldiers in violation of the rules of war as regards combatants, the murder of wounded or prisoners, ruses forbidden by international conventions and assaults upon ambulances, but all these things were treated fully in official reports and I need not further allude to them here."

An International Report

The evidence already collected and the reports presented dealing with the criminology of the present war would fill a library, and notable additions are made daily. It is noteworthy that the findings of the Commissioners, whether French, Belgian or English, agree in all important conclusions. An International Commission consisting of Sir Mackenzie Chalmers, K.C.B., formerly Under-Secretary for the British Home Department (president); Monsieur E. De Cartier de Marchienne, Belgian Minister to China; Monsieur H. Lafontaine, Senator; and Dr. H. Davignon (secretary), has recently presented a report dealing with the atrocities in Belgium—a new record of German "frightfulners"—of arson, pillage, murder.

It is too long to reprint here, but new proof—if that is necessary—is furnished to the effect that the German army of invasion carried out a system of intimidation, of reprisals, and of devastation against a disarmed and inoffensive population on Belgian soil, without regard to any military or strategical objects, and among towns and villages already evacuated by their opponents. This system is brought to view by three classes of acts which are offences alike against International Law and against Military Law.

1. The barbarous device of compelling bodies of civilians, old and young, male and female, to march in front of German troops in order to shield them from the fire of the Allies.

2. The imprisonment, either under the title of "hostages," or on other pretexts, of individuals, families, or groups of people, who were arrested at hazard and for no good reason, shut up without air, without sanitary precautions and without food in churches, barns, and stables, and carried off to Germany, where they were kept under conditions which made hygiene and decency impossible.

3. Wholesale murders of civilians and the sack and burning of dwelling houses; concerning these incidents the light of evidence grows daily stronger.

When Long Breaths Hurt Your Side
Rub Soreness Away With "Nerviline"

PROMPT ACTION OFTEN PREVENTS PLEURISY OR PNEUMONIA.

Do long breaths hurt you? Try it, and see. If you notice a wheeze or a catch in your side, then be sure trouble exists.

Proper action consists in a vigorous rubbing of the back, chest and sore side with "Nerviline." This wonderful liniment sinks into the tissues where the pain is seated—gives instant relief. That catch disappears, all sense of soreness goes, and you then know that Nerviline has probably saved you from pleurisy.

Just try Nerviline for chest tightness, coughs, aches and soreness—it's a wonderful liniment, and when kept in the home saves the family from lots of ills and suffering. A large bottle on hand makes the doctor's bill mighty small and can be depended on as a reliable and mighty prompt cure for rheumatism, scatica, lumbago, pleurisy, stiff neck, sore muscles, and enlarged joints.

Get the large 50c family size bottle; it is far more economical than the 25c trial size. Sold by dealers everywhere or direct from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

The Answer
To Your Clothes Question!

YOU are doubtless reading, these days, many advertisements concerning Clothes—big type and small type!

YOU have been appealed to in plain figures and plied with "wonderful reductions" which you may have discovered exist mostly on paper!

YOU have been bored with fabric, fashion, and fit, and served with dissertations on Style!

YOU have seen argument exhausted—exaggeration run rife and good horse sense depleted!

BUT!

Don't Forget When All Is Said That It's The Clothes That Count!

This being the case, allow us modestly to remark that our Spring Suits and Top Coats at the moderate prices we have mentioned below are the best of Clothes, the best of Values and they should be the Clothes for you!

TAKEN CARE OF

Since Saturday two arrests were made and three tramps were provided with shelter.

CALL FOR POLICE

The police on Saturday evening answered two calls, but no arrests were made. In both cases the trouble was of a trifling nature.

CITY COUNCIL

The City Council will meet in regular session this evening. There are some matters of more or less importance to be transacted.

NEGLECTED TO DELIVER

Two residents of the city reported to the police on Saturday that they had purchased a bag of potatoes on the market and they were not delivered. In one case the money was returned, but in the other neither money or potatoes are forthcoming.

NOT STOLEN, BUT LOST

On Saturday a lady reported to the poilce that she had been relieved of a purse which contained a goodly sum of money. It was subsequently ascertained that the purse was dropped upon the market and it was found by a party who returned it to the owner. The pocket book contained upwards of $60.

Pleasing Recital At High School

Pupils of Mrs. MacColl do Credit to Themselves and Instructor

At the High School, on Saturday evening, a large audience was gathered in the auditorium to hear the musical recital given by Mrs. MacColl's pupils, assisted by Miss Bonisteel. The young musicians followed the order of the programme, without announcement, and as encores had been forbidden, confusion was absent.

Mrs. MacColl is to be complimented on the success that has attended her teaching, both on the piano and violin. Miss Bonisteel also deserves credit for largely lending to the evening's enjoyment and entertainment.

CALIFORNIA 1915

The above is the title of a very handsome publication just issued by the Grand Trunk System, giving information regarding the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego, and the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco. The publication is printed on heavy enamelled paper, is profusely illustrated with views of both Expositions, scenes along the Grand Trunk Railway System and Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and vistas of interesting sights on the Transcontinental Lines west of Chicago. A comprehensive and intelligent map is also inserted, which gives a good idea of the new route to California, via the Grand Trunk Pacific to Prince Rupert, thence through the "Norway of Canada" to Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle thence to California by Steamship or rail. The descriptive matter is concise and well written and deals with the several attractive routes that are offered. The Grand Trunk System, with 10,000 miles of line, offers, through its varied services and choice of routes, incomparable advantages to the California visitor in 1914. Many of the fares between the east and California, which are included in this publication, are the same via Prince Rupert as via Puget Sound, while a small additional charge is made on the lowest fare excursions via that route, and includes charge for meals and berths on steamships between Prince Rupert and Vancouver and Seattle.

A free copy of the booklet may be had by dropping a postal card to Mr. H. C. Thompson, City Passenger & Ticket Agent, Belleville.

Letter From Across the Seas

WORDS OF COMMENDATION

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Harris, who reside on Catherine street, were naturally much pleased to receive the following communication, which speakes for itself:—

50 Long Street,
Devizes, Wilts, Eng.

Dear Mrs. Harris,—

I expect you will wonder who it is that is writing to you. I am writing on behalf of your son Lionel. He had been billeted on me here in Devizes for the last five weeks, but has now gone to France. He had his photograph taken just before he went away and he asked me to forward one to you as they were not done before he went. The other two young fellows were here with him. I am pleased to tell you he was in the best of health and very happy when he went away. I can tell you I am more than sorry to lose all three of them for they were such nice boys.

Now, dear Mrs. Harris, I will draw to a close, trusting you will receive this safely and that God will spare your son so he will be brought safely back again to you. Believe me,

Yours very sincerely,
(MRS.) A. LEW.

From J. McDonald

From Gunner Harris

Gunner Lionel Harris, who left here with the 34th Battery, writes as follows from the front to his mother, Mrs. E. B. Harris:—

France, Feb. 17, 1915.

Dear Mother,—

We are in France now on the first reserve. Everything is well. I feel fine; do not expect to move for at least a month. Bill Black and Abbie Harris are in the Depot Battery. It is quite cold and wet here but we do not mind it very much. I have seen where there have been two or three battles. There are a lot of graves and trenches here where we are. I think it will be warm here before we go to the trenches. We can hear the firing every day and all day long of the French and English guns. It is a continuous roar from all parts. You will be receiving a photo of myself and two other boys. They are Bill Patterson and Jack Knox; both are in the same battery. We are in billets yet in France. It is quite hard to make them understand what you want. They are nice people just the same. Hope to hear from you soon. My address is: "Gunner L. G. Harris, 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, C. F. A., 1st Canadian Contingent, British Expeditionary Force, France.

With love to all.
LIONEL.

FROM J. MACDONALD

Mr. Richard Arnott, Belleville, received the following letter from Driver James McDonald, who left with the 34th Battery of Belleville. He writes as follows:—

France, Feb. 23, 1915.

Hello Dick,—

Just received your letter today—also several others. We are having a great old time now—I guess that's about all I can say, as I cannot tell you where we are or what we are doing, so you will have to be contented with that. How is everything in Belleville? Really, you cannot tell me too much about the dear old town. I still have the same team as I had at the Agricultural Park in Belleville. They are looking fine. This is a great country here, only for the mud. Well, Dick, the boys have a camp fire going at present and they are singing all the latest songs. They are having a great old time. It reminds me of the times we used to have; but don't worry, Dick, we will have those times again. Well, Dick, I will have to close now. Love to all the family and remember me to all the boys. I remain.

Your friend,
(C40161) JIM.

Spring's present sincerity may not be doubted, but its constancy must be proved.

Thoughts of War Depressing Subject

Dr. Alfred H. Tickell of Nevada City, Cal., Suggests the Avoidence of Its Frequent Meditation

In a letter to his brothers in this city, Dr. Alfred H. Tickell, of Nevada City, California, among other items of interest, writes as follows:

The war is intensely absorbing, yet but one ought not to dwell on it too much, as constant thought on so depressing a subject is injurious to the mental statis and content.

The Allies are going to win, and we will be content with that, and also feel that the war was a world necessity.

Russia had to have a chance. The Turks had to leave Europe. Militarism has to be a back number. Germany has to be Democratic. The people have to have liberty over all the world. This war will do much to settle such things. Great Britain during all the modern history of Europe has always found it necessary to step in and help the under dog, in order to preserve the balance of power. Fortunately the nation has the material and great men in control, to meet conditions when they came: Asquith, Kitchener, George, Churchill, all top-notchers.

It will stir up the scum of the country to attempt greater ideals, and lift the people to a higher plane.

The war was necessary; let us all go along cheerfully and do our little parts with a smile and good courage.

Sunday Concert

The Opera House was again crowded on Sunday evening for the weekly sacred concert given by the 15th Regiment Band. The band, under Bandmaster Hinchey, was assisted by Mr. W. Ralls, the noted singer, and Miss Edna Wallace, accompanist. Every selection was thoroughly enjoyed, and a filled house is guaranteed as long as that quality of music is heard.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

GOLDEN WEDDING

On the 20th day of March, in the year 1865, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Fairfield of this city, were united in marriage. On Saturday they commemorated their golden wedding, and the occasion was fittingly observed. From 4 to 6 p.m. many friends called upon the couple at their home on Coleman street and offered congratulations. Later in the day a family reunion was held, which proved to me a most enjoyable affair. Mr. and Mrs. Fairfield were the recipients of many gifts, appropriate to the occasion.

GUILTY OF VAGRANCY

Beatrice Godfrey and Nellie Bradley of this city, were last night taken in charge of by the police, and the charges preferred against them were vagrancy, and being common street walkers. They pleaded not guilty, when brought before the Magistrate today, but the evidence was such they were convicted. The Magistrate remanded them to jail for a week to consider what sentence he would impose upon them.

Two German Spies Held at Port Arthur

Had Revolvers, Loaded Fuses and Specially Prepared Time-Tables

PORT ARTHUR, March 20.—Carl Schmidt and Gustoff Stephens are in jail here to-day, held on suspicion of being German spies. They were asleep in their berths when the police took them in charge. In their possession, when arrested, were found revolvers, loaded fuses and typewritten tables regarding train movements.

Suspicion regarding these men was aroused by their actions at different points along the railway. They are reported to have looked over the railway works at Sudbury and other intermediate points with much more than casual interest; and at Nipigon they inspected with great minuteness, the C.P.R. bridge, which was constructed after many difficulties, in finding a foundation, had been overcome. It was their procedure at this point which caused information regarding them to be sent to the Port Arthur police.

Stories, unsatisfactory to the police, to account for their stop-over at Nipigon, were told by them. They stated that there was too much noise on the train. Their detention by the Port Arthur police is on the formal charge of carrying loaded revolvers and they will be held until inquiries are made. Their tickets were purchased at Windsor, and show that they spent two days at Toronto and some hours at Sudbury. They have plenty of money. It is believed that they crossed from the United States at Detroit.

MISTAKEN FOR A MAN

"There is a man in that cell and I don't care to go into it."

Frances Patterson, a stranger in Kingston, who was given protection at the police station on Wednesday night caused some amusement, when she made the above remark.

Mabel Joyce, the "cow-girl," was in one of the cells, and, thinking that it would be better to have the women together, the two were given the one "room," but when the elder woman noticed the other with the wild west attire, she backed away, stating that she not want to be put into a cell with a man. The constable in charge smiled, but the alleged man spoke, and the two were soon engaged in conversation, and in a few minutes one would have thought that they had known each other for years—Kingston Whig.

War Consuming Wool Of Billion Sheep Per Year

Only 603,957,000 in the World

Because of This, Prediction is Made That Everyone Will be Forced to Wear Cotton.

The following article from the "Chicago Apparel Gazette" sets forth plainly the condition of the wool markets of the world, showing the quantity available and the excessive demand brought about by the requirements of 10,000,000 men on the firing line whose uniforms have to be replenished every four weeks :—

"The following are quotations from a very interesting and significant statement on the situation issued by Renstorf, Lyon & Co., cotton brokers, New York City: "At the most conservative calculation the military operations in Europe are consuming wool at an annual rate equivalent to the product of one billion sheep per year. According to the most authoritative estimates which we have been able to obtain there are approximately 603,954,000 sheep in the world. The most recent figures make the distribution of sheep as follows:—

North America . . .	67,653,443
South America . . .	112,782,018
Europe	164,888,831
Asia	110,058,874
Africa	51,357,381
Oceania (including Australia . . .	107,217,140
	603,957,717

"The world's production of wool available for commerce which of course does not include the home consumption of ? ?? *shdlu countries, is placed at 2,880,889,000 pounds (unscoured). In all the destruction of the present war nothing approaches the waste in clothing. Most of the 10,000,000 men on the firing line are peasants who ordinarily get a suit of clothes once in four or five years. Many of them make an overcoat last from ten to fifteen years.

"Reliable estimates made by members of the British and French war supply agencies, place the life of a uniform at four or five weeks, and mufflers, four or five weeks, underwear less than a month; socks less than two weeks; and overcoats not more than five weeks.

"Under the new rule put in force bby the British Army Medical Corps every soldier on the firing line is given a complete new clothing outfit every four weeks. The old clothing is then burned as a precaution against disease.

"The average uniform as demanded in specifications and completed orders from this country which have sent to Europe contains 6½ pounds of fine clean wool, while the overcoat has 10 lbs. of clean wool. Here alone are 16½ pounds of wool which has been scoured and made free of 'nails' (small hairs that drop off when wool is spun into yarn) which represents the outer equipment of one soldier. One pound of unscoured wool contains in some grades less than five ounces of clean wool; and the loss through manufacture results usually in the cloth retaining only in the neighborhood of thirty per cent. of the original unscoured weight.

"On such a basis the overcoat and uniform of one man on the firing line represents on the most conservative calculation 33 lbs. of wool on the back of sheep. For 10,000,000 fighting men and 10,000,000 men in reserve this means 660,000,000 pounds of wool in the grease to supply one overcoat and one uniform for each soldier.

"For 10,000,000 men on the firing line alone at the average rate of renewal figured on, it would require the product of nearly one Billion sheep per year for just one overcoat and uniform per month, and with no allowance for socks, sweaters, underwear or mufflers, and without making any provision whatever for the soldier held in reserve.

"As the war progresses there will ndoubtedly have to be substituted larger and larger amounts of cotton for wool in uniforms. The governments of belligerent nations are willing to make almost any sacrifice to obtain wool, and they are now paying prices which no one else can pay. The price of wool is advancing by leaps and bounds. Shoddies and rags in which reclaimable wool is found are at the highest level in many years.

"The buying of wool for the use of contractors for army uniforms has been on such a tremendous scale, and prices have gone so high, that it has been impossible for more than a few woollen manufacturers in America to lay up a supply for the future. Imports of wool into this country normally reach about 200,000,000 pounds of unscoured wool per year. They are now running at the rate of less than one-tenth of that, while the Domestic production of wool which is normally about 325,000,000 pounds of fleece wool per year, has fallen below that figure owing to the slaughter of sheep for meat.

"The European nations for at least seven months of the year will insist on obtaining woollen garments for their soldiers for hygienic reasons. Eventually more cotton will have to be used, but this will be because the supply of wool has become practically exhausted."

Dressmaking Prices

In order that we may have a large number of ladies try our new Dressmaker, we are offering remarkably low prices in this department.

For Dresses we will charge from $10 to $15; and for Cloth Suits, we will charge from $12 to $15 for the making.

These garments will receive the personal attention of Miss Cook and will be turned out in the best style and workmanship.

We may say that these prices are about one half what is charged for the same class of work in larger cities. We will be pleased to show you the new materials and give estimates for garments completed.

You need have no question about Miss Cook's ability to please you. Her testimonials from former patrons and the garments she has already completed are most satisfactory. In addition to this, you have our personal guarantee.

She has a first class staff in her workroom and will be glad to have you give her a trial order.

Bloody Threat Only a Bluff

Had Tea With Smyrna Foreigners and Provided Music During Bombardment

LONDON, March 20.—The text of an aged proclamation issued at Smyrna by Bahmy Bey, the Turkish Vali, (Governor), threatening to massacre the foreign residents of the city, is given by The Daily Telegraph's Athens correspondent as follows:

By the grace of the Almighty, the enemy's attacks will cost dearly. A defense equal to that made by the forts, and more terrible, will be organized against the enemy within the town.

The town will be painted from end to end with the blood of the enemy, who will see his attempts brought to nought. The transformation of the town into a battlefield will be worthy the grandeur of Ottoman history.

The proclamation was not taken seriously by the foreign residents, the corespondents adds. Although the English residents were put under semi-surveillance at the clubhouse, their relations with the Turks were friendly, and the Governor actually took tea at the clubhouse and provided a musical entertainment for the English while the firing was in progress.

Waiting For the Eitel Friedrich

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., March 20.—Machinists of her crew are working day and night on the German auxiliary cruiser, Prinz Eitel Friedrich, but so far Commander Thierichsens has made no formal reply to Collector Hamilton's repeated requests for a definite statement he wants to put his ship in condition for sea.

Meanwhile, British cruisers continue to lie off the Virginia Capes in wait for the German raider, and the belief grows that the Prinz Eitel eventually will be interned.

No arrangements had yet been made to-day for disposing of the 76 undesirable immigrants which the Prinz Eitel took from the sunken French liner Floride.

OUR WARRANT FOR SOLICITING SUPPORT FROM OUR CITIZENS

In soliciting contributions to the Belleville Patriotic Fund the committee are anxious that the request be supported by the reasons for so acting. Occasionally we tell one another why we should contribute and let it go at that. But there is and are more than one reason. To put these before the people we re-print here ten statements. Any one is sufficient to convince. Taken altogether they should be irresistable.

1—I owe to my country, and to the Empire of which we are a part, either to fight myself or to help make it possible for others to fight in this supreme struggle.

2—As a Canadian I have enjoyed the privileges and protection of British Citizenship and have never yet been called upon to contribute to or in defence of the Empire.

3—I have not, as yet, paid any war tax. My Mother Country has borne the burden of my protection and alone.

4—In this hour of trial I desire Great Britain to realize that every Canadian is upholding and supporting her cause.

5—The war in which we are engaged is a righteous cause, a struggle for truth, liberty and for the sacredness of treaties and the given word.

6—I cannot go myself, but I can help to make it possible for others to go by guaranteeing that their families will be provided for in their absence.

7—Every soldier who has gone from Canada is as truly my representative as he who has gone or will go from Belleville.

8—The object of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is to make provision for all families of all soldiers going from Canada to the war.

9—I know I am subscribing to a fund which will assist the family whose bread-winner has answered his country's call. Those who have gone to the front are making greater sacrifices than anything I can do at home.

10—An unparalleled crisis has arisen in the world's history which calls for supreme sacrifice on my part. I should do my duty. I should fight or pay.

—THE PATRIOTIC FUND COMMITTEE.

HELP BOOST GIVINGS TO PATRIOTIC FUND

Interesting Comment on the Progress of the Good Work--Join With us in Stirring all for a Grand Effort

When we pay to the Patriotic Fund we are really paying for the defense of our country. While the real strife is across the ocean the responsibility is just as close to us as if the conflict was at our doors. We are resisting German aggression. Don't disguise from yourself what the conflict really means. What we pay now, and as a freewill offering is only a flea bite to what we should have to raise if Germany got the upper hand. Here is the illustrtaion as dropped in conversation by a thoughtful man. In Canada we are subjects of the Crown. Our holdings of properties, other than buildings came from the Crown. It was for the Crown to dispense. Change the Crown and we find the dispenser changed. He, the new authority, can, and will refuse to recognize the acts of the old Crown. What he takes is his. We have to begin all over again and get our holdings from the new Crown, in this case Germany. Think what it would cost. To have to pay in sound dollars all over again for our homes, our lands, our most intimate possessions. That would be what we have all heard about so long, as being "ground under the iron heel of tyranny". This supposition is no figment, believe us. Germany has the will. It is only England that prevents the deed. So as Britishers, as the sons of Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen it behooves us to rally and help those who have gone to fight our battles. Just think this over and try to realize what it means. Then give to the Patriotic Fund as you never thought of giving. Surprise yourself and get into the status of a man.

A man called in at the committee room, Saturday night, and asked why a good subscription list circulated would not save all the bother and fuss. He is wholly wrong. And we will tell you why. In the first place it is no bother. It is a great, big, wholesome, helpful patriotic work. Every man in the effort enjoys it. Ask him, after the campaign is over and he will tell you he has had the time of his life. Felt he was doing something for a mighty good cause.

A subscription list starts off just as big as the man who signs it for the first time. If he is a $5.50 man all these who sign after will be $5.50, too. It's human nature. "What are they giving", he asks, and takes a look. Same as if it was a mere effort to get uniforms for the Longshot Baseball Boys' Club. If subscription lists could be clasified, and the men to whom the lists were to be present could be herded and classified, and the collectors, classified, you might get a classified roll of subscription amounts, varying in sums and quantities. The old English rule that "a man likes to be tried by a jury of his peers" works out in a court of law [illegible] falls to the ground in a Patriotic Fund effort. Men cannot give equally and hope to roll up the $30,000 that Belleville intends to roll. Not a bit of it. There will be surprises. Bound to be. If there isn't then you can take our word for it there will not be the fund. And, brethren, the most surprised will be the men who are to be surprised into giving good substantial amounts. After they have done it they will feel that they have done themselves proud. Come down street on Saturday morning, after the returns are in, and the men who will carry their heads the highest will be those who have been surprised into giving what they never thought they would give. A sense of a personal duty well done is a mighty good provoker of self-respect. Get to the big meeting on Tuesday night and hear what the speakers have to say. The audience that throngs the the building will go in thinking and will come out thoughtful. The conviction will be riven home that something has to be done and that it is up to Belleville to do it.

Tell a thing often enough and presently people will begin to believe. The needs of the Fund will be projected before the eyes of the people by the picture shows. The shows have agreed to run through each evening pithy, short sentences, written on slides. You all remember how mother used to read a few verses out of the Book of Proverbs. We were, it being a summer day, anxious to go swimmin'. Did not pay so much attention as we should have done. But the moral sayings stuck, just the same. So the picture show slide sayings will keep before those who look the aims and appeal of the Fund. Who can tell. Some dollars may come our way as a result.

Somewhere about the city is a man, say three or four men who know fairly intimately the position and circumstances of others, living here, but not actively associated in our civic and social life so to speak, who will come forward and get together the laundrymen, the men of the Italian colony, those of the Jewish belief. On such an occasion, and in such a movement these men often are left to one side. They are willing to do a real service but hesitate to intrude. Picture yourself as living in Hongkong and you will understand. These citizens will give, and liberally, too. It's all a matter of approach. It has been amply proven in other campaigns. At Peterborough the men of the laundries handed in $175.00 as a contribution. Together the men of Israel boosted the fund with nearly $500.00. Gave in a body and as an unit. Try it on here. Who will volunteer to do the Patriotic Fund this service? If you can suggest some one tell the committee. Then we'll send out a scout.

When any public movement is started one of the first questions asked is "who is running this thing?" A quite natural enquiry. Often as not subsequent success depends most vitally on the personnel of the committee, of the men, behind the proposition. This is just as true as preaching, and we take that as read. So the man in the shop, in the store, or one whose duties from day to day takes him away from among the men on the street, asks and wants to know that he may form an estimate of the worthiness of the matter, gauging his impressions from the roster of the men behind the guns. Saturday night and for a few hours afterwards there were callers at the committee room. Just an encouraging look in to see how the bricks were being laid. Here are a few of those interested: Lieut.-Col. Farley, Robert Tannahill, Ex-Mayor J. F. Wills, Stewart Robertson, L. C. Yeomans, J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., Dr. Coughlin, W. D. M. Shorey, Dr. Platt, John Elliott and many others who passed in and out. All were most hopeful. They will carry around an extension of that hope that presently will become a reality when Belleville rolls up its sleeves and tackles the Fund on Thursday. Come around Wednesday night when the roll is called. If not in it you will wish you were. Every man who is a dead game sport hates to be left out of a fishing party. The way to get in is to qualify.

In this big push for a significantly large Patriotic Fund one thing must not be lost sight of, and that is what Belleville has done already. Do not run away with the idea that Belleville has been marking time. Nothing of the kind. It has done everything so far that has been asked, and that is considerable. But the city has not been entreated to extend itself, to get the last ounce of push, pull and vitality into her giving. Even now we are not at our last analysis Belgium is. But while we are not anything like being near the border line of our ability to give, we want to make a record, that the name of the city will stick right out projected across the landscape as one of the Honor Roll of Patriotic Fund cities. Isn't that right? Then that it may stand out, be up and doing. The greatest help to the Fund will come from the earnest, timely suggestion made by one man to another, and all together, that the Fund be supported well and royally. The self-made, self-enthused canvasser who works from the convictions of his heart and head, beats any other mode of spoken conviction. It is not what he says but the way he says it. Each man can dot a lot to ensure success. Another who expresses doubt, throws out the innuedo that unseats the idea of another that giving is a good thing, is a pessimist that deserves to be striven with. If you cannot help, goodness sake don't knock. A few knocks have been heard, but so far no positive whacks. It is a matter of proportion, so far as opposition is concerned.

Don't forget the big meeting tonight. Not on your life. The house should be so crammed that people's feet will stick out of the windows. Seating room should be crowded and standing room a premium. All that you have heard and have not heard will be told again. Full and earnest explanation of the aims and objects of the Fund, told by men who have been identified with the movement since the inception. The soldiers in barracks will parade from the barracks to the hotel and escort the speakers to the Opera House. The platform will be filled with citizens identified with the movement. Taken altogether it will be a good rousing time. Come along.

Just here we will immortalize the several team captains by inscribing their names on the record:

Team No. 1—L. P. Hughes.
Team No. 2—Wm. McGie.
Team No. 3—Hope McGinnis.
Team No. 4—Wm. Carnew.
Team No. 5—E. F. Dickens.
Team No. 6—F. E. O'Flynn.
Team No. 7—A. A. Allen.
Team No. 8—W. D. M. Shorey.
Available, (as a reserve), C. H. Scott, J. G. Moffatt.

No great movement reached a glorious finish without hard work on the part of those behind the proposition. No national movement marked its changes and progress on its people except through tribulation. Always and ever. So in honor of sentiment, and in recognition of the real work that is to be done for the Patriotic Fund the Publicity Department breaks into verse, which it deliberatly filches from some unknown poet. Just read and remember:—

"Never give up; 'tis the secret of glory.
Nothing so wise can philosophy teach.
Think of the names that are written in story—
"Never give up" is the lesson they teach.
How have men 'complished immortal achievements?
How have they moulded the world to their will?
'Twas amidst dangers, and woes and bereavements.
"Never give up" was their principle still.

French Prince Killed at Front

PARIS, March 22.—Prince Ernest d'Arenberg, a lieutenant in the 32nd Regiment of French Infantry, has been killed on the field of battle. He was the tenth representative of the aristocracy of France who have lost their lives recently under the colors of their country. Prince Ernest was born in Paris in 1886. He was the son of Prince Auguste, head of the Arenberg family.

G. T. P. STILL REFUSES TO TAKE OVER N. T. R.

OTTAWA, March 22.—With the National Transcontinental Railway operated temporarily by the Government, this summer will see a notable increase in operated mileage in Canada. Sir William Mackenzie who has been in Ottawa for several days, anounced that work on the Canadian Northern would proceed with the arrival of milder weather, the British Columbia lines being close to completion and the line from Toronto to Winnipeg ready for traffic. On the sections where the laying of steel has been completed, the company would proceed with the necessary ballasting. Sir William spoke appreciatively of the high standard of construction which the Canadian Northern would be able to show when these operations were concluded.

The Transcontinental situation has not changed since the announcement that the G.T.P. were objecting to the fulfilment of their contract to operate and that the Government would operate the line until negotiations with the company ended. The immensely increased cost of the line over the estimate given to the country by the Laurier Government at the time the contract with the Grand Trunk was being forced through Parliament has made the question of operation one of exceeding difficulty. At the same time the contract entered into by the Laurier Government with the company affords no security to the country in the event of the company definitely refusing to operate. The estimate of interest on cost for rental purposes in 1923, when the period of free operation by the company would terminate, was given in the last railway bugeted at between six and seven lions.

Italy Prepared To Enter Fray

Mobilization of Troops Will be Carried Out With Creat Secrecy

ROME, March 23.—(Special.)—The King has signed the decree promulgating the national defence law, which became operative at once. The Government is empowered by the new law to prohibit the publication of news regarding the strength of the army, war preparations and military defences of the country. This prohibition will be strictly enforced, and the concentration of troops, the calling out of additional reserves and eventually the mobilization will be kept a secret.

Parliament has adjourned until the middle of May, and the Government will be free to attend to the final preparations precluding intervention.

London, March 23.—The Italian Embassy at London had no confirmation last night of the report that freight traffic between Italy and Germany by way of Switzerland had stopped, nor was they any confirmation of the reported massing of Austrian and German troops along the Austrian littoral, or the assembling of artillery at Trieste.

U. S. PROTEST WILL BE A VERY MILD ONE

WASHINGTON, March 22.—The United States protest against the Anglo-French blockade of European waters is slowly taking form. At tomorrow's cabinet meeting it is expected to be in shape so that the main points will be indicated.

Meanwhile it is already certain that the original plan of a blanket protest, couched in strong terms, has been abandoned. Promises made informally to Ambassador Page at London that the Allies fully intend to limit the zone of action has solved one of the main points. This government will be satisfied with a radius of 1,000 miles from the coast lines, but the Allies do not want to assume responsibility even for that distance, according to the best word obtainable here.

GARRISON OF PRZEMYSL SURRENDERS TO RUSSIANS

Weakened by Privations, Defenders Yield to The Inevitable—Enthusiastic Demonstrations in Streets of Russian Capital—Honors for Victorious Generals

LONDON, March 23.—(Special.)—Przemysl has fallen. Fifty thousand of the enemy, mainly Austrians, piled their arms without firing a shot, the fortress having surrendered early this morning. The last effort of the exhausted garrison to break through was made on Thursday night, and met with a disastrous re pulse. Famished by the pangs of hunger, weakened with disease, and their ranks thinned by repeated defeats at the hands of a superior and tireless foe, the heroic garrison cut off from its main army, at length yielded to fate. Without food, the last available horses slaughtered to satisfy the pangs of hunger, the defenders of this Galician fortress saved their honor while surrendering their swords. The defence of Przemysl has won the admiration of friend and foe alike. The news of its fall led to an enthusiastic demonstration in the streets of Petrograd.

The official statement announcing the fall of Prezemysl was as follows:

"The fortress of Przemysl has surrendered to our troops. At the headquarters of the Commander-in-chief a Te Deum of thanksgiving was celebrated in the presence of Emperor Nicholas, Grand Duke Nicholas, the Commanderin-chief of the Russian Commander-in-chief of the Russian Staff."

The mention in the Russian official statement of the decoration of General Selwanoff as Commander of the army besieging Przemysl, has created considerable surprise in London, as it was understood that the Bulgarian General Radko Dimitrieff was in command. Whether he was transferred or removed is not known.

General Seliwanoff commanded the Russian forces at Vlavidostok during the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-1905.

The London papers print eulogies and the picture of General Dimitrieff as "the hero of Przemysl."

"This is the turning point of the war," said a high official of the British War Office this afternoon in commenting upon the capture of Przemysl by the Russians."

The London newspapers assert that the fall of the fortress marks the most important capture of the war, not excepting Antwerp, in that it not only releases considerable Russian forces which can be thrown into the fluctuating struggle in the Carpathians, but opens the doors to Cracow and the plains of Hungary.

It is argued, moreover, that the moral effect of the surrender will be tremendous, the theory of the allies being that it will stimulate feeling in their favor, both in Roumania and Bulgaria, just as the operations in the Dardanelles are causing an agitation in Greece and Italy.

Przemysl fell with honor, the British press conceded, for it withstood the onslaughts longer than any place during the war, the investment having begun something more than six months ago. The duration of the siege compared with the length of time it took the Germans to capture such strongholds as Liege, Namur and Antwerp, was due to two causes, one being the desire of the Russians to keep the loss of life among the besieging army at a minimum, the other to the lack of great guns, which the Germans had in Belgium.

The investment was not a close one, the garrison having had up until recently a radius of about twelve miles in which to move about.

Petrograd, March 23.—The hoisting of the white flag over Przemysl, which was said to be on the point of surrender on a number of occasions, caused little surprise here.

The Russian War Office reports that nine Austrian Generals were taken, more than 300 officers and 50,000 men.

"WE WANT PEACE AND BREAD."

Paris, March 22.—A despatch to The Temps from Copenhagen says that a crowd of 3,000 consisting mostly of women of the poorer classes, gathered in front of the Reichstag in Berlin last Saturday and shouted to the Deputies, who gathered at the windows: "We want peace and bread."

The Berlin press, according to this despatch, was ordered to make no reference to this demonstration.

NIGHT ATTACK BY FRENCH REPULSED

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 23.—An official report says two night attacks by the French near Careney were repulsed, as were also attempts at Combres, Apremont, Flirey, Beausejour and Badonviller. Enemy aviators dropped bombs on Ostend, killing several Belgians. One French aviator was shot down near Verdun and another captured near Friedburg. The Germans are pursuing the Russians who were driven from Nemel. They have also occupied the Russian town of Krottingen and freed more than three thousand German civilian prisoners. Russian attacks in Poland were repulsed.

TO EVACUATE ANTWERP ABOUT MAY FIRST

LONDON, March 23.—A Daily Express from Amsterdam says the Germans will evacuate Antwerp on May 1st. They will entrench directly from the Yser to the Meuse and make their final stand.

GERMAN AVIATOR DROPS BOMBS

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 23.—This afternoon's official statement says the enemy yesterday bombarded Rheims. A German aviator dropped bombs on the town and claimed three victims among the civilians. In the Champagne district we made slight progress to the east of Hill 196. In the Argonne region near Bagatelle the enemy twice delivered a violent counter attack to recapture ground which they lost on Sunday. Both counter attacks were completely repulsed.

SHIP A DAY IS GERMAN RECORD

Concord is 32nd Vessel Destroyed Since Beginning of "Blockade"

LONDON, March 23.—(Special.)—The British steamer Concord, of 1,825 tons, was torpedoed by a German submarine in the English Channel yesterday. The crew of 26 men were rescued by a patrol boat and landed at Dover. The vessel is reported to be still afloat.

This is the thirty-second British vessel to have been destroyed by the Germans since the declaration of their "blockade" on Feb 18, making an average of almost a ship a day.

NORTH SEA SHIPPING ATTACKED BY AIR

Germans Disregard Neutral Flags and Even Drop Bombs on Vessels of International Relief Commission—No One Injured

ROTTERDAM, March 23—Special—The week-end has seen the commencement of a general aeroplane attack by the Germans on all shipping in the North Sea. The operating aviators have ignored all the neutral flags, even that of the International Relief Commission, or, following instructions from the German Admiralty chiefs have deliberately attacked them. All yesterday an aeroplane hovered round the vicinity of the North Hinder lightship, attacking every vessel that came along, including neutrals, but, so far as is known, succeeding in damaging none.

The outrageous attack on the relief ship Elfland of London while flying the flag of the International Commission for the relief of the Belgians was in the most remarkable incident of the day yet reported. The Elfland, which was carrying a cargo of food for the Commisison, arrived at Maasluis last night, and the captain stated that on Sunday, four miles northwest of the Hinder lightship, the vessel was attacked by an aeroplane. A Taube descended till it was only about a thousand feet above the ship and dropped five bombs. Fragments struck the deck, but no damage was done and no one was hurt. It was only by zigzag manoeuvring that the vessel escaped the aircraft, disappearing as Dutch torpedo destroyers came into sight.

SIR JOHN FRENCH SAYS EVERYBODY NEEDS AMMUNITION

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 23.—A Havas Agency despatch from British headquarters represents Sir John French as saying: "Everybody needs ammunition, but the Germans need it more than we do. I have had a feeling for some time that they were sparing their shells.

A shortage of the nitrates necessary for making explosives is making itself felt in Germany; neither is the morale of their troops the same. One gets from them an impression of fatigue and lassitude. Economic difficulties in the interior of Germany are daily becoming more serious. They are still far from famine but are hampered in obtaining their food supply, and that is a great deal. I do not believe it will be a long war. I and all those here are convinced that a decisive and definite victory awaits us at the end of all these hard months of war."

THE CITY COUNCIL GRANTS $5,000 TO PATRIOTIC FUND

Large Delegation of Citizens Urged Liberal Grant—Curfew Bell By-law Will be Introduced—Carter's Petition For Change in By-Law Much Discussion over Publishing Assessment

Last night's session of the City Council was without doubt the busiest one that that body has had thus far this year, and in consequence considerable business was transacted. During the session a large and influential delegation of citizens who are members of the Patriotic Fund campaign which is being launched, waited upon the members of the Council and strongly urged for a substantial grant towards the fund. All the speakers were unanimous in their opinion that an extra mill should be added to the taxation in order to provide the means. The Council later decided to make a grant of $5,000. The carters of the city petitioned that the Carters' Bylaw be amended. As it involves a legal point the matter was referred to the City Solicitor for his opinion. A motion prevailed that the curfew bell be rung at 9 p.m., and a bylaw regulating the same will be presented at the next meeting of the Council. A lengthy and somewhat heated discussion took place over a motion to publish the assessment, as requested by the electors, but the matter was referred back to the Executive Committee for further consideration, and to decide whether the 1914 or 1915 assessment should be published. Some other matters were attended to.

All members were in attendance, namely, Mayor Panter; Aldermen St. Charles, Wallbridge, Woodley, Platt, Smith, Duckworth, Earle, McCurdy and McFee.

After the reading and confirming of the minutes of the last regular meeting and the special meeting, the Council went into committee on reports, communications, etc., Ald. St. Charles in the chair.

The accounts recommended to be paid by the various committees were passed, and the following recommendations disposed of:—

That the sum of $100 be granted to the 15th regiment of this city to aid in the expense of obtaining more recruits for the defence of the Empire.—Passed.

That the gas lights on and south of Dundas street be discontinued.

Mayor Panter thought that it would be in the interest of the gas department if one of the gas lights was left.

Ald. McFee said that one of the lights referred to would only replace one electric light. The electric light costs $10 a year, while the gas light would cost about $50 a year.

Ald. Platt thought that the gas department should in some way be reimbursed.

The recommendation was passed.

CARTERS' PETITION.

A deputation from the Carters of the city was on motion heard.

Mr. Hogan said the carters asked that the Carters' License Bylaw be amended.

The petition as presented to the Council was then read, being as follows:—

"We the undersigned carters of the city of Belleville hereby petition your Council to recommend to the Board of Police Commissioners the advisability of amending the Carters' Bylaw with the following restrictions:

"That no license for carting purposes be granted to hackmen and liverymen.

That no license for drawing passengers be granted to carters.

If granted this protection we would be willing to pay a higher license fee.

"Signed by—M. J. Hogan, J. Lott, H. Walsh, P. Tripp, J. Hanna, H. Thrasher, E. W. Frederick, E. T. Bunnett, J. Thompson, O. O'Brien, F. Smith, Brusseau, W. H. Badgley, D. Harrigan, J. Callaghan, Hugh McCormick."

Mr. J. Callaghan said that he had a grievance in addition to the proposed petition, which was that old taxpayers were turned down in regard to city work, while retired farmers were given work, and some of them had teams at work. He had been turned in city work. This, he did not consider was justice.

Mayor Panter said the granting of a carter's license was by bylaw, and he could not give a definite answer until the City Solicitor had been consulted in the matter. It was a Police Commissioners Bylaw.

Mr. J. Hanna was of the opinion that some of those who had a livery were carting and with more than one team.

The Mayor said this was a legal matter which the City Solicitor would have to interpret. The preference in city work should be given to the old residents who had contributed for years to the upkeep of the city.

His Worship was thanked by the deputation for the information given.

STREET DECORATION.

A request was made from the Orange Society that it be allowed to decorate Front and Bridge streets for the celebration here on July 12th.

On motion of Mayor Panter the request was granted.

An application from the Greenleaf company garage to have the privilege of burying a drum containing gasoline. The pump would be in their building.

This matter was referred to a special committee, namely, Ald. McFee, Woodley and Platt.

On motion the petition of the carters was referred to the City Solicitor.

A petition for a granolithic walk on a portion of Purdy street was referred to the assessor and City Clerk to see if it was properly signed.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

INQUIRIES.

Ald. Smith—Has anything been done re. building a walk on Reid Street.?

City Clerk—It has not been reported upon yet.

Ald. Smith thought the notice of the tax collector that all arrears of taxes will, after April 1st, be placed in the hands of the Bailiff for collection was rather a drastic measure. This had been a hard winter and we should not be too severe on delinquents.

Mayor Panter—We might advise the tax collector what to do, but not instruct him.

Ald. Duckworth—Is the bylaw re. the construction of a sewer in West Belleville ready?

Mr. Evans—The plans have to be submitted to the Government for approval before the bylaw can be passed. Mr. Masson has the foundation on which to draft the bylaw.

Ald. St. Charles asked if the water on the sidewalk on Pinnacle street near the old school could not be drained away.

City Engineer—An effort has been made to get rid of it.

MOTIONS.

Ald. St. Charles moved, seconded by Ald. Earle, that the City Clerk be instructed to notify all property owners on Front and Bridge Streets where the pavement is now laid, that the full amount of their share of the pavement could be paid on or before May 1st, 1915 in full with interest.

Ald. St. Charles said that a number of property owners had spoken to him in reference to paying their share.

The motion was unanimously adopted.

Ald. Smith moved, seconded by Ald. Platt:—

"That the chairman of Printing and Stationery be instructed to have printed at a cost not exceeding $350, 4,000 copies of the assessment of the City of Belleville for 1914 in pamphlet form, and that a copy be mailed to each property owner in the city. That the names of the property owners be arranged in the order in which the properties are located, first, those on one side of each street, and then those on the other. That the assessment on land, buildings, and income be stated separately.

Ald. Earle said the electors had voted upon this matter and had declared emphatically that they desired to have the assessment published.

Ald. Platt—Nothing could be gained by postponing this matter another two weeks.

Mayor Panter—The electors voted on the publishing of the assessment, but no particular year. He thought that this year's assessment should be published.

Ald. Wallbridge asked Ald. Smith why he desired to have the assessment for 1914 published.

Ald. Smith—People have been asking to have the assessment published. The 1914 roll was available and the 1915 roll was not yet completed.

Ald. Woodley spoke in favor of the assessment of 1915 being published rather than the 1914 list.

Ald. Duckworth cited a case in the city where a property was assessed at $2,300, and after it had been sold the assessment dropped to $2,000. He would vote to have the assessment for 1914 published. There was some injustice in the assessment for 1914, he thought, but possibly they had been been remedied this year.

Ald. Wallbridge—If there was an injustice in any assessment last year and it had been remedied this year, then the object of publishing the assessment would be accomplished.

Ald. Platt—It looks to me that there was some reason for the publishing of the 1915 assessment roll, rather than the 1914 roll. Was this to cover up anything?

Mayor Panter—The ballot that was handed to the electors which they voted on simply asked: "Are you in favor of the assessment being published?" It did not state that any particular year's assessment was to be published. He had built three houses and his assessment was $2,000 more than what the houses cost him. Our instructions, he contended, was to publish this year's assessment.

Ald. Wallbridge moved in amendment that the motion be referred back to the Executive Committee for further consideration.

Upon a vote being taken the amendment prevailed, Aldermen Wallbridge, Woodley, McFee, McCurdy and St. Charles voting for it.

PATRIOTIC FUND.

At this stage of the proceedings an influential deputation of citizens waited upon the Council, their object being to secure a grant to the Patriotic Campaign Fund.

Ex-Mayor Wills addressed the Council in reference to the Canadian Patriotic Fund. Over two-thirds of the fund so far collected here had been expended, and in consequence an appeal had to be made for more funds. The delegation present would ask the Council to consider this most important matter. The speaker explained that Hon. H. Corby had given $5,000 and some $6,000 additional, and at least $5,000 of the latter fund had been spent. One of the ways to augment this fund would be a mill on the general rate. The Association would ask the Council to do this, and it would be a nucleus to the whirlwind campaign which is to be inaugurated. He would ask the Council to do this.

Col. Lazier said ex-Mayor Wills had stated the matter fairly. This was a trying time in our history. To raise a sufficient sum the citizens were prepared to do their part and the placing of one mill on the taxes this year, he thought would not be asking too much of the Council.

Mr. Thos. Ritchie thought the local association was doing the right thing in placing this fund in the national fund. We need more money and we can draw on the national fund. The Council by Act of Parliament, can place an extra mill on the taxes of the city and this would mean a goodly sum. There was not a man with a manly heart who would not contribute to this fund, which is for such a worthy cause. Men are going to the front and are losing their lives for the defence of the Empire. He felt confident the Council would be supported by the citizens generally if they made this grant.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn said the delegation felt that the Council would do their duty in this matter. Men will fight with a better heart when they know that those left behind are being well looked after. He had not the slightest doubt that the Council would be supported in their action.

Colonel Ponton said those who give quickly give twice. We are looking to the Council to take action. By giving a substantial grant the honor of Belleville is made greater. It was our duty to do this, and make the fund what it should be. We all feel that we speak the impulse of the city and as the representative of the city the members of the Council will head the honor list of this fund.

Mr. R. Tannahill—If we do not beat the Germans they will beat us. If the Germans were victorious what position would Canada be in? He heartily supported the proposition made to the Council.

Mr. Wm. Carnew made excellent patriotic remarks in reference to the matter. He said this was no time to count our money, but rather to give it for such a worthy cause, and see that that those who are left behind by those who go to the front are well looked after. Dear old Belleville, he was confident, would not be behind in its contribution. Many were giving up their time and money to further the campaign. In referring to the war the speaker said the Germans were a menace. What would it mean to Canada if they were victorious? If money will assist in defeating them it should be given liberally and freely. We have in Belleville the money and the spirit to raise what we are aiming at, and the Council should have no compunction in giving the grant asked for. The citizens would stand behind the Council.

Mr. Rean, who was instrumental in organizing the campaign, spoke and referred to what other city councils had given to the fund. Peterborough gave $10,000; Walkerville $6,000, and other places were doing equally well.

Mayor Panter—The sentiment expressed by the speakers was the sentiment of the members of the Council. A meeting of the Executive will be held at the close to consider the matter.

Ex-Mayor Wills thanked the Council for listening to the delegation. The delegation then withdrew.

On motion the matter of sending a delegation to the Good Roads Convention being held in Toronto this week was referred to a special committee composed of Mayor Panter, Ald. Wallbridge and Ald. McFee, with power to act.

Ald. McFee moved, seconded by Ald. Earle, that the city clock bell be rung at 9.05 every night for the purpose of warning children under age as defined in the statute to be off the street at that hour unless under the supervision of parents or guardian.

The Council then adjourned for a few minutes and the Executive Committee met to consider the grant to the Patriotic Fund.

The committee recommended that that $5,000 be granted to the fund.

The Council reassembled and the recommendation from the Executive Committee was unanimously adopted.

Council adjourned.

TEA MARKET STILL ADVANCING

Nothing definite can be ascertained with regard to a probable advance in package teas in Canada. But it seems to be common sense to suppose that tea men can't go on importing at high and yet higher prices every week without making some changes in their selling schedule to cover. There is nothing to do but follow Mr. Asquith's advice and "Wait and see," meanwhile taking note of the handwriting on the wall—Canadian Grower, March 19th.

FROM FRED KYLE

Dear Mother.—

I have written you several times and have not heard anything from you since I left England. Probably your letters have gone astray. I am well and having perfect health. The climate here is simply great. We are within a few miles of the firing line and I often have to go right up to it. I was up yesterday, and the firing of the artillery would almost make one deaf. We rode through several villages that had been shelled the day before by the Germans, and their artillery fire certainly caused great damage to the houses, public buildings and churches. I am attached now to the Headquarters of the Canadian Contingent and we have communication with all parts of our contingent and part of the English. The weather for the most part is glorious; now snow, and rain probably once or twice a week. I am of the opinion that the war will be over by August or September as the Germans can't hold out much longer. Well, will have to ring off as the Censor only allows one page. Best regards to all.

FRED.

LETTER FROM ABROAD

March 13, 1915.

Dear Aunt Blanch:

Received your letter of Jan. 29th and as I have a few minutes spare time I am answering it. We moved nearer the firing line yesterday and expect to be in action today. So you see I may get that German for Agnes before very long after all. But if I get him too soon he may spoil before I can bring him home. Two Belleville boys were killed a few days ago. Young Pierson, who lived on Bridge Street, was shot while trying to get a helmet from a German he had shot. Craddock, that big chap who worked in the canning factory, was also shot the same day. So you see there is such a thing as death in this war, after all. And when it reaches home you begin to realize that all the casualties are not Germans. All the boys that are with the Second are all O.K. yet. I met Tom Vance yesterday and he was looking fine. He would not talk much about his experiences in the firing line, although he says it was not too rotten up there, taking all in all. I expect that the artillery is better off than the infantry, and if that is right you folks at home have no cause to worry.

My address is: First Canadian Contingent, British Expeditionary Force, Divisional Artillery, First Artillery Brigade, Second Battery, A. Subsection, Gunner J. L. Ross, C40488. We have been ordered to write it in this manner. Well, I shall have to close with best love to all, to yourself, Uncle Walt, and the kiddies.

MILITARY GRAFT CASE IS OPENED IN PARIS

PARIS, March 23.—Special—The case of Francois Descleaux, charged with stealing military supplies, was brought before a court-martial in Paris at noon yesterday. With this man apeared Madame Bechoff, the wife of a German, and one of the best dressmakers of Paris, accused of receiving the goods stolen by Descleaux.

Descleaux was formerly a chief subordinate to Minister Caillaux at the Ministry of Finace. He was arrested in January, charged with having stolen army rations, which later were found in the home of Madame Bechoff. M. Verges and M. Dupuy, charged with aiding in the thefts, also were before the court.

One corner of the courtroom looked like an army storehouse. Huge stacks of supplies, coffee, tents, trophies of war, big shells and helmets, making perhaps a ton of material, had been brought before the court. It all had been recovered by the military authority, and figures as evidence in the case.

BUFFALO MAN SHOT

Got too Near Prohibited Waters Surrounding Bermuda

BUFFALO, N.Y., March 23.—(Special.)—Word was received here yesterday that George B. Montgomery of Buffalo had been shot by a British sentry while he was sailing in the harbor at Hamilton, Bermuda, last Saturday afternoon. One of his legs was so badly hurt that the foot had to be amputated.

With him in the boat at the time were his wife and a negro pilot. The report received here says the boat approached too near the prohibited waters surrounding an island where German prisoners are imprisoned.

Mr. Montgomery is a rich Buffalo business man. He is a brother of H Ernest Montgomery. He had been living two months in Bermuda.

ATTEMPT TO BURGLARIZE SOLDIER'S SUPPLY DEPOT

A Pair of Prowlers Try the Rear Door, One of Whom Receives a Bayonet Prod From the Guard

An attempt to burglarize the Church street supply depot between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock last night, when two individuals tried the back entrance, presumably with a view to getting within. The guard, however, who was alert to his duties, appeared on the spot and challenged the parties, one of whom received a prod from the bayonet. Unable to leave his post of duty, the guard could not follow up the prowlers who succeeded in getting away.

GERMANS FACE A TOUGH JOB TO RETAKE MEMEL

Only Way is by Ships, Which Must Shell Own Town and Court Disaster at Sea—Left Thousands of Dead—Wily Bear Allowed Big Enemy Force From Southern East to Come up Then Hurled Them Back With Machine Guns

PETROGRAD, March 22.—The Russians have succeeded in delivering the first blow of the spring campaign inside Germany territory. The lower Niemen is now flooding wide stretches of her marshy banks. This separates the northern column of the German left wing from its base at Konigsbery, from where is now impossible to send reinforcements overland.

A week ago the Russians began pressing the Germans through Tauroggen toward Tilsit and further north across the frontier upon Memel. Some German horsemen were drowned in the Niemen. The main body had to struggle northward and westward toward the coast of the Kurische Hall, a shallow sea separated from the Baltic by a long, narrow sandbar, beginning a dozen miles above Konigsberg and ending at Memel. The Russian advance ended in a complete victory.

Thursday evening the German column, which had been driven eastward across the frontier, scattered along the waterside. Eight thousand infantry from the fortress, who had been placed in the trenches outside Memel, were driven back into the streets. The commandant had armed the civilian population with rifles from the armory, and a confused mob of soldiers and civilians opened fire from houses and barricades upon the leading Russian detachment. These withdrew outside the town with some losses.

The Russian artillery, coming in at close range and using case shot, shelled the place into silence and the main force then occupied the town and sent the civilian population outside along the Konigsberg sandbank. They took all the uniformed survivors as prisoners.

It is hoped that one effect of the capture of Memel will be that the German freebooters in western Suwalki province will desist from systematic burning and murdering among the villages, where they are enraged at finding no plunder.

The only method of attempting the relief at Memel seems to be ships from Danzig. These will have to shell their own town and expose themselves to an obvious challenge from the sea.

The Germans on the southern frontier of East Prussia, attempted a surprise attack in great force from Myszyniec, along the Rossovo River, in the direction of Ostrolenka. They hurried forward in broad, dense columns before dawn on Friday. The Russians let them come up to the first line of barbed wire, then machine-guns and a flank infantry fire poured murderous volleys which destroyed the formation of attack and drove the head column upon the supports. The entire division was driven in disorder back to the frontier early in the afternoon, leaving thousands of dead.

At Prezemysl the garrison poured out 20,000 shells during Thursday night, forming north and south; then half the garrison made a sortie at dawn eastward and attempted to drive off the besiegers. The effort was a complete failure and the Austrians lost heavily in dead. Over six thousand prisoners, many miserably underfed, accepted capture with infinite relief.

The Russians shot down an aeroplane at Dublitza, midway between Przemysl and Cracow. The aviator was carrying important documents from the commander at Premysl to the commander at Cracow.

Governor-General Speaks of Czar

OTTAWA, March 22.—An intimate and personal light was thrown upon the Czar of all the Russias, by his uncle, His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, yesterday at a Canadian Club luncheon, where an address was being delivered by the Hon. Curtis Guild, late U. S. ambassador to Russia. The Duke's speech, which was informal in character, contained the maximum of information about a great world figure, in a minimum of words. It was an unexpected speech, as his Royal Highness threw aside the usual formality attached to the appearance of royalty in public, took his audience, as it were, in to his confidence, and gave a glimpse of the character of a man whom he knew in his home life. His audience was pleased, and the prolonged applause which greeted the conclusion of the Governor-General's speech was the method which the audience took to express their pleasure.

The Governor-General stated that he had been much impressed with Mr. Guild's address and thought our affection for our ally would be greatly increased after hearing Mr. Guild's address, which had made clear certain points not fully realized by many.

"I am related to the Czar of Russia," he said. "I know him personally as a man. I have the greatest affection for him. He is a lovable man, a man of simple tastes, a family man, and possesses many attributes which we here would all admire."

His Royal Highness stated that he had only been in Russia twice, and one of the occasions was the coronation of the present Czar. He had been struck on that occasion with the tremendous number of tribes and peoples represented in the vast concourse which thronged the streets of St. Petersburg and which in all reverence had acclaimed their new Emperor. He believed the Russians were a religious people and felt that one result of the war would be to cement this great empire of widely diversified people into an even closer solidarity.

FORESTRY IN WARFARE

The fighting in Europe has drawn attention to the possible place which forestry may have in warfare. Recently, the United States War Department has asked the Department of Agriculture to make working plans for planting screens of trees near the principal coast defences of the East. Experts of the United States Forest Service have already completed plans for artificial forests that will screen the coast defence batteries which have been installed for the protection of New York harbor, Long Island sound, Boston harbor, and Pensacola, Fla. Congress has not yet made appropriations for the planting work, but it is believed that this will be done at the coming session, now that the value of forests has been demonstrated by the European war.

Army officers point out that the retention by France of certain forests along the eastern border has a profound influence upon the movement of troops, the placing of batteries and the concealing of war manoeuvres in general. The planting of forests in France has been carried on so as to make the result appear as much as possible like a natural forest, without any attempt whatsoever to place the trees at regular spaces apart. The forests of Germany are park-like, and while they offer many advantages in lumbering operations, they would not give the same concealment to army manoeuvres as the French forests.

The effect of the war on the forests of Europe is, of course, destructive. Trees have been cut without reference to future needs, in order to form fortifications and protective works of various sorts, to build bridges and make corduroy roads through boggy places. Many trees have been cut down for firewood to be used in camps, and even the rifle and artillery fire has resulted in tree destruction. In some cases also, forests have been burned intentionally, in order to drive out the enemy. It will undoubtedly take many years to repair the havoc wrought by war in the forests of Europe.

FIVE THOUSAND FOR PATRIOTIC FUNDS

A hearty endorsation of the Belleville Patriotic Campaign was given last evening when the City Council unanimously voted a grant of $5,000 to the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

At the Campaign Headquarters the workers gathered last evening and decided to lay the matter before the Council, and at 9.30 a deputation of some twenty-five representative citizens marched to the Council Chamber, where they were kindly invited to explain their proposition. Chairman J. F. Wills, Col. Lazier, Thos. Ritchie, F. E. O'Flynn, Wm. Carnew, Col. Ponton, R. Tannahill spoke in favor of the Belleville Council following the example of the numerous other Councils throughout Ontario in making a substantial grant to the Patriotic Fund, the passing of which had been authorized by special Act of the Ontario Parliament. The speakers pointed out that grants ranging from one-half to two mills on the assessment had been made in other places, and suggested that Belleville would do well to give not less than one mill.

His Worship Mayor Panter assured the deputation that the Council were in hearty accord with the Patriotic Fund movement and promised to give consideration to the matter as soon as the other business of the evening was disposed of.

The grant of $5,000 represents less than one mill on the dollar, which will mean that through the taxes the citizens of Belleville will contribute less than one dollar per $1,000 assessment to the Patriotic Fund.

With this hearty endorsation on the part of our City Fathers the local campaign has a promising outlook.

CURRENT COMMENT

Montreal News: "The difference between Bourassa's "Whine of Dislike" against England and the German "Hymn of Hate" is only a matter of degree."

No family in America has kept such an unbroken succession of great men as have the Adamses of Massachusetts. Charles Francis Adams, who died on Saturday, was no unworthy descendant of the second President.

A formal call has been issued for the women's international peace conference at The Hague. A call for a peace conference comes very fitly from women. Yet in this country it has been noted, in time of war, that the women show more bitterness toward the enemy than men do—and probably the same thing is true abroad this year.

Twelve powerful dirigible airships, claimed to be improvements over anything of the air fighting type ever floated, have been completed in England. These machines are to attack the German fleet and naval bases. According to the British, the new type dirigibles have remedied the defects of the Zeppelins, and have vastly improved on the offensive possibilities.

London Times: "The principal business of the Allies, Mr. Belloc rightly says, to defeat the German armies in the field; but if they can strike at the manufacturing provinces they will be dealing a vital blow at Germany's capacity for continued resistance. We think this view is so sound and so important that it must take a prominent place in any speculations about the future course of the war."

New York Evening Sun: "The war is not going to end just now. There is some bitter truth in the view credited to Earl Kitchener that it has not properly begun yet. There can be no serious doubt that the decisive trials of strength are still to come. Instead, therefore, of extolling Germany for the feats she has performed and the bold front she shows, an acute observer is more inclined to speculate on the reality behind the appearance of things and to turn over in his mind the question whether from the future point of view she has had the best of it down to the present time."

Montreal Star: "The loss of three battleships and the crippling of several other members of the Dardanells fleet will not, of course, so much as check the operations of the Allies. The surprise is,—not that these ships have been sunk—but that an attacking fleet could penetrate so far into the Dardanells without suffering heavy losses long before this triple blow fell. We have always assumed that the Dardanelles were impregnable. That a serious attempt was to be made to force them, was a startling piece of news. That it would cost heavily was realized from the beginning."

The capture of Przemysl will prove hardly less important to the Russians than the capture of Antwerp did to the Germans. It will release the besieging army—numbering probably fifty or sixty thousand men—for service elsewhere, and will make easier the Russian advance upon Cracow, which will doubtless be pushed with vigor very soon. Cracow, close to the Silesian border, is the only fortress held by the enemy between the Russian army and the German frontier. When Cracow is taken the road to Germany will be open. But we may be sure that the defence of the ancient capital of Poland will be stubborn, and there will be desperate fighting before it falls to the invaders.

Offered $20,000 For Her Husband

Aged Baroness De Magnanville Is Sorely Distressed, Ransom Money Returned

GENEVA, via Paris, March 22.—A most pathetic figure at Berne is the aged Baroness De Magnanville of Paris, who is asking the aid of the Swiss Government to obtain the liberation of her husband, aged eighty, after offering a ransom of $20,000. The Germans took Baron de Magnanville as a hostage near Noyon several months ago. Negotiations to secure his release through the payment of a ransom failed in Berlin, the Reichsbank returning the money. The Baroness, it is said, is heartbroken and has appealed to the Swiss Government as a last resort.

SOLDIERS SPEAK MODESTLY ABOUT WARRIOR DEEDS

Dr. Leake Gained Victoria Cross in Boer War and Added Distinction Against Germans—Michael O'Leary Real Hero—Private Smith Joined Under Wrong Name, Afraid His Parents Would Object

LONDON, March 22.—The man who has won the Victoria Cross twice over, Lieutenant Arthur Martin Leake, of the Royal Army Medical Corps—he has just been granted a clasp to the Cross which he won in the South African War—comes of a family of heroes.

He is one of six brothers serving the Flag. One, Captain Francis Martin Leake, was captain of the Pathfinder when that vessel was blown up, and is now in charge of a flotilla of destroyers. Another brother, Lieut. P. S. Martin Leake, of the Royal Engineers, lost his life when accompanying Lieut. W. F. MacCaulfield on a balloon ascent in 1907. The ascent was made in the presence of King Edward, and both aeronauts disappeared, their bodies being subsequently picked up at sea.

Lieutenant Arthur Martin Leake, V.C., is an old boy of Westminster School, from which he proceeded to University College Hospital. During the South African War he joined the Hertfordshire Yeomanry, and gained the Cross, but lost the use of an arm.

Afterwards he went to India as a doctor on the railway service, and when the Balkan war broke out he joined the Serbian forces. When that conflict was over he returned to India and took up his duties again as medical head of the Nepal and Bengal Railway. On the declaration of war with Germany Dr. Leake at once went to Paris and volunteered his services, joining the R.A.M.C.

Two other brothers, Major Stephen Leake and Captain Richard Leake, are with the new army.

FROM ROUGHRIDER TO V. C.

Michael O'Leary, another of the V. C. heroes, is very popular among his comrades of the Irish Guards.

O'Leary, who was promoted sergeant on the field for distinguished service, has an excellent regimental record.

He is only 24, yet has been a private in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, a body which can tell stories of cattle raiders, border thieves and Indians.

O'Leary was rough-riding off the prairie when the Irish Guards reserves were mobilized. He at once took ship for England, and was attached to the First Battalion of his regiment as lance corporal.

Drummer (now Lance Corporal) William Kenny, of the Second Gordon Highlanders, makes light of his acts.

He is now in hospital at Newton Abbott, having come over from France on Sunday in consequence of a broken wrist sustained by falling.

Kenny was born in the Army at Malta, his father serving for twenty-three years in the Gordons. His parents are Irish, and now live at Drogheda, but he has spent the greater part of his life in India, South Africa and Egypt.

He explained that he was a noncombatant, and his duties were to pick up wounded and carry messages and such like things.

I simply took my orders from an orderly like any other fellow would do, and carried them out as anybody would.

Kenny seemed to think he had done nothing in any way.

"What about the five wounded men you brought in?" Kenny was asked.

"I saw wounded men lying about, and I simply went and brought them in. It was the same with the guns."

"The maxims had to be brought in, and so I went to get them and succeeded. I was there for those sort of jobs."

Although reticent about his own doings, Kenny was ready enough to talk about the war generally, and said the allies had enough men to keep the Germans back, but not sufficient to drive them out of France and Belgium.

Many of the Germans were excellent fighters, and the British respected the Prussian Guards. All through the war he has been in the thic of the fighting. He seemed to regard his accident as a great hardship after having dodged shells and bullets for so long.

Private Smith, a Border Regiment V.C., is a Workington man, unmarried, and 31 years of age. He enlisted when he was seventeen, and served through the Boer war.

His real name is Glinn, but he joined the army under his mother's maiden name, fearing that his parents would refuse to allow him to embrace soldiering as a career. He was in employment at Middlesbrough when the war broke out.

PATRICIA'S OFFICERS WALKED INTO A GERMAN TRENCH

Lieut. Colquhoun and Lieut. Crabbe Who Led Storming Party Did not Return—Story of the Exploit—Body of Lieut. Colquhoun Was Found in German Trench

LONDON, March 22.—Details concerning the gallant dash made by the P.P.C.L.I.'s at the end of February, when they succeeded in capturing one of the German trenches, were given to The Montreal Gazette correspondent by Princess Patricia men who were seen in the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital at Beachborough Park, near Shorncliffe, this week.

The concise report made by Sir John French under date 2nd March stated: "On our left a party of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry captured a German trench with great dash. After killing eleven of the occupants and driving off the remainder, they succeeded in blowing up the trench. Our losses were trifling." This brief statement was illuminated by Lance Corporal W. Stewart Thomson, of the 4th Company, who was formerly in the Governor-General's Bodyguard at Toronto. "The actual storming party consisted," he said, "of the corps of snipers and thirteen men picked from the thirteenth platoon of No. 4 Company, mostly Winnipeg men. They were led by Lieut. C. E. Crabbe, a former resident of Montreal, and Lieut. Colquhoun, of Hamilton, who went to have a look over the ground at midnight and never came back, both being reported missing. The snipers led the way, and the men ofthe 13th platoon followed. We crept up until we were within twenty yards of the enemy's trench, our bayonets being fixed as we crept up, and when the order was given we leapt right into the enemy's trench with but few casualties as far as I know. Then followed the storming party with picks, shovels and bombs. The German trench was partly evacuated before they got in, but those who remained were bayonetted. Three prisoners were taken, and in retiring from the trench in accordance with orders, two of the prisoners were killed by their own Maxims. The Germans made a counter attack, and there were probably sixty casualties among the Princess Patricias. No. 2 Company is supposed to have resisted the counter attack.

"The charge was made in the early hours, just before daybreak, and as it was full moon even then we could see fairly clearly and were fully exposed. When daylight broke we should have retired, but were somewhat delayed by the absence of Lieutenant Crabbe. Major Gault and Lieut. Crabbe had conducted the recognaisance beforehand."

Lance Corporal Thomson, who narrated this story, was shot in the shoulder just after the dash had taken place. He got under cover and waited in his own words "until the boys had finished the job."

Lieut. Crabbe, since the above was written, was reported wounded, while the body of Lieut. Colquhoun was found when the British captured a German trench.

Private Barnet K. Snider, of Westmount, who is in the same hospital suffering from a shrapnel wound in the leg, was formerly an officer in the 6th Hussars, Montreal. Together with Private Norman L. Davison, of Winnipeg, he sustained an injury by an explosion of shrapnel in the early stages of the action. Snider commented on the remarkable force which these explosions of shrapnel seemed to carry. He explained how his friend Davison, although he was sitting on a bank of earth with his back against a rampart, and his feet firmly planted on the ground, was made to turn a complete somesault in such a way as he could not have believed possible. The velocity of these shells may be imagined from the fact that the report of the firing and bursting appeared to coincide. Snider was carrying in his pocket an oil can, which was served out as the men frequently ran short of oil in the trenches just when they needed to keep their rifles clean. In the ordinary way it should have been in his haversack, but it was in his pocket, and a piece of shell pierced it clean. This fact probably mitigated the effect of the shell, the injury being confined to a lengthy superficial flesh wound. Snider and Davison were taken away together to the base hospital, and to The Gazette correspondent they spoke appreciatively of the valiant service of the stretcher bearers, who, they said, incurred all sorts of dangers, and were ready at any time to risk their own lives in order to curtail the sufferings of those who were wounded on the field. They reached the clearing hospital at Bailleul, but the action took place near Dikebosch in Belgium. From the clearing hospital they passed on to Boulogne and referred with much appreciation to the well equipped hospital train that brought them to that port.

Private G. H. Brown, of No. 2 company, Edmonton, also told a story of being in an ambulance which was fired at by the Germans. This act was evidently deliberate, inasmuch as the vehicle was alone on the road, half a mile from the village, and there were no hostilities round about it. The two occupants of the ambulance, already wounded, sustained further injuries, but "it was a wonder," added Brown, "that we were not all blown to pieces."

All the men in the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital at Shorncliffe testify to the kind and unremitting care which has been bestowed upon them. "It is not like a military hospital," said one of them, "but it's more like being nursed in a private home." It may be added that the men spoke admiringly of Major Hamilton Gault, and they also appreciated visits which had been paid by Lady Farquhar on behalf of the Colonel of the regiment.

KILLING THE BABIES

Most mothers love babies but it is a strange combination of love and ignorance on the part of mothers that causes twenty-five per cent. of our babies to die before they reach one year of age. Mothers frequently and with the best intentions feed and dress their babies in a manner that for the sake of a better term, is simply "killing the babies with kindness."

What is the meaning of the world-wide interest in Child Welfare today?

It means that sociologists, philanthropists, eugenists, all thoughtful women and men, are discovering that the welfare of the child holds such an important place in our social and national life, that no longer can this study be neglected.

There is a God-given instinct in every decent man and woman, that cries out for protection for the children. The world can look with comparative composure at dead men in trenches and shattered cathedrals; but maimed, naked, starving children is a sight it cannot bear without passion and amazement, and a strong desire to do things.

The mortality among children is dreadful. If a like death rate should take place with our cows, horses, or pigs, the Government would at once take action, and see to it that the cause was removed. The cause of this enormous mortality among children is ignorance—the ignorance of parents—compulsory education; and the one thing needful for the perpetuation and welfare of the human family is not in the curriculum.

The conservation of human life—the knowledge that will lessen the number of tiny graves in the cemeteries, and the saddened hearts of loving parents—this is the information the Better Canadian Babies Bureau is trying to diffuse.

First of all it ought to be the child's privilege to be born right, of healthy parents, having no history of mental disease, malignant troubles, tuberculosis, or alcoholism. The child does not select its parents, and it is a tragical situation if, as the child grows up, it learns to deplore that such is the case.

Pre-natal influences and their effect upon the mental and phyisical condition of later life might be profitably studied by prospective parents. In fact, if the same same care and common sense used in the management of the domestic animals were applied in the rearing of children it would be a great improvement on the present methods.

Mothers have it in their power to see to it that there are "better Canadian babies," and as a natural result there will be more of them—Canadian Home Journal.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

U. S. STEEL STATEMENT REFLECTS CONDITIONS

NEW YORK, March 22.—The annal report of the United States Steel Corporation for 1914 issued today, offers striking proof of the depression in the steel industry during that year. Earnings of $81,746,518 show a decrease of $65,421,000 as compared with 1913, while the net income of $46,520,408 shows a decrease of $58,800,284. The result for 1914 was a deficit of $16,971,984, as against a surplus of $30,582,184 the previous year.

The corporation's expenditures of $45,372,594 for maintenance, repairs and extraordinary replacements were $14,578,367, or 24.31 per cent under the previous year.

In 1914 the Corporation mined only 17,034,931 tons of iron ore, against 28,738,451 tons in 1913, and its total production of rolled and other finished steel products for sale fell off 3,260,326 tons to 9,014,512 tons.

The average number of employes in the service during 1914 was 179,353, against 223,906 in 1913, and the pay roll decreased from $207,206,176 to $126,379,907.

E. H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors in his statement to stockholders, attributes the loss in revenues last year not only to the general lessening of the demand for the products of the subsidiary companies following the outbreak of the war abroad, but to the decline in prices for nearly all classes of products and the falling off in export business. In this latter department, he says, the decrease was greater than in the domestic trade, the decrease in the tonnage of rolled and finished products having been 37.6 per cent. as compared with a 23.3 per cent loss in domestic tonnage. The decrease in prices received in 1914, as compared with 1913, averaged $2.54 a ton on the total tonnage of rolled and other finished products, and accounted for $23,000,000 of the total decrease in the net earnings for 1914.

Reference to the recent improvement in the steel industry is contained in the statement that since January 10 there has been a material gain in the bookings of export business, which is at present equal to the average of the last three years.

DESERONTO NEWS

On Sunday Bishop Bidwell of Kingston held services in St. Mark's Church and in the afternoon held a service for men, in which over 200 men were present. The Bishop has held services all week for Missions, being largely attended and enjoyed by all present. The Bishop concluded his services on Sunday evening, leaving on Monday for Kingston.

After a pastorate of four years, the Rev F. S. Dowling, of the Presbyterian church preached his farewell sermons on Sunday and on Tuesday evening the members and adherents of the Church assembled in the church's parlor and had a social evening. During the evening Mr. Dowling was presented with a fitted club bag, and an address, read by Mr. G. W. Wright. Mr. Dowling replied, thanking his congregation for their kindess to Mrs. Dowling and himself. Refreshments were served, after which the congregation dispersed.

It was with deep regret that word was received from Toronto this morning that Dr. Pasmore had passed away in a hospital in Toronto, after undergoing an operation. The doctor had not been feeling well for a few weeks and went to Toronto to undergo treatment about two weeks ago, when he advised to undergo the operation. The late Dr. Pasmore was 74 years of age and conducted a splendid drug store, corner of George and Thomas streets. He is survived by his widow, and two sons in Toronto, and one daughter, living in St. Catharines, and one daughter, a missionary in China. He was elder in the Presbyterian church, and always willing to help in time of need In politics he was a liberal.

These Must Be Days Of Brotherhood

These are times of standing together, working, thinking, fighting together. The challenge of an enemy provokes quick response in every breast and proclaims the brotherhood of rich and poor.

You can hear the tread of armed men in the streets. To-day they prepare, to-morrow they depart, and another day they fight! They are not merely YOUR sons who go, or our neighbours' sons, but OUR sons! We who remain here, thousands of miles from the reek of gunfire, have no less a part to play than those who go. We are not excused because we cannot fight. We must fill the places of those who go.

Have we the right to lie secure in our beds, decently fed and warmly clad, while the women who sent their men, and the children whose fathers have gone, are in need?

In this crisis they are as much our dependents as those who leave them to go to war. Shall the heroes, when they come marching back, bronzed and scarred, find that we, accepting their defence for ourselves, have yet neglected the defence of their dependents? Their struggle is our struggle, their sacrifice is our sacrifice—and their wives and babies, our charge.

CHAPTER II.

"How extraordinary! Defeat after defeat is ours. First the capture of Podol by moonlight; Clam-Gallas barricaded; the village taken and burned. Then they conquer Gitchin. Oh; those cursed needle-guns, how they mowed down our men rank after rank! The enemy's two great army corps have joined and are even now pressing down against Münchengratz." Thus my father lamented, telling us the terrible news. But his confidence was unshaken.

"Let them come, every man of them, down into Bohemia, and we will annihilate them yet. We will surround them; the people will rise against them, and when there is no escape, no retreat—hemmed in—we will give them the finishing touch. It is a disadvantage for them to be in the enemy's country, for you have not only the army but the people against you. At Trautenau the inhabitants poured boiling water and oil on to the Prussians."

A cry of horror and disgust escaped me.

"War is horrible, I grant," said my father, "but what would you have?"

"Then never again dare tell me that war ennobles a people. Admit that it unmans them, brutalizes and turns men into tigers and very devils. Boiling oil! Ugh!"

"Self-defence and righteous revenge are justifiable, Martha. Do you think we should take their needle-guns and bullets without return? Our brave fellows are cut down like defenceless cattle. But we will beat them yet, for we are too numerous and too well disciplined. I acknowledge a few mistakes have been made; we should not have waited, but pushed across the Prussian frontier from the start. Our choice of marshals may not have been altogether wise. But I will not find fault, for the decisive battle is yet to come. We are now concentrating a hundred thousand strong at Koniggratz. There will our northern Custozza be fought and won."

Frederick was to fight there also. His last letter had said so. I have still in my possession all his hurried little notes, written in pencil, on horseback, in the tent, illegible save to me, and sent whenever he found opportunity to do so. Some came into my hands even after the campaign was over, and I have them as mementos to this hour. They are not the clever descriptions or careful dispatches of the war correspondent. There are no details of the strategy, no rhetorical pictures of the battle-scenes. Here are some of them:

A lovely summer night in camp—the ground is covered with exhausted men after a long forced march. Tents have been pitched for staff officers only. In mine there are three beds, and my two comrades are asleep. By the feeble light I am writing to my beloved wife. Puzl lies on my bed. Poor, tired dog! I almost regret that I brought him with me. He is sleeping and dreaming of his lover and master Count Rudolf Dotzky. And I, Martha, am dreaming of you. True, it is a waking dream, but I see you sitting in the far corner of the tent, and I dare not move for fear the image will vanish.

I stepped out a moment. Straggling figures dragged themselves up to our camp fires; they had been left on the road. But many more are still lying in the ditches and corn-fields. The heat of the march was fearful. The brazen sun burned into our brains; the knapsacks and muskets galled our shoulders. None have complained, though many fell from sunstroke, never to rise again. This June night is clear and enchanting, but nightingales and roses and jasmine are not for us. We hear stamping and neighing horses, voices of restless men, the even tramp of the guard. Later we shall hear the croak of the raven, and smell the powder, blood, and corruption. Astonishing how blind is mankind! Those who curse the fearful fires that burned the martyrs for the glory of God, even these glorify the battlefield. The torture chambers of the Inquisition fill them with abhorrence, but how proud they are of their arsenals!

If a German soldier lacks enthusiasm he is court martialed. Patriots made so by force are never patriotic at heart.

THE HUN'S DIARY

Children as Shields

Dealing with acts under the first head, the report states that from the first moment when the German army came into touch with the Belgian forces before Liege it sought to protect itself by thrusting before it groups of civilians. One witness described the way in which a German battery, which was firing at the Carmelite Monastery of Chevremont, sought to shelter itself from the fire of a fort by massing around itself people arrested from the neighboring villages, including women and even children. The same witness declares that he saw a body of German troops, who passed through the gap between the forts Fleron and Chaudefontaine, driving before them many civilians whom they had picked up on the highway; most of them had their hands tied behind their backs. Another group was made to march in the middle of the column; it included an old man of 80 years of age, whom two companions had literally to drag alone.

Another witness saw men, women, and children forced to spend the night on a bridge over the Sambre in order that the French might be prevented from bombarding it. Others, including four priests, were pushed forward toward the French firing line. On the following morning the witness noticed eight nuns stationed on the bridge to preserve it against attempts at destruction.

At Tamines, a witness who was looking on from a window, saw the combat between French and German troops along the line of the Sambre; he noticed that the Germans thrust some civilians before them across the bridge. When these unfortunate people tried to save themselves by slipping into the first houses beyond the bridge the Germans fired on them, and several ran mortally wounded into the very house in which the witness was standing, and died there. At Tournai the German troops made their entry on Aug. 24, sheltering themselves behind several ranks of civilians. This method was not only used by bodies of troops in regular order of march, but by mere patrols.

Barbarity to Hostages

By evidence from several quarters the delegates learnt that the number of civilian prisoners interned in Germany—men, women and children—was large. Numerous refugees detailed to them the circumstances under which they were separated from members of their families. Some, after having been arrested without any cause, and marched about for several days undergoing treatment of odious brutality and cruelty, succeeded in escaping. Others were taken off to Germany, where they were exposed to insults and maltreatment, and then were brought back to Belgium and turned loose at some chance spot in the fields Everywhere there has been a system in vogue by which great number of individuals—whole families and even the whole population of a hamlet or village—have been made prisoners en masse, under some mere pretext, or for no reason at all.

The inhuman treatment meted out to various parties of civilian prisoners taken to Germany is described at length. One party were removed to Cologne from Louvain, the journey made in filthy cattletrucks, occupying four days, during which time the prisoners received no food, and were not allowed to open the doors. They spent one night in Cologne, receiving one loaf for every ten persons. Being fifteen days old (the date was stamped on it) the bread was too hard to eat. Next day the party entrained for Brussels, spending fifty hours in the train without food.

"We are assured that the moral sufferings of the prisoners are even worse than their physical sufferings. They have to live in unpleasant and dangerous contiguity with individuals suffering from contagious diseases. These civilians are of all ranks of life. All alike are condemned to complete idleness. The German soldiery, alleging that they are dealing with 'francs-tireurs and murderers,' treat them with the brutality. Can we wonder at the fact that many of the prisoners have become insane?

"Especially hard was the lot of certain 'hostages' who were arrested in many places in order to secure the delivery of war contributions absolutely disproportionate to the resources of the community on which they were imposed. The venerable Bishop of Tournai, an old man and an invalid, was shut up for five days at Ath, in a nauseous place, where he had only a mattress to lie upon, and no food save what certain devoted ladies brought him.

Wholesale Executions

A large proportion of the civilians arrested by the German troops were set aside for execution. Several refugees described the casual way in which they were arrested, then released, then arested again and led about like a flock of sheep—then how they were placed in line against a hedge or a wall, how the rifles were levelled against them, and then they were allowed to go scot free!

"On the other hand numerous witnesses saw with their own eyes 'hostages' shot dead by a German firing-party. It is remarkable that these executions took place not during a combat but long after. They were the systematic vengeance of the invading army on the harmless inhabitants of places at which they had met unexpected resistance from our regular troops."

At a certain village in the province of Liege the parish priest and secretary of the commune were shot by the roadside, after having been arrested in the house of the latter. This happened under the eyes of a witness, who only escaped a similar fate by slipping behind a hedge.

At Gelrode seven young men were seized in the church where the village people had sought shelter at the enemy's approach; they were taken out and shot, after having been slashed with sabres.

At Ermeton the Abbe Schlogel, parish priest of Hastieres, M. Ponthieses, a professor of the University of Louvain, and the village schoolmaster, with certain other, were shot.

Among the groups of persons gathered together for an execution en masse there was a preliminary system of separation. Generally women, children, and old men were let off. In one instance a boy of about 14 was shifted several times from one side of the road to the other and finally left on the side where everyone was shot.

"In these executions there was no question of a trial—there was an arbitrary selection among a mass of innocent people, of whom some were chosen "to pay for the acts of the guilty.' But who were the guilty? And what crimes had they commited? No one knows! Of sixty-two witnesses who appeared before us, and were cross-examined with care on this point, not one admitted that any civilians had been firing on the enemy. On the contrary they all described to us the terror of the countryside on the approach of the invaders, and declared that the instructions issued by the local authorities concerning the surrender of firearms had been faithfully carried out. Very many witnesses declared that German soldiers, in a state of drunkenness, discharged their rifles at large, and then reported to their officers that they had been fired on by civilians. On the faith of such stories their superiors at once ordered 'the customary reprisals'—pillage, arson, and the shooting of inhabitants seized at haphazard."

Two Village Massacres

Two peculiarly atrocious examples of wholesale murder are mentioned. At Surice, while the village was burning, a group of some fifty or sixty persons of both sexes were driven together. The eighteen men were separated from the women and told that they were to be shot. Among them were the parish priests of Anthee, Onhaye, and Surice, and another ecclesiastic. There were fathers and sons side by side. Opposite them were mothers and daughters wailing and praying. The masacre was carried out under their eyes—all the men fell together mowed down by a volley. One or two showed signs of life whereupon the soldiers finished them off with the butt-ends of their rifles. They then turned out the pockets of the dead and stripped off some of their clothes.

At Bueken the massacre took place long after that hamlet had been occupied by the German troops. They had been staying there for ten days, and the panic-stricken inhabitants had been doing their best to keep them in good temper by every possible means. On Aug. 29 the men were all arrested and led to a meadow, with their hands tied behind their backs. Then, according to the evidence of the witness who described the scene, eighteen men were shot, including an old man of 70 and three sons. They were executed in the presence of their wives and children.

The women, in the hope of saving the lives of their husbands, tried to call out, "Long live Germany and the Kaiser!" When the massacre was over the women and children were shut up in a small room, so small that no one could lie down. These poor folks were confined there for two days, and given neither food nor drink. Meanwhile the village was entirely destroyed.

Arson and pillage, it is added always accompanied these massacres. Everything seemed to be done systematically—the arrest of the inhabitants seems to have been very often a preliminary to the complete sack of their houses, and their subsequent destruction and burning. Some witnesses, however, have reported cases where houses still inhabited were set on fire and where charred corpses were found in the ruins. The pillage seems to have been more or less complete, and the devastation more or less violent, according as the soldiery were more or less intoxicated. Their officers thought it no harm to set the example of drunkenness.

Lord Bryce's Commission

Then there is the official report of the English Commission which has special interest for Americans because Viscount Bryce was the President. This report has not been presented at the time "The Hun's Diary" was sent to press, but I am able to state on the authority of the London correspondent of "The New York Times" that in the opinion of Lord Bryce and the other members of the British Commission who were appointed to investigate the charges of atrocities, the evidence obtained of the guilt of the German military system is considered "lamentably and appallingly convincing."

HOW TO PREVENT ACID STOMACHS

AND FOOD FERMENTATION

BY A STOMACH SPECIALIST

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to the conclusion that most people who complain of stomach trouble possess stomachs that are absolutely healthy and normal. The real trouble, that which causes all the pain and difficulty, is excessive acid in the stomach, aggravated by food fermentation. Hyperacidity irritates the delicate lining of the stomach and food fermentation causes wind which distends the stomach abnormally causing that full bloated feeling. Thus both acid and fermentation interfere with and retard process of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy, and normal, but irritated almost past endurance by these foreign elements—acid and wind. In all such cases—and they comprise over 90 per cent. of all stomach difficulties—the first and only step necessary is to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation by taking in a little warm or cold water immediately after eating, from one to two teaspoonfuls of bisurated magnesia, which is doubtless the best and only really effective antacid and food corrective known. The acid will be neutralized and the fermentation stopped almost instantly, and your stomach will at once proceed to digest the food in a healthy, normal manner. Be sure to ask your druggist for the bisurated magnesia, as I have found other forms utterly lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties—F. J. G.

ITCHY NOSE AND RUNNING EYES CURED IN FIVE MINUTES BY "CATARRHOZONE"

BRONCHIAL DISTRESS AND BAD THROAT TROUBLE RELIEVED AT ONCE.

Every day comes news of wonderful cures made by Catarrhozone. Cases are reported and personal testimony is given that proves beyond question the marvelous merit of Catarrhozone.

Bad colds and running eyes it stops in a few minutes.

Irritable throat and dry bronchial coughs are helped in a jiffy—always cured—if Catarrhozone is used as directed.

Chronic Catarrh in the nose and throat, the sort that keeps the breath rank and maintains a vile, sickening discharge—even that type of catarrh yields completely to the power of Catarrhozone.

Just think of it!

Not a drug to take, not an hour to wait for relief—you just simply inhale the pleasant, piney vapor of Catarrhozone and get well quickly.

"What Catarrhozone did for me in one week was simply a miracle," writes Malcolm R. McIntosh from Sydney. "I had a frightful attack of Catarrh. My ears buzzed and my head was full of noises. The end of my nose was red and ichy—on the inside it was sore and encrusted. I had vile droppings from my throat and was very sick. Relief came quick—so I kept up the treatment and was absolutely cured by Catarrhozone."

Nothing else will so effectively and quickly cure you as Catarrhozone. Get the $1.00 outfit; it always does the trick. Small size 50c; sample size 25c, at all dealers.

A MISSING SON

The local police were today in receipt of a communication from a lady in Toronto who made inquiries in reference to her son whom she claimed had enlisted with the third contingent here. As the lady in question had received no word about her son for some time, she asked the police to ascertain if he was in this city.

MRS. HECTOR D. PRENTER AT ARMORIES

Mrs. Hector D. Prenter, who addresses a meeting at the Armouries on Friday evening of this week, is a daughter of the late Archibald Dunlop at one time a resident of Belleville and she will be remembered by many of our readers as Miss Hattie Dunlop. Mrs. Prenter was born in Russia during her parents' temporary residence there, but two years later the family came to Canada and took up their residence in Belleville. Mrs. Prenter spent her girlhood here, attending the Public and High Schools, and so may be fairly claimed as a daughter of Belleville.

Mrs. Prenter was born of the happy combination of a Scotch father and a north-of-Ireland mother and is richly endowed with the best talents of both races. For some years past she has devoted herself to a study of modern problems of social and political science especially as they affect the status of women, and has won for herself an enviable reputation as a speaker.

In commenting on Mrs. Prenter's election as President of the Political Equality League The Toronto Globe says: "Mrs. Hector Prenter does not belong to the type of 'woman's-right woman' which filled the comic supplement of a decade ago. The accompanying photograph will testify to that. She understands feminity as well as feminism, and has a due consideration for the masculine viewpoint, too. She has a broad outlook, a kindly humor and a ready wit and the Political Equality League is surely favored in having Mrs. Prenter to guide its destinies."

Mrs. Prenter's topic on Friday evening will be "Woman as a Citizen" and she will deal specially with woman's place in the Empire at the present moment.

Successful Banquet At The Tabernacle

The Ladies' Aid Serve a Large Number at Annual Tea-Meeting

The Sunday School rooms of the Tabernacle Church were alive with many people last evening, drawn thither by the relishable viands, prepared by the Ladies' Aid, whose efforts to cater to the inner man are always of an attractive nature. To speak expressively, it was the annual tea-meeting, with food galore, which drew several hundred to the well-laden tables, from five o'clock, to well into the night. There was nothing lacking—all were delighted—the service on the part of the trim waitresses being of the most modern order.

Following the banquet a splendid programme was provided, the church choir doing valiant service. Mr. J. Elliott officiated as chairman and the addresses by visiting ministers, including Messrs Brown and Kenny, former pastors, were very interesting. Prof. Dan A. Cameron, Sandford Burrows, Miss K. Bawdon and Mrs. (Rev.) A. R. Sanderson, were highly appreciated in solo work, Mr. Bruce Martin coming into favor as a solosist.

The programme as a whole was as follows:

Organ Selection—Mrs. M. P. Duff.
Address—The Chairman.
The Tabernacle Mixed Quartette—Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Nicholson, Messrs. Schryver and Moorman
Song—Selected—Mr. F. Burke.
Song—Selected—Miss Brown.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

The Finance Committee have for some time been making a special effort to secure the annual pledges for maintenance of the Association work. It is generally understood that the rental of Dormitories and memberships realizes approximately one half of the budget. The balance, amounting to $4,000 is about half pledged already. The Committee have decided to suspend their canvas until after the Patriotic Canvass Days are over.

Killed in Action

Yesterday's despatche flashed the news that Lieut. W. N. Galaugher, of Chatham, has fallen in action. Lieut. Galaugher was at one time a resident of Belleville, and an attache of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. He had many friends in this city who will regret to hear of his death. Mr. Walter H. Galaugher, also a former resident of Belleville, and a member of the local staff of the same bank, is a son-in-law of Mr. J. K. McCargar of this city, and a brother of the deceased.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

In Daily Fear Of Death—Until "Fruit-a-tives" Brought Relief.

CHATHAM, ONT., April 3rd. 1913.

"Some two years ago, I was a great sufferer from Indigestion. One day my eye caught a billboard of "Fruit-a-tives" and I said to myself "if Fruit-a-tives will build me up like that, it is good enough for me". I bought some. After taking these wonderful tablets for only three weeks, I found myself wonderfully improved. In a short time longer, I cured myself entirely. My case was no light one, either, Gas would often form in my stomach and I was in daily fear that it would get around my heart and kill me. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy for Indigestion".

PORCUPINE CITIZENS WANT ALIENS INTERNED

TIMMINS, Ont., March 22—A large meeting of citizens of Porcupine district Saturday night passed resolutions calling upon the Government to take immediate steps to intern all alien enemies in the north country. An amendment to the effect that the Government should first make investigation was lost by a large majority. Letters were read from various mine managers, most of them suggesting that the matter was too delicate to decide offhand and advised that registration should be enforced and inquiry made.

PETERBOROUGH TROOPS ARE OVER STRENGTH

The Peterborough members of the 39th Battalion are considerably overstrength and while there is nothing definite when the boys will leave for Belleville, it is expected that they will likely make their departure on Thursday. About fifty of the present number will remain at home as a start for the fourth contingent.

The progress of these young men have been watched with much interest, and during their brief instructions here have developed into a fine body of men.—Peterborough Examiner.

WOOD WAS LOADED STOVE BLEW UP

MONTEAL, March, 22.—Alfred Barrie, a farmer of St. Hubert, had a narrow escape from death yesterday when a log of wood he had placed in the stove in his house exploded and blew the lid off the heater. He discovered that a certain wood merchant of the district, having suffered very extensively from thefts of wood, had loaded several logs with gun powder in order to give the thieves a surprise. The wood containing the powder got mixed with that which had been purchased by Barrie.

War Consuming Wool Of Billion Sheep Per Year

Only 603,957,000 in the World

Because of This, Prediction is Made That Everyone Will be Forced to Wear Cotton.

The following article from the "Chicago Apparel Gazette" sets forth plainly the condition of the wool markets of the world, showing the quantity available and the excessive demand brought about by the requirements of 10,000,000 men on the firing line whose uniforms have to be replenished every four weeks:—

"The following are quotations from a very interesting and significant statement on the situation issued by Renstorf, Lyon & Co., cotton brokers, New York City: "At the most conservative calculation the military operations in Europe are consuming wool at an annual rate equivalent to the product of one billion sheep per year. According to the most authoritative estimates which we have been able to obtain there are approximately 603,951,000 sheep in the world. The most recent figures make the distribution of sheep as follows:—

North America . . .	67,653,443
South America . . .	112,782,048
Europe	161,888,831
Asia	110,058,874
Africa	51,357,381
Oceania (including Australia . . .	107,217,140
	603,957,717

"The world's production of wool available for commerce which of course does not include the home consumption of ? ?? *shrdlu countries, is placed at 2,880,889,000 pounds (unscoured). In all the destruction of the present war nothing approaches the waste in clothing. Most of the 10,000,000 men on the firing line are peasants who ordinarily get a suit of clothes once in four or five years. Many of them make an overcoat last from ten to fifteen years.

"Reliable estimates made by members of the British and French war supply agencies, place the life of a uniform at four or five weeks, and mufflers, four or five weeks, underwear less than a month; socks less than two weeks; and overcoats not more than five weeks.

"Under the new rule put in force by the British Army Medical Corps every soldier on the firing line is given a complete new clothing outfit every four weeks. The old clothing is then buried as a precaution against disease.

"The average uniform as demanded in specifications and completed orders from this country which have sent to Europe contains 6½ pounds of fine clean wool, while the overcoat has 10 lbs. of clean wool. Here alone are 16½ pounds of wool which has been scoured and made free of 'nails' (small hairs that drop off when wool is spun into yarn) which represents the outer equipment of one soldier. One pound of unscoured wool contains in some grades less than five ounces of clean wool; and the loss through manufacture results usually in the cloth retaining only in the neighborhood of thirty per cent. of the original unscoured weight.

"On such a basis the overcoat and uniform of one man on the firing line represents on the most conservative calculation 33 lbs. of wool on the back of sheep. For 10,000,000 fighting men and 10,000,000 men in reserve this means 660,000,000 pounds of wool in the grease to supply one overcoat and one uniform for each soldier.

"For 10,000,000 men on the firing line alone at the average rate of renewal figured on, it would require the product of nearly one Billion sheep per year for just one overcoat and uniform per month, and with no allowance for socks, sweaters, underwear or mufflers, and without making any provision whatever for the soldier held in reserve.

"As the war progresses there will undoubtedly have to be substituted larger and larger amounts of cotton for wool in uniforms. The governments of belligerent nations are willing to make almost any sacrifice to obtain wool, and they are now paying prices which no one else can pay. The price of wool is advancing by leaps and bounds. Shoddies and rags in which reclaimable wool is found are at the highest level in many years.

"The buying of wool for the use of contractors for army uniforms has been on such a tremendous scale, and prices have gone so high, that it has been impossible for more than a few woollen manufacturers in America to lay up a supply for the future. Imports of wool into this country normally reach about 200,000,000 pounds of unscoured wool per year. They are now running at the rate of less than one-tenth of that, while the Domestic production of wool which is normally about 325,000,000 pounds of fleece wool per year, has fallen below that figure owing to the slaughter of sheep for meat.

"The European nations for at least seven months of the year will insist on obtaining woollen garments for their soldiers for hygienic reasons. Eventually more cotton will have to be used, but this will be because the supply of wool has become practically exhausted."

Dressmaking Prices

In order that we may have a large number of ladies try our new Dressmaker, we are offering remarkably low prices in this department.

For Dresses we will charge from $10 to $15; and for

Cloth Suits, we will charge from $12 to $15 for the making.

These garments will receive the personal attention of Miss Cook and will be turned out in the best style and workmanship.

We may say that these prices are about one half what is charged for the same class of work in larger cities. We will be pleased to show you the new materials and give estimates for garments completed.

You need have no question about Miss Cook's ability to please you. Her testimonials from former patrons and the garments she has already completed are most satisfactory. In addition to this, you have our personal guarantee.

She has a first class staff in her workroom and will be glad to have you give her a trial order.

NEW MOVE UPON CALAIS MAY BE THE DEVELOPMENT

LONDON, March 22.—Discussing the reports that the German Staff is holding a fresh war council on the western front, the Times' military expert says:

"There is no doubt that the aim of German strategy throughout has been to act aggressively by the right. "The pit of the stomach of the French monarchy," wrote Clausewitz, "is between Paris and Brussels," and it has been upon the principles taught by Clausewitz that Germany has endeavored, with some back-sliding, to act. We cannot, therefore, exclude the possibility of a German offensive against the front held by the British army, and the fact that it is the British army which holds a particular front is an additional reason, in German opinion, why it should be attacked.

"We hope that all is prepared against such an attack; that successive lines of defence are prepared in the rear, not only a few miles back, but several marches to the rear, and that

"All that we can say definitely, is that the crisis of the war on land approaches; that the Germans are sure to bring up for it every man who can bear arms (and we might do the same), and that no ancillary expedition, no matter how extraordinarily advantageous if successful, will receive anything but condemnation from history unless we can show so decisive a superiority in the principal theatre that such a secondary enterprise can be taken without grave risk."

the possibility of a German eruption between Arras and the Oise, and a march on Amiens, throwing us back upon the French forts of the Strait; has not been overlooked. There is little doubt that the Germans still hanker after Calais, and that if they can get it, they will begin offensive and defensive operations on a much larger scale than those which they are already undertaking between Zeebrugge and Ostend.

Ten thousand Germans are reported lost in the great British rush. Three cheers for Kitchener's army.

The reason a married man dislikes wearing his good clothes is often because he hasn't any.

OUR WARRANT FOR SOLICITING SUPPORT FROM OUR CITIZENS

In soliciting contributions to the Belleville Patriotic Fund the committee are anxious that the request be supported by the reasons for so acting. Occasionally we tell one another why we should contribute and let it go at that. But there is and are more than one reason. To put these before the people we re-print here ten statements. Any one is sufficient to convince. Taken altogether they should be irresistable.

1—I owe to my country, and to the Empire of which we are a part, either to fight myself or to help make it possible for others to fight in this supreme struggle.

2—As a Canadian I have enjoyed the privileges and protection of British Citizenship and have never yet been called upon to contribute to or in defence of the Empire.

3—I have not, as yet, paid any war tax. My Mother Country has borne the burden of my protection and alone.

4—In this hour of trial I desire Great Britain to realize that every Canadian is upholding and supporting her cause.

5—The war in which we are engaged is a righteous cause, a struggle for truth, liberty and for the sacredness of treaties and the given word.

6—I cannot go myself, but I can help to make it possible for others to go by guaranteeing that their families will be provided for in their absence.

7—Every soldier who has gone from Canada is as truly my representative as he who has gone or will go from Belleville.

8—The object of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is to make provision for all families of all soldiers going from Canada to the war.

9—I know I am subscribing to a fund which will assist the family whose bread-winner has answered his country's call. Those who have gone to the front are making greater sacrifices than anything I can do at home.

10—An unparalleled crisis has arisen in the world's history which calls for supreme sacrifice on my part. I should do my duty. I should fight or pay.

—THE PATRIOTIC FUND COMMITTEE.

PATRIOTIC GONG STRIKES TWELVE AT THE GRIFFIN OPERA HOUSE

Eloquent Addresses Delivered by Minister of Public Works E. M. MacDonald, M. P. for Pictou, N. S., Sir Mackenzie Bowell, E. Gus Porter, K. C. M. P., J. W. Johnson, M. P. P., Senator H. Corby, Col. W. N. Ponton, and Others---Thirty Thousand Dollars is Called for---Notes on the Event

Under the auspices of the Belleville Patriotic Fund committee a gathering was held in Griffin's Opera House last night, the object being to inaugurate the campaign which will take place tomorrow and Friday for the purpose of raising $30,000 for the Canadian Patriotic Association. There was a large audience present, a large number of whom were ladies. It was in every respect a most representative gathering. Much interest was added to the gathering from the fact that Hon. Robt. Rogers, Minister of Public Works in the Dominion Government, and Mr. E. M. McDonald, M.P., of Pictou, N.S., who is one of the leading Liberal members in the Federal House, were present to address the meeting. These distinguished gentlemen were accompanied to the city from Ottawa by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. H. Corby and Mr. B. R. Hepburn, M.P. for Prince Edward County. The addresses given were of a most patriotic nature and were intently listened to by all present.

Ex-Mayor Wills, President of the local association, occupied the chair, and associated with him on the platform were, amongst others, the following gentlemen: Hon. R. Rogers, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. H. Corby, E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P., B. R. Hepburn, M.P., J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., Col. Marsh, Col. Ponton, Col. Lazier, Rev. Dr. Baker, Wm. Carnew, J. L. Hess, A. McGinnis, Col. Ketcheson, F. E. O'Flynn, Dr. Coughlin, Dr. Farley, H. F. Ketcheson, Col. Stewart, S. Robertson, Mayor Panter, C. J. Bowell, H. McGinnis, Col. Preston, T. H. Coppin, T. Ritchie, Ald. McFee, A. P. Allen and A. R. Walker.

In opening the proceedings, Ex-Mayor Wills said he was pleased to see such a large number present at the gathering. The work of the Belleville Patriotic Association was well known in the city. The money already received had been well expended and given to those who were left behind by those who had gone to the front. It had been decided, however, to join the National Association. We are proud of those who have gone to the front, and those who had enlisted.

Mr. E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P., said it was a pleasure for him to join in this occasion with the citizens in this patriotic movement. He had not the slightest doubt of the patriotism and loyalty of the citizens of Belleville and the county of Hastings. They had always been ready on all occasions to demonstrate their patriotism and loyalty. If the allied armies were unsuccessful in this campaign what would it mean? The proper thing to do was to give until it hurts you. If we make a sacrifice it was for the Empire and the flag under which we live. The necessity of the occasion has outgrown the appeal of the city and another appeal of a larger measure was about to be made. Be not satisfied with what you have done, but do more. He was delighted that the ladies of the city had taken such a deep interest in this matter. They have done much and will do more if the men join with them in this movement. We have given our bonds to those brave boys who have gone to the front, and they are laying down their lives for the defence of our homes. The wife and child left behind must and will be taken care of. He asked all to do all they could for the comfort of those left behind. The men gone were brave and were fighting our battles.

Hon. H. Corby, on rising to speak, said he was always delighted to address a Belleville audience. He had no doubt of the response that would come from Belleville. This was not a fight for Great Britain, but a fight for the homes of this country. He could only wish that he was a younger man, that he might go and fight for the Empire. He was especially pleased that Hon. R. Rogers on one side of politics and Mr. E. M. McDonald, of Pictou, on the other side, were present to address them. He was perfectly satisfied that the citizens of Belleville would do their duty as well as any other city in Canada. The speaker, in referring to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, said that he was a citizen whom all delighted to honor, and against whose public record not a finger could be raised.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell was most cordially received when he rose to speak. In his opening remarks he said that in this country today there was but one feeling in regard to this matter, and it was unanimity. That success would ultimately crown the efforts of the allies there was no doubt. As an evidence of the spirit of unanimity we see two gladiators of the House of Commons, politically opposed to each other, working side by side for the patriotic cause. No matter what creed, race or party there was in Canada, all were for the Empire. In referring to the war, Sir Mackenzie said it was impossible for Germany to conquer in this fight. It was a great pleasure for him to be present on this occasion. His closing sentence was, "British connection and no surrender."

Miss Anna Ponton sang with much pathos, "The Soldier's Parting Hymn."

Mr. B. R. Hepburn, M.P. for Prince Edward County, received a warm welcome. He was pleased to be present to appeal to the citizens of Belleville in this cause, which was not of a political nature. It was a pleasure to ask for aid in this patriotic fund. The county of Prince Edward had subscribed $20,000 to this fund. What a worthy object it was, and it would be a pleasure to give to such a worthy object. The speaker, in referring to the fight at the front stated that many lives were being sacrificed, and some were Canadians from this district.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn, being called upon, said he was delighted to address the meeting. It was a pleasure to have Hon. Mr. Rogers and Mr. McDonald, M.P., present, who were politically opponents. This was a matter that all can be united in. He referred to the fact that his son was now at the front, and if he did not return he knew he would die in the defence of his country. He knew the Belleville people well, and he knew that the citizens would stand behind this movement. We must stand by the boys who are in the trenches, and we must stand by those who are left behind. If every citizen does all he can we will have a fine response to the call we are about to make.

Mr. Wills—"Mr. O'Flynn's son did his duty as a member of the City Council, and he would do his duty at the front."

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., in his opening remarks, said that the presence of two prominent members of Parliament from Ottawa on the platform, who are politically opposed to each other was an evidence that party lines were broken down, and there was a united determination to see this important matter through. How did we secure our heritage? By the shedding of the British blood of our forefathers. We must retain this treasure we possess by doing our duty in this great crisis. The speaker referred to the Royal Military College at Kingston, which was established by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, and the good it was doing. Many at the front are graduates of this college. Military training was necessary for the stalwart strength of a young man. Behind the title deed of every farm and home in Canada there is a force. What is that force? We require the army and navy, and if we did not have these, where would we be against the German hordes? When this war broke out one of the first men to respond to an appeal was our friend, Hon. H. Corby, who gave $5,000. Some $6,000 additional had been collected. While you may not have a son or a husband at the front, no mother should shelter her son behind another woman's son. The speaker referred to Sir A. Beck, who was of German descent, but he and those of German descent in the town of Berlin had contributed largely to this fund. We should help the Empire in this hour of distress.

Ex-Mayor Wills—"Mr. Johnson has a boy in the trenches at the front. He left his wife and child to go to the front. We are proud of the boys of the Bay of Quinte."

Mrs. A. P. Allen sang in her usual charming and effective manner, "It's a Long Way to Tipperary."

When Mr. E. M. McDonald, M.P. for Pictou, N.S., arose to speak he was accorded a most hearty reception. In his opening remarks the speaker referred eulogistically to the ladies of the city and Bay of Quinte district. It was a great pleasure for him to be present on this occasion. A forcible appeal had already been made, and that through the fact that Messrs. O'Flynn and Johnson had sons at the front in Flanders. He spoke eulogistically of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who saw the confederation of the Provinces of the Dominion. In referring to the war the speaker said in 1885 a rebellion had to be quelled in this country, and in 1899 the boys of this country went to South Africa to fight Kruger. Fortunately the war was not of long duration, but some of those brave boys are lying under the veldt of South Africa. What an advantage it was to live under the British flag. He referred to General Botha of South Africa, and the part he is taking in this struggle against German aggression. In referring to the beginning of the war Mr. McDonald said there was no issue between Austria and Servia but could be settled without a war. Germany wanted war. The invasion of Belgium resulted in Great Britain taking up arms, and she was justified in doing so. What is our condition in Canada? We have a cosmopolitan population and we are welded together as a nation. Our hearts are stirred at present as never before. In Canada one of the results of the war will be to bring all people in Canada together. The great Anglo-Saxon race will be united as never before. Here in Canada we have a reproduction of all races, complex in character. We are not now English or French. We are Canadians first and Britishers above all. From the homes of all the various types men have gone at the Empire's call. They are today standing for the supremacy of the Empire. Death has already come and touched the forehead of many of our Canadian soldiers. When the war is over we will have a deeper realization that we are Britishers. What is our duty now? Let us remember the wives and children in these trying times. Remember the lonely wife who sits and waits for the husband who will never come back. She will be a charge upon us. No widow or orphan must be allowed to suffer. He had not the slightest doubt that Belleville would do its duty and see that wives and children are well provided for. (Loud applause).

Hon. Robert Rogers was most cordially received as he arose to speak. He said he was pleased to be present at the gathering with his good friend, Mr. McDonald. It was a great pleasure to meet the citizens of Belleville upon an occasion of this kind. Their presence at the meeting was an evidence of the grand Canadian traditions of which we are justly proud. If there was one inspiring feature of the gathering it was the presence of the ladies. It was an evidence that they would do their full duty in this great struggle that is taking place. If the ladies here were doing their full share, as he knew they were, they were not alone, as all over Canada the ladies were working day and night. It was an especial pleasure to meet Mr. Porter, his parliamentary friend, and to enjoy the hospitality of Hon. Mr. Corby. Mr. Northrup would have been present, but parliamentary duties prevented him from attending. It was an additional pleasure to sit on the platform with Mr. McDonald and Sir Mackenzie Bowell. We are here, the hon. speaker said, to discuss ways and means of raising the patriotic fund. The sons of Canada have gone forward to fight the battles of the Empire. Never before has Canada taken part in such a war as is now raging. Never before did we really know what war was. When the war broke out in August of last year, the Canadian Government undertook to offer men and money to the Empire. We gave generously and quickly, knowing we were doing our duty. We gave notice to the world that we would assist in bringing this war to a close. Our brave volunteers also gave notice that they would do their duty, and they are doing it. They will remain true until the last shot is fired. Great Britain is not at war for glory or for more territory. She is at war for the defence of the weak and for the preservation of our freedom. This is not the first time that Great Britain has taken this course, but she did it one hundred years ago. Great Britain takes the position today she did then. The Kaiser's ring is like that of Napolean, namely, for wider world power. Nations are becoming ruined, and thousands of lives are being sacrificed for the greed of the Kaiser. As Great Britain won her battles a century ago, so will she win today. She has for centuries been looked upon as the protector of the weak and the protector of the commerce of the high seas. The country is safer because John Bull is in the supremacy. Had Great Britain allowed her treaties to be broken without a protest she would have brought disgrace upon her peoples. Her solemn contract with Belgium was such. Belgium has faithfully kept her treaty. Germany plunged her millions into Belgium, and where is Belgium today. She stood by her treaty and King Albert appealed to Great Britain. Canadians are proud of their sons who have gone to the front. They have made self-sacrifice, and those remaining at home are performing a service to civilization in producing food stuffs for Great Britain and the other countries. The good citizens of Belleville will not only fight but pay. They will see that those left behind are well taken care of. We hope this war will soon cease, but Germany's unholy and unfriendly attitude must be crushed. The speaker referred to the 100 years

Uncle John Hyatt Dies at West Lake

Leaves a Record of Kindliness and Vigorous Effort Behind Him

PICTON, March 24.—(Special.)—"Uncle John" Hyatt died at his home at Hyatt died at his home at West Lake this afternoon having reached the advanced agd of 70 years. The news of his death will be read with deep regret by a large number of people throughout Ontario.

He was one of the real decorations to rural society in this Province. Born and brought up in quaint old Prince Edward county, in a Quaker community, "Uncle John," as he was affectionately called by everyone who knew him, extended his influence far outside of his native county. Always in the van of every agricultural and social reform, Provincial and Federal, the late John M. Hyatt was one of Ontario's most representative farmers.

Was a Patron Candidate

In the middle 'nineties, when the Patrons of Industry were in the zenith of their influence, "Uncle John" Hyatt was a candidate for the Ontario Legislature. Reminiscenses of that campaign were amongst the richest of his extensive fund of stories. He always remained a progressive in politics and afflicted himself with the Liberal party, although in 1905 he became a powerful factor in Ontario against the Ross Government. In 1911 the reciprocity agreement had no stronger or more ardent supporter than "Uncle John." He saw in that tariff adjustment great relief and benefit for the farming classes in Canada, and its defeat he never accepted. On every possible occasion he revived the issue with unabated zeal.

Six Families Homeless Through Cobourg Fire

Origin Unknown, but That of the Blaze in Brantford Thought Incendiary

COBOURG, March 24.—(Special.)—Six families were driven from their homes by a fire which partly destroyed the Drumm terrace, just across from the G.T.R. station here. The origin of the fire is not known. It started in the upper part of one of the buildings, and quickly spread, destroying the upper stories. It had gained a good headway before being seen. The brigade responded promptly and kept it from spreading farther. The tenants were able to save part of the contents. The building, which belongs to the Drumm estate, is insured for $1,000 in the Commercial Union.

Picton Citizen Dies on Train

PICTON, March 24.—Special—Word has just been received by wire from Chicago that George M. McMullen, a resident of this town, died yesterday of heart failure while on the train between Chicago and Evanstown, Ill. Mr. McMullen left Picton a few days ago accompanied by his son, G. B. McMullen, to attend the Railway Maintenance of Way Convention being held in that city. He was to address the convention on a process for the preservation of railway ties on which he had recently secured letters patent. Mr. McMullen had been for many years interested in transportation. He was one of the original promoters and builders of the Central Ontario Railway, first securing the charter and building the road from Picton to Trenton and later extending it northward to Coe Hill.

STILL BOMBARDING DARDANELLES FORTS

(Canadian Press Special)

DRASTIC CHANGES MADE IN ONTARIO LIQUOR LAWS

Hon. W. J. Hanna's Amendments Pronounced to be The Most Sweeping and Far Reaching Introduced in The Province in Fifteen Years

TORONTO, March 24.—Special—The Ontario Government has placed upon the statute books of the province the most drastic and far-reaching liquor license legislation of fifteen years. At one sweep it removes the administration of license law entirely from the hands of the government in power and places it in the hands of a non-political commission, with full power to enact regulations, to control the liquor business and to enforce all the conditions they impose: in addition it is ordained that every shop in the province must close its doors at 7 o'clock in the evening, and on Labor Day, as on Christmas and Good Friday, no liquor will be sold at all. In view of the fact that all Ontario is now considered by the government as one vast recruiting ground, where soldiers are enlisting to fight their empire's battles, it is also enacted that no man wearing the King's uniform will be served with liquor at any place licensed to do business in the province. Any infraction of the law will hereafter be followed with a $300 fine instead of $100, and on a second offence with imprisonment for 4 months with no option.

BROCKVILLE FARMER UNDER ARREST

(Canadian Press Special)

BROCKVILLE, March 24.—Grant L. Kilborn, a young farmer living three miles from here is under arrest for shooting Mrs. James White, whose death is hourly expected. Kilborn was intoxicated.

Mr. and Mrs. White had been keeping house for Kilborne, but a dispute having occurred, they were busy collecting their belongings and moving out. Between eight and nine o'clock Kilborn entered the kitchen and discharged a shot gun at close range, the charge striking Mrs. White in the abdomen. He fled to the woods but was soon captured.

Later—Mrs. White died about noon.

REFUSES GERMAN REQUEST

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, March 24.—The Italian Government is said to have refused the request made by Germany that a mission sent to Erythrea be premitted to continue its journey through that district into Abyssinia. Italy's refusal is reported to have been based upon the belief that the object of the mission was to incite an attack by the Abyssinian's upon the British forces in the Sudan.

WEDDING BELLS.

EASTON—WALKER

On Thursday evening, March 18th, the marriage of Mr. Frank Easton and Miss Emma Elizabeth Walker, both of Thurlow, took place at Canifton, Ont. The ceremony was performed in the presence of immediate relatives, by the Rev. M. E. Wilson, M.A., of Canifton. The young couple are both well known and very highly esteemed throughout the community, where both were born and where they have always lived. They commence life together under the most favorable auspices, and hosts of friends wish them long life and prosperity. After the marriage ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Easton were motored to the city, where they took the Grand Trunk west bound train to spend their honeymoon visiting points of interest through Western Ontario and New York State.

FROM CHARLIE SAUNDERS

Charley Saunders.

Beneficaries of Patriotic Fund

Individual Amount and Total Sums Disbursed by Local Organization

Beneficiaries of the Belleville Patriotic Association who have received and are receiving regular payments from the fund include: 16 mothers of soldiers on active service, 54 wives of soldiers on active service, 101 children of soldiers on active service.

Total paid out to date amounts to $3,417, which with the amount of $461.75 due March 31st, makes a grand total of $3,878.75.

These payments will continue to the end of the war, and are based on the following scale, which was established by the Canadian Patriotic Association at Ottawa.

Wives receive $10.00 per month from the fund as well as the $20.00 per month given as separation allowance by the government. Children between the ages of 11 and 15 receive $7.50 from the fund, children from 6 to 11 years of age receive $4.50 from the fund, and children under 6 years receive $3.00 per month.

These are the rates that have been paid by the Belleville Patriotic Association, and payments will continue on the same scale.

This fund guarantees that no dependent of our brave men, who have gone to the front and have enlisted shall want during their absence.

Patriotic Window Display at Ritchie's

A Splendid Showing of the Original Recruiting Posters

The contents of the window are the property of Col. Ponton, and make an extremely timely and unique display, bringing home to us here in Belleville, the methods used in the Mother-country to secure soldiers for defence of the Empire.

Many of the official recruiting posters shown were sent to Col. Ponton by his son, Lieutenant R. D. Ponton, before leaving England for the firing line; while some of the latest ones published have just been received from Arthur Playford, London, England. They are indeed works of art, with the one appeal to you—"Enlist Now, your King and Country need you"; one particularly striking one being a little larger than the rest entitled "Remember Scarborough; Enlist To-day.". In Britain these posters are also reproduced in photographic slides, and shown throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Throughout the window there are several other paintings and photographs of timely interest, making a very striking and interesting display.

Col. Ponton informs us that these recruiting posters will be shown in prominent Toronto and Ottawa stores after Belleville citizens have viewed them in the South window of the Ritchie Co. store.

From Whence It Was Sent

A silent white-winged messenger returned from the war zone after eight months' absence. A letter mailed at Belleville post office on the 24th of last July, came back to the writer, Rev. A. M. Hubly, rector of Emmanuel Church, yesterday. The letter was addressed to "Mrs. H. S. Warner, American Express Co., Paris, France." The missive had reached its destination in Paris, and was returned to the dead letter office at Ottawa, looking as fresh as when mailed at Belleville, excepting the foreign post marks.

Mrs. Warner, a sister of Rev. Mr. Hubly, was touring Europe with her two daughters when the war broke out. They were forced to take passage on a military train from Paris to the coast, leaving all their baggage in the French metropolis. They had some strenuous experiences; among others, a bloody scene on the way from Paris. A soldier, for some act of insubordination, was shot on the train, and his body put off at a way station to be disposed of.

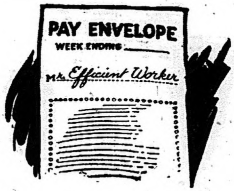
KINGSTON

"C" Battery, R.C.H.A. have discontinued the use of winter headgear.

Queen's University has placed a time limit on its hospital offer to the militia, and this expires on Friday.

Lt.-Col. Hughes has been summoned to appear before the committee investigating military boots at Ottawa, and will go some day this week to tell what he knows about the boots issued to his battalion.



Big Jobs

—are gained largely by doing common tasks uncommonly well.

But—to do unusually good work of any kind, fitness of body and mind are required.

Food plays a big part in this matter — food that contains true nourishment. And true nourishment — be it remembered — must include certain important elements which unfortunately are often lacking in the ordinary dietary — especially in white bread. These elements are phosphorus, iron, lime, sulphur, etc., stored by Nature in her field grains, and absolutely necessary for building strong, vigorous bodies and active brains.

Grape=Nuts
FOOD

—made of choice wheat and malted barley, affords all the nutriment of these grains, including these important mineral elements, in form for easy, quick digestion.

Grape-Nuts food is always fresh, crisp, sweet and ready to eat—with cream or milk.

Thousands have found that a ration of Grape-Nuts each day makes for real progress towards the bigger things of life.

MRS. WISENEIGHBOUR SAYS:—
"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "EDDY'S" Washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday."

MRS. NEWLYWED says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat, all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

TURNER SETTLEMENT.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Reid spent last week-end with friends in Belleville.

The funeral of Mr. Charles Wright was largely attended by the friends of this district, and they extent to Mrs Wright and family their heart-felt sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Quite a number of friends attended the Patriotic Concert and Box Social given in the School House in the ninth concession, last Friday evening. They report a great success.

Mr. Fraser Fairman of Toronto, visited at Mr. W. E. Griffin's, on Friday last.

Dr. D. D. Bates of McMaster University, Toronto, will favor the Sidney Baptist Church with a visit on Friday evening, April 2nd. Dr. Bates will speak on the subject of Education. A hearty invitation is extended to all.

ST. ANDREWS BY-THE-SEA.

The Algonquin Hotel, which is owned and operated by the C.P.R. has just been rebuilt. It is handsomely furnished, everything being carefully adapted to the requirements of a seaside resort, and it enables a stay of a few weeks to be spent most enjoyably. The Inn is also operated by the Company and it excels in quietness and comfort. The large transitory population usually found at the average summer resort is not in evidence at St. Andrews. The parties go for a lengthened visit and they quickly form desirable acquaintances with people.

COUNTRY CORRESPONDENCE

TO CORRESPONDENTS

The Intelligencer is constantly receiving news items from parties throughout the district who fail to attach their names to the manuscript. While items of interest, from all sections of the county are solicited, The Intelligencer positively declines to publish news that does not bear the name of the writer—not necessarily for publication, but that articles may be received in good faith—The Editor.

TRENTON.

The ice has all gone from the river, and the water line extends out into the bay, past the five big freighters that were in harbor for the winter, and which will soon be "outward bound." The streets are fast drying up and some patches of snow remain. The song of the spring robin has been heard, all going to predict a much earlier spring than had been for many years.

Mrs. Gordon Mathews has gone to Toronto to spend a few days with friends there.

Mr. Clem Nugent has gone to Syracuse, where he has obtained a position.

Mrs. H. M. Reddick has returned to her home in Picton, having spent some months with friends here.

Mr. Williams, of Winnipeg, is in town, and attended the funeral of his sister, the late Mrs. Funnel.

Misses Dorcas and Caroline Bush of Consecon spent Thursday in town.

Mr. Chas Yorke of the Fair has resigned his position owing to ill health. The "fair" is a branch of the store in Picton, by that name.

Mr. William Bensley, who sustained a fracture of his leg in Toronto, returned home last week and will soon be about again.

On Saturday about midnight the cold storage building at the wharf was found to be on fire. The firemen with the engine were called out, but despite their efforts, the building was entirely destroyed, only the blackened and burnt wall remaining. It is a great loss to the town, it being a fine building, and erected by an English company a number of years ago. Boats and dredges in the vicinity were saved only by great efforts of the firemen.

Quite an excitement prevailed on Sunday afternoon, when it became known that a horse was drowning in the river, the shore on either side being lined with spectators. Mr. Fred Labelle was driving his rig along Marmora St. when an automobile came in contact with it, causing the horse to run away, and break from the buggy. It then ran down a side street and out on the river and soon reached the open channel of water. A boat was launched and after nearly an hour the horse was at last taken out, exhausted and chilled, but was able to be driven on Monday.

The Funeral of the late Mrs. Funnell, wife of Ex-Mayor Funnel, took place at the home on King St. on Saturday. Rev. Mr. Wilkins offered prayer and Rev. Mr. Rodgers gave a short discourse. The Mayor and members of the council were present and assisted at the service, and the Governor Simcoe Chapter of I.O.D.E. attended in a body. The choir of King Street Church sang very feeling. "Will there be any Stars in by Crown." The deceased was a Methodist, and an active member of the Women's Missionary Society and member of the Men's Bible Class of King St. Church. The floral tributes were very many and beautiful.

Wellers' Opera House was filled on the evening of the 17th St. Patrick's Day to enjoy the play given by the amateurs of the H.N.S. of Trenton. The scene of the play was laid in the Green Isle, the Land of Shamrock. The Lord of the manor falls in love with a young girl in the lower walks of life. In a dream she is warned against the Lord and remains true to her old lover. The part of the heroine, Kathleen Mavourneen, was well taken by Miss Mollie Gallaher, and Mr. Harry Le Clair sustained well the character of the Lord of the Manor. The play was interspersed with solos, one by Mr. D. Long was much appreciated, entitled, "The Town of Donegal.

The Daughters of the Empire held their regular meeting at the home of Mrs. F. Barry on Friday. The meeting was well attended.

The Patriotic League is still doing a great work in knitting different articles for the soldiers. They have confined the work to the knitting of socks for a time. They meet every Tuesday afternoon at the Town Hall. A great work has been done by many ladies extending to all circles, but under the supervision of the Daughters of the Empire. The work of one lady is worthy of mention, being rather an invalid and hands crippled with rheumatism. She has knitted four pairs of socks, and five bands, and four or five pairs of wristlets. Surely there are some good people in Trenton.

AMELIASBURG

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Parliament and children, visited at Mr. E. Simonds Massassage on Thursday.

Mr. N. Day and son of Sidney have been visiting friends in this vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Norris Dafoe, Hillier, spent Tuesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Sager.

Mr. Oscar Hennesy has had the misfortune to lose two valuable cows this spring.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Thompson of Pleasant Bal, visited at Chas. Dolan's, on Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Roy Morrison of Wellington is visiting her brother, Mr. H. Spencer, for a few days.

Mrs. E. Wannamaker is spending a few days with her sister, Mrs Branden at Napanee.

Mr. John Wannamaker and cousin, Miss Fannie Stapleton, were guests of the latter's sister, Mrs. Ed. Wannamaker, Trenton, recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Coulter, Smithfield, spent Sunday with Mrs. Coulter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Spencer.

Much sympathy is extended to Mrs. Eldon Parliament, in the loss of her father, Mr. Seely, who was buried at Walbridge on Monday.

Mr. Chase of Melville and Miss Audrey Reddick, took tea on Sunday evening with the latter's aunt, Mrs. F. Wood.

Mrs. M. Ward and son, Arthur, of Consecon, visited at Mr. Archie Blakely on Sunday.

Messrs Elora and Roy Parliament were among the jury selected to attend the Supreme Court, held in Picton last week.

Mr. Merrit Huycke of North Lakeside has been staying with his grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. Selim Carwrite for a few days.

Mrs. A. McConnell of Wellington is staying with her brother, Mr. Halton Spencer for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. John Gibson spent Sunday with their daughter, Mrs. Chas. Wood, Mountain View.

Mr. Ernest Wutton had a bee on Wednesday, hauling his year's wood.

Mr. George Cunningham, our Deputy Reeve is attending County Council at Picton.

Mrs. E. Parliament is spending a few days in Walbridge with her father, who is seriously ill.

VICTORIA.

Church next Sunday at 2.45.

Mr. Lorne Brickman has purchased a new Ford car.

Miss Marie Weese was the guest of Miss Vera Brickman during last week.

The Ladies' Aid was well attended at Mrs. Will Bushes' on Thursday last.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Brickman spent Sunday at Mr. Percy Crouter's, Albury.

Mrs. F. Brickman spent the week-end at Mr. B. Redner's.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Bonter visited at Mr. C. Bryan's, Gilead, on Wednesday.

Mr. L. Weese spent Sunday at Sidney.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Brickman, Mr. and Mrs. E. Brickman, motored to Trenton on Monday.

Mr. G. Babcock and Mr. J. Wilson drove to Belleville on Monday.

Horse buyers were through here on Monday.

Little Earle Fox, we are sorry to report is very ill. After bringing him home he took a relapse and is now very low.

TWEED

The funeral of the late Franklin Countryman, who died on Wednesday, 17th inst, was held held from his late residence, two miles south of here, on Friday afternoon last, and was largely attended. Services were conducted at the home by his pastor, Rev. James Rattray of St. Andrew's Church and interment took place at Bethel Cemetery, under Orange Auspices, his nephews acting as pallbearers, namely H. S. Tucker, W. M. Tucker, W. A. Countryman, J. A. Countryman, G. W. Countryman and Chas. Thompson. Deceased, who was in his 59th year, is survived by his widow, three sons and two daughters. For many years he carried on the brick making industry here but had been farming for the last six years.

The Shamrock supper in the basement of St. Andrew's Church on the 17th March was largely attended. The decorations were in keeping with the anniversary of Ireland's patron saint.

A large number of delegates from Tweed and surrounding country were in Ottawa last week, attending the session of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario East.

The destruction of the Graham Evaporator here, by fire has thrown about 25 hands out of employment.

GOES TO TRENTON

Rev. Mr. Harrison's many friends here, made during the four years of his pastorate in the Main Street Methodist church, will be much pleased to know that he has received a most cordial invitation to Trenton when the term of his service in Picton expires next June. As Trenton has the distinction of being the much used side door into Prince Edward county, the distance between that busy town and this, are too short to materially interrupt friendships resulting from kindly association between pastor and people these latter years. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, during their residence here, have won universal confidence and esteem from all classes of the community, and it is a satisfaction to learn that their next field of labor will be quite within hailing distance.—Picton Times.

A SUCCESSFUL MOVEMENT

There is abundant evidence that the Patriotism and Production campaign has been a complete success. It has aroused members of the agricultural community as they were never aroused before. It has proven a veritable call to arms. While bad weather and poor roads kept farmers, in isolated instances, from the conferences which have been held in the country during the past six or seven weeks, the attendance has invariably been large and the interest manifested intense. As the campaign has progressed the popularity of the movement has developed until the meetings have been of the overflow order. Nor has this gratifying interest been confined to one province. What is true of Ontario is true of Quebec, of the Maritime Provinces and of the Northwest.

From Nova Scotia Professor Archibald writes that the conferences have been in every case successful, the general attendance being large. Assistant Deputy Minister H. J. Moorehouse, writing from Winnipeg, Man., says: "Most of the meetings held to date have been excellent; in many cases the farmers have expressed themselves to the extent of saying that the conference was the best farmers' meeting ever held in the district. At Killarney the hall was packed to the doors. The attendance, in fact, has been good everywhere." From Alberta and Saskatchewan advices to similar effect have been received by the Toronto branch of the Department of Agriculture. In two or three cases reference is made to the—as one authority puts it—"as sane and forceful advertising as any country has put out." Everywhere resolutions of thanks have been passed to the speakers, who have all been men and women of expert knowledge and cultivated experience. The highest appreciation has at the same time been expressed of the movement and testimony afforded in plenty of the awakening that has taken place.

Work of the conferences has been well emphasized and exemplified by the Bulletins and Pamphlets circulated freely, and for which there has been phenomenal demand. The plan adopted is to send in the first instance a catalogue of the publications and then the searcher for knowledge and scientific fact names the publications he would like to have. So great has been the demand, that in a number of instances the supply has run out and other editions have had to be printed. Particularly is this true of Dr. C. C. James' Agricultural War Book, of which the first edition of ten thousand was rapidly exhausted.. It is doubtful if a more comprehensive and more enlightening work of the kind was ever published. In a brief, plain way, facts are given of the production, of the consumption, of the needs and of the exports and imports of all the nations of Europe and of Canada and the United States, Australia, New Zealand, India and the Argentines. There are contributions from many of the leading men of Canada as well as from recognized high authorities on agriculture. Chapters, too, are given on the labor problem and on the cultivation of vacant land in cities. All the publications, including the 160 page finely printed, and lavishly illustrated Agricultural War Book, can be had for the mere effort of applying to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, not even a postage stamp being necessary on the application.

SEIZING HOLLAND'S SHIPS

The penchant of the Germans for hunting trouble appears to have increased, rather than diminished, with the progress of the war. Their latest feat in this line is the capture of two Dutch steamers, which have been coolly seized by German submarines and taken into Zeebrugge as prizes of war. The captain of another Dutch merchantman complains that a German aeroplane threw bombs on him. The ships, it is said, were not carrying contraband, and the only excuse that can be alleged for seizing them is that they were trading with English ports.

It is permissible for a belligerent to seize neutral vessels which disregard a recognized blockade. Germany, however, has not declared a blockade of the British coast, nor could the occasional appearance of a submarine in British waters be recognized by neutrals as a blockade even if Germany so proclaimed. By the seizure of these Dutch ships however, it would appear that Germany intends to regard her submarine operations as a blockade and to claim rights accordingly. If that is the case, it creates an even more serious situation for neutrals than did the original notice that neutral vessels entering British waters were liable to be torpedoed.

Following the unwarranted sinking of a grain-laden Dutch ship on the high seas by the cruiser Karlsruhe in circumstances very similar to the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, this new attack on Dutch commerce has naturally aroused strong feeling in Holland, and a vigorous note of protest was sent to Berlin yesterday. The German government must be crazy to give any more of the nations of Europe just grievance against it at such a time as this.

THE ALBERTA OILFIELD

It is refreshing to note, after so much reckless plunging and dishonest booming of the Calgary Oil Wells, that something tangible is, after all, to result from the discovery. Like all similar incidents, wild-cat work never fails to follow successful prospecting, yet it is to be hoped the more sane ones who have honestly endeavored to get at a profitable base of the supply, will find themselves amply repaid for time and expense. Taking up the subject editorially in yesterday's issue, The Toronto Globe says:

> "The Globe wishes to congratulate the courageous and tenacious business men who are putting their money into proving what can now be spoken of with some confidence as the Alberta oilfield. The disgraceful and discreditable gamble in oil territory in Calgary last year went far toward destroying the public interest in the field. Great sums of money which should have been devoted to sinking test wells never got beyond the pockets of the shrewd manipulators of the boom who knew that it was a safer thing to swindle the public than to bore for oil.
> "Fortunately there were others who spent their own money and that of their associates in sinking nearly three thousand feet through the rock strata to the oil-bearing measures. It was a slow, a costly, and a risky proceeding, but the results have justified the faith of Mr. Dingman and the other pioneers of the industry who followed in his footsteps. The recent find of a heavy crude oil quite near the original discovery of gasoline has heartened everyone connected with the industry and will encourage capital to test the field over a wide area.
> "The oilfields of the eastern foothills of the Rockies may yet develop into one of the most important sources of supply within the Empire. Far to the north of Calgary field, in the basin of the Mackenzie, are exposures of bitumen, which may be the visible sign of great deposits of oil far down beneath the earth's surface. The mineral wealth of Alberta is great, and does not consist entirely of coal and ores. The humble oil barrel may win a place in the Provincial coat-of-arms beside Alberta's ripening wheat."

CURRENT COMMENT

The war correspondents are puzzled over the obliteration of the Crown Prince. Perhaps the Kaiser regarded that interview, in which his son spoke of "this senseless war," as a personal reflection.

The United States navy lost an officer and three seamen in the European war zone yesterday. Lieutenant Commander William F. Bricker and three of his men of the yacht Scorpion, stationed at Constantinople, were drowned.

While Lloyd George is jollying British labor in general, Kitchener bluntly tells the London dock hands that they must work more or he will take means to make them. Some of the leaders of the union go farther than Kitchener and charge that some of the men are trying to hold up supplies for the troops.

One of the most remarkable features created by the war is the knitting being done by the hardened criminals of Sing Sing, N.Y., for the benefit of Polish sufferers. Many of them are remarkably dexterous and interested in this humanitarian work, furnishing proof that the divine spark, no matter how latent, is frequently hidden in the most depraved human frame.

Sir Edward Grey said the other day: "Germany, from her experience in the Balkan conference, knew she could count on our good will and that we were ready to do last July what we did before. But Germany refused every suggestion, and on her rests for all time the appalling responsibility for the war." That calls for another interview by Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg.

Hamilton Spectator: "And so Italy must soon be ranked among the allies. Germany has failed to bully her into taking part in the war as one of the Triple Alliance. Germany and Austria have failed to bribe her into a preservation of the existing neutrality. Almost any day now we may expect to hear of the invasion of southern Austria by an Italian army. Austria will have more than she can do to defend herself in that quarter, and must cease to be of use to Germany in Galicia. The end of the whole war may be precipitated sooner than we think."

New York Believes Canadian Firms to be Looked After

NEW YORK, March 23—The American Car & Foundry Company will participate in the big order for shrapnel shells placed with the Canadian Car & Foundry Company by the Russian Government, according to information received in the financial district to-day. This company is preparing bids and is making arrangements to extend its plant for rush work when the business is apportioned out. In quarters acquainted with the terms of the big order it was said that the total would probably be $80,000,000, and all deliveries are to be made within one year.

It is understood that the Russian contract covers the $30,000,000 reported several days ago to have been placed with the New York Air Brake Company and Westinghouse Air Brake Company. The reason the railroad equipment concerns are being favored with orders for shells is that their plants are running on only part time so far as ordinary business is concerned, and, besides, they have lathes and other machinery which can take care of such business the moment the orders are distributed.

As far as is known, the only contracts already sublet in this country by the Canadian Car & Foundry Company are those taken by the New York Air Brake and Westinghouse companies. Canadian companies will be favored to the limit of their capacity before the concerns here are considered, and the fact that additional bids are being called for in the United States is taken to mean that the plants of the Dominion have about all they can handle.

OTTAWA RECRUITING SHOWING NO DECLINE

OTTAWA, March 23.—Nineteen more Toronto University students arrived in Ottawa to-day to join the 7th Artillery Brigade of the third contingent which is being organized in Ottawa. Fifty-one students from Toronto who arrived last week are already outfitted and in barracks. Despite the many calls for men in Ottawa there is still no lack of recruits. Enlisting for this battery only started a little over a week ago. The total establishment of the battery and ammunition column is 279 and the battery is now, with the Toronto men, only twenty-five men short. There have been so many offers indeed that the officers have been able to handpick their men. Of twenty-seven who offered yesterday only seven were accepted.

Recruiting for a new infantry battalion for the 4th contingent to be raised at the capital is also proceeding, though at present only names are being taken as there are no quarters available and no equipment.

"I WAS A NERVOUS WRECK

When I Began Taking Vinol." Mrs. Clayton's Letter Should Interest Every Weak, Nervous, Rundown Woman.

Louisville, Ky.—"I was simply a nervous wreck, and in a weak, run-down condition when a friend asked me to try Vinol. I did so, and received so much benefit from the first bottle I decided to keep on taking it, and as a result I have gained in health and strength right along. I think Vinol is the best medicine in the world for a nervous, weak, run-down system and for elderly people, and I cannot praise it too highly for what it has done for me."—Mrs. W. C. CLAYTON, Louisville, Ky.

There are hundreds of men and women in this vicinity who are on the borderland of nervous prostration, overworked, run-down and nervous. We ask every such person to call at our store for a bottle of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil. Vinol is not a patent secret nostrum, but an honest, tried and true body builder and strength creator of world-wide fame, delicious and easy to take.

Our guarantee to return your money if Vinol does not benefit you should give you confidence to try it.

Canadian Car Gets Order For $30,000,000

Will Manufacture Two Million Shells for Russian Government

MONTREAL, March 23.—The rumors regarding the business the Canadian Car & Foundry Company has secured from the Russian Government were yesterday confirmed when it was learned, on the highest possible authority, that an order for the manufacture of two million shells valued at $30,000,000 had been secured by the local concern.

For some time past prominent officials of the Canadian Car & Foundry Company have been spending a great deal of time in New York, and it was common gossip on the "Street" that negotiations for a large order were about to be closed. All the necessary information and data has now been received and the Canadian Car & Foundry Company will shortly send circulars to between forty and fifty Canadian manufacturers asking for prices on the manufacture of parts of the shells. Any work that may be done by Canadian firms will in no way conflict with the efforts of the local shell committee, as sanction from the committee for their participating in the business will be received by the Canadian Car Company before negotiations with Canadian manufacturers are closed.

The time limit on the order is understood to be in the neighborhood of between ten and eleven months. Operations will be commenced at once and all works shops, or other plants equipped to handle any of the business, will be given a chance to operate to capacity.

One difficulty expected is the transportation of the shells from this country to Russia. Since the outbreak of the war, and especially within the last few weeks, ocean space has been very scarce. Only a few ships are now running from Canadian ports to the Far East, but efforts are being made to have a steamship line subsidized by the Government to operate direct to Russia.

Sailings to three ports are under consideration—first, direct from Eastern Canadian ports to Archangel; second, by way of the Panama Canal to Vladivostok; and third, to Odessa, a port in the Black Sea. Sailings to the latter port, of course, depend on the outcome of the operations of the allied fleet now bombarding the Dardanelles.

To cope with the new business, the Canadian Car & Foundry Company have opened a branch office at 165 Broadway, New York City, and have installed Mr. A. C. Bourne as resident secretary-treasurer. All of the work that cannot be done by manufacturers in this country will be handled by firms in the United States.

The company's senior vice-president, Mr. W. W. Butler, is at present in Petrograd, and Mr. F. A. Skelton, the secretary-treasurer, is in New York. Senator Nathaniel Curry, who has spent most of his time in New York since his return from London, left again last night for that city.

PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION

A trip to California will afford the traveller an infinite variety of attractions. The C.P.R. is ticketing passengers via Chicago and the many routes thence to San Francisco returning via Vancouver and their own Line, or passengers can go via C. P. R. and return via Chicago. The quick trains to Chicago via C.P.R. and the Michigan Central have the most modern C.P.R. equipment so that everything necessary to make travelling comfortable is assured. In addition to visit to Chicago passengers can travel via Omaha and Denver via Kansas City. The route via Salt Lake City or via Williams, whence the Grand Canyon of Arizona is visited can be chosen. The Orange groves at Los Angeles and San Diego are well worth a visit at this season of the year and the Coast Line to San Francisco can be taken through Santa Barbara and Monterey. San Francisco is an interesting city but probably the Exposition is the greatest attraction at the present time. Of the numerous buildings the Americans and all visitors claim that the Dominion of Canada is the handsomest and most attractive, while the exhibits from all over the world are interesting. A visit to Victoria and Vancouver, thence through the Canadian Rockies is the most magnificent of all railway journeys, while the Company's Hotels, which are built in the most attractive spots, have everything that the traveller can desire.

ST. ANDREWS BY THE SEA

Golf on the 18 hole, 7000 yards course at St. Andrews is a pleasure long to be remembered and it is an alluring attraction to ladies and gentlemen. Bowling can be enjoyed on a well kept electrical lighted green.

For those not so engaged there are in all directions perfectly constructed roads, forest lined, and shaded, reaching Sheltered Spots by Ocean and Lake, so that the visitor can choose some favorite drive or the pleasant stroll that brings relaxation and repose in a climate that is exhil-irating. From the broad piazza of the Al-gonquin Hotel, which has just been rebuilt by the C. P. R. there is a panoramic view of a charming scene of land and sea.

The Idea of Canadian Patriotic Fund is This:

The soldiers have gone to fight not for their home town or any particular locality but for all Canada.

The whole of Canada should combine to take proper care of their families.

The Fund is One Fund and each locality is administered by the local branch.

In Belleville for instance, families of the soldiers will be looked after by the local branch acting for the National Association.

All the families throughout Canada will receive aid on the same basis and none will be neglected.

This is a sensible and patriotic plan. Belleville will fall in line. Do all you can but do it now.

"WAR"

• • •

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

How æsthetically our battlefields are painted! Upon a hill-top stands a group of generals; the field-marshal with the glass at his eyes, is dictating to his staff as he sits proudly on a white charger. One hand is stretched dramatically toward the smoke-covered plain. Or he is waving his sword and looking backwards, as if saying to those behind, "Follow me, my children!" Pictures give the magnificent and scenic effects of war without the horrors. They give the superb detail of line and the elevations and landscape, not the flowing blood, the mangled forms, and scenes of disgust. To see only the glitter of arms, the clouds of smoke, the prancing horses, the floating banners, the whirl of action, might inspire a battle-song or an epic, or a masterpiece of painting.

The village is ours—no, the enemy has it—it is once more ours—finally it is the enemy's(but no longer can it be called a village, nothing but a heap of smoking ruins. The inhabitants (was the village not theirs?) had abandoned it early—happy for them—for the shot and shell hit all alike, old and young, women and children. One family had remained behind in this place which yesterday we took, lost, retook, and lost again—an old couple with a married daughter in childbed. The husband chanced to be one of my regiment. "For God's sake, Colonel," he said, as we approached the village, "send me over there to the house with the red roof, for there lives my wife with her crippled old parents. They could not get away." Poor devil, he arrived to see his wife and child killed by an exploding shell, and the old people buried beneath the debris.

Fighting in the open country is terrible enough, but fighting in the midst of homes and human haunts is ten times more cruel. Crashing timbers, burning buildings, smothering smoke and fumes, maddened animals, every building a fortress or barricade, and every window a gun-hole! There was a breastwork heaped up with corpses, the defenders having used the slain as a rampart to shoot behind. One man penned in among the rest was still alive, for I saw him move.

Living still! that is the most horrible condition for the uncared-for wounded. If only some angel, either of compassion or death, might touch these poor wretches with a tender hand!

To-day we had a little cavalry skirmish in the open field. A Prussian dragoon regiment came up, dropped into line, and, with their bridles drawn and sabres over their heads, they galloped down on us. We sprang to meet the attack. No bullets were exchanged. A few paces apart both regiments broke into a thundering "hurrah" (like intoxicated Indians or barbaric Zulus); and so we fell upon each other, horse to horse knee to knee, sabres swinging and crashing down upon the men from both sides. We were soon in such a muddle that we could not use our weapons. The horses rearer and pranced, clanging their hoofs. Once I fell and saw above me these frightful crashing feet within an inch of my head—it was not a pleasant thing.

• • •

Again on the march, with a few skirmishes. Another great sorrow. It ought not to haunt me so when so many are in despair. I should have left poor Puzl at home with his little master, for, as he ran after me, the splinter of a shell tore off his front legs. I heard the mournful howl, but must press on and desert the poor beast, who may not die for twenty-four, no, even forty-eight, hours. "Master, master," he seemed to cry, "don't forsake poor Puzl, and his little heart is breaking." . . . What torments one most is to think that the dying faithful creature misjudged me. It cannot know that when a regiment is flying to attack, leaving behind so many comrades, one cannot command "Halt!" for a little dog. . . and he must have thought me merciless. Many would say, shrugging their shoulders, how can one mind such trifles amidst such great events and such gigantic misfortunes? But not you, my Martha—you will weep for Puzl.

THE HUN'S DIARY

As to the ruthlessness of the methods employed by the German military organization in its conduct of the war, the findings of the British commission are emphatic, and so far as the German nation is responsible for the system which created these horrors, it must, in the opinion of Lord Bryce and his colleagues, be held guilty.

The evidence upon which the commissioners chiefly based their conclusions is evidence obtained from German sources of information, and the report, when issued, is calculated to make a great impression.

IV—The Hun's Official Guidebook

It is my firm belief that the Teuton is by nature and instinct not less refined and gentle than the people of other civilized nations. If he has fallen from the path of grace in latter years it is because he has been blinded by the military ambition of his rulers and the false prophets who, from kindergarten to University, have crammed him with teachings based upon false and meretricious philosophy. From the cradle to the grave he has been lured by false ideals of state, by the phantoms of military ascendency and by the dreams of a Pan-Germanism which should dominate the globe. In Germany the People and the Army are to a great extent interchangeable terms and the amazing way in which the nation has from the standpoint of morals deteriorated since 1870, as proved by the crimes of the soldiers in the field, which have failed so far to elicit the censure of their people at home, is mainly due to these false teachers and the military caste and practice for which these teachers have provided the foundation. Both are jointly and separately responsible. The Supremacy of the State, the Religion of Personal Valor, Mediaeval ideas of the Crown, the "World Mission" of the German peoples, the mysticism and preposterous claims of the Kaiser in all that relates to his position, prerogatives and rights—all these things have loomed so largely in the daily life of the nation that a people naturally virtuous in their domestic life and in many a pattern to the world have for a time lost their mental balance. No people normally sane would have been willing to risk all in a single throw of the dice, and yet Bernhardi, in outlining the prospect of the present war, declared it was a case of "World-power or Downfall" —"neck or nothing," as we say in America.

It is not an entire people that we can indict in the first instance for the the "whole Gospel of Frightfulness," as illustrated in the preceding pages and corroborated times without number by the official reports of Belgian and French Commissions of Enquiry, but the responsible rulers including the German General Staff. To think otherwise would be to libel a great nation whose role in the scheme of civilization still offers a most brilliant vista of possibility and conjecture. By their Professors and Teachers ye shall know them and by that same token I direct the special attention of American readers to "The German War Book," a work of the most singular interest at the present time because it teaches the world what to expect from the German Army. It is a translation of "The Usages of War," a handbook issued by the German General Staff for the guidance of German officers, with a critical introduction by Professor J. H. Morgan. It may be described as the Hun's complete guide or the official statement of the gospel of "frightfulness."

The spirit which pervades it is that of Clough's famous lines:

Thou shalt not kill; but need'st not strive Officially to keep lavie.

though it does not scruple to lay down the most atrocious doctrines and to support them with citations from obsequious German professors. Thus it begins with banning the use of poison, assassination, the killing of prisoners, but qualifies its prohibition in the most remarkable manner:

International law is in no way opposed to the exploitation of the crimes of third parties (assassination, incendiarism, robbery and the like) to the prejudice of the enemy.

So that you may not poison or assassinate members of the enemy's forces yourself, but you may pay third parties to do so. And to ease any qualms of sentimentality the German officers are remined that:

Considerations of chivalry, generosity and honor may denounce in such cases a hasty and unsparing exploitation of such advantages as indecent and dishonorable, but law which is less touchy allows it. "The ugly and inherently immoral aspect of such methods cannot affect the recognition of their lawfulness. The necessary aim of war gives the belligerent the right and imposes upon him according to circumstances, the duty not to let slip the important, it may be decisive, advantages to be gained by such means."—(Professor Luder.)

So prisoners may be murdered:

In case of overwhelming necessity, when other means of precaution do not exist and the existence of prisoners becomes a danger to one's own existence.

Professor Morgan's biting remark is justified that the War Book, "when it inculcates frightfulness is never obscure, and when it advises forbearance is always ambiguous." Thus the duty of terrorizing the civil population is stated in these uncompromising terms:

A war conducted with energy cannot be directed merely against the combatants of the enemy State and the positions they occupy, but it will, and must in like manner, seek to destroy the total intellectual and material resources of the latter. Humanitarian claims, such as the protection of men and their goods, can only be taken into consideration in so far as the nature and object of the war permit.

It is true, the German General Staff proceed, "that chivalry, Christian thought, higher civilization, and recognition of one's own advantage have led to attempts to modify the severity of war by creating a codex belli, a law of war. But—the usual qualification:

All these attempts have hitherto, with some few exceptions to be mentioned later, completely failed ——If, therefore, the expression "the law of war" is used, it must be understood that by it is meant not a lex scripta introduced by international agreements ——but only a limitation of arbitrary behavior which custom and convention, human friendliness, and a calculating egotism have erected, but for the observance of which there exists to express sanction, but only "the fear of reprisals" decides. That is to say, the German officer may order what crimes he likes to be committed upon non combatants, women and children, or prisoners, provided only he is fairly sure that there will not be retaliation.

Moreover, it is his duty to be inhumane. The efforts of the nineteenth century, as in the Geneva and Hague Conventions, to prevent unnecessary cruelty, are denounced as "sentimentality and flabby emotion." The officer must be on his guard against such weakness. He is a child of the times, and as such liable to be corrupted by sentiment:

The danger that in this way he will arrive at false views about the essential character of war must not be lost sight of. The danger can only be met by a thorough study of war itself. By steeping himself in military history an officer will be able to guard himself against excessive humanitarian notions, it will teach him that certain severities are indispensable to war, nay more, that the only true humanity very often lies in a ruthless application of them.

Yet out of their own mouths the Germans are condemned. One "law of perfect obligation" which this treatise does admit is the duty of observing the inviolability of neutral States:

The belligerent States have to respect the inviolability of the neutral and the undisturbed exercise of its sovereignty in its home affairs, to abstain from any attack upon the same even if the necessity of war should make such an attack desirable.

The invasion of Luxemburg and Belgian is proclaimed unpardonable even by the cynics who compiled this handbook of treachery. Further than this, the German Staff declare that the neutral State, not only may, but must, forbid the passage of troops through its country, and thus make nonsense of the diatribes against Belgium which fill the German Press and are being scattered broadcast through neutral countries.

Again, dealing with the offenses committed by the German armies in Belgium, we have the following unexceptionable passage:

Movable property, which in earlier times was the incontestable booty of the victor, is held by modern opinion to be inviolable. The carrying away of gold, watches, rings, trinklets, or other objects of value is therefore to be regarded as robbery, and correspondingly punishable. No plundering but downright burglary is it for a man to take away things out of an unoccupied house or at a time when the occupant happens to be absent

Any form of violence may be applied to the non-combatant population so as to "smash their spiritual and material life." They may be compelled "to furnish information about their own Army, its strategy, its resources, and its military secrets. The majority of writers of all nations are unanimous in their condemnation of this measure, Nevertheless it cannot be entirely dispensed with; doubtless it will be applied with regret, but the argument of war will frequently make it necessary." Applied it has been by the Germans in this war, in some cases with the tortures of the Inquisition to compel brave men and women to betray their motherland

Again, though public opinion and, as the German Staff should have added the Hague Convention, signed by the German diplomatists forbid the taking of hostages and their execution for the real or alleged offences of others, this was the only method which promised to be effective against the doubtless unauthorized, indeed the criminal, behavior of a fanatical population. Herein lies its justification under the laws of war, but still more in the fact that it proved completely successful.

Returns From the European Front

Mr. S. U. Dancey, Formerly a Resident of Belleville Returns With Valued Experiences

S. N. Dancey, Canadian War Correspondent, recently returned from the firing line in Europe, was a visitor to Belleville today. Mr. Dancey had promised to say a few words at the big Patriotic Meeting in the Opera House last night, but his car found the road a little too heavy in coming back from Wellington, and he was unfortunately too late.

But Mr. Dancey will deliver an illustrated war lecture in the Opera House on Monday evening, April 5th, when he will tell his thrilling story to the citizens of Belleville, his native city. On the same afternoon he will address the members of the Women's Canadian Club, taking as his subject, "The Red Cross in the Field."

Mr. Dancey is the only Canadian journalist who even succeeded getting behind the German lines and into Germany. He spent over two months with the German troops and many of the pictures he will show were presented to him by Prussian officers. He has been a personal witness of fourteen battles and has also been with the British, French and Belgian armies.

Interviewed today by the Intelligencer, Mr. Dancey recited a thrilling narrative of his experiences in Europe:

"For six months I followed closely operations in Western Europe and I can give you one assurance in all confidence, and it is that Germany's back has been broken and the flower of her army is hors de combat today.

"You can well expect startling developments in the course of the next few weeks. There are nearly four million of new men lying behind the lines in France, and at the opportune moment, these new armies will be thrown into the struggle and with good effect."

Discussing conditions as he found them in Germany, Mr. Dancey stated that it was impossible that Germany could resist longer than the month of September. The question of food, money and ammunition is beginning to have its effect on the destinies of the Prussian armies."

Asked as to whether the story of German cruelties in Belgium was true, Mr. Dancey was most emphatic in his protestation that the half had never yet been told to the outer world. "The sacrifice and suffering of the Belgian people is but a passing moment as compared with the inhuman methods employed by the Kaiser soldier's," he declared. "The fact that we do not hear so much of cruelties these days is due to the change in the character of the German soldier. The professional soldier, bent only on killing and drinking has given way to the later classes, drawn from the civilian ranks, and materially, there is more humanitarianism in the latter.

"Of one thing you can rest assured," he concluded, "the success of the allied armies is assured, and it is only a matter of a few months when the German war machine will be completely crushed."

Mr. Dancey carries with him his German passports and they make most interesting and valued documents.

An Evening at The High School

Satisfied spectators were continually passing through the High School last night, spending a good deal of their time in the "curio" room. Tables ran along every side of the room, covered with everything from a Malay kris to a set of buffalo teeth. One corner of the room had a particularly grim aspect, it being guarded by a small cannon. One table was taken up by embroidery, Indian work and foreign dress, another was covered by weapons, ancient and modern. Two other tables are covered by ancient books, dainty hand painted china, shells, stuffed birds and animals and carved woodwork, while on the walls are exquisite paintings by pupils and ex-pupils.

The big auditorium is crowded by pictures by the great artists. It is impossible to try to describe them, because of the beauty and variety. Paintings of Greek, Roman and Egyptian architecture face life-like representations of children, animals, modern and old country life.

During the evening several musical selections were rendered by Mrs. Col. Campbell, Mrs. Leavens, Mrs. MacColl, Mr. Mouck, and Mr. Ross. Mr. J. J. B. Flint and Miss Anning gave enjoyable and profitable lectures on "Art."

From 4 o'clock until 6 o'clock refreshments were served, and several musical selections were given by pupils.

EXERCISE AND GRECIAN BEAUTY

WHAT IT MEANS

Many thousands of women are nowadays paying attention to physical culture and the proper exercise of their body muscles, where, thirty years ago or fifty years ago there was no thought expended on this science, which is quite necessary to physical beauty. The reason the Greeks, both men and women, excelled in beautiful and symmetrical forms was because of the attention they paid to the proper exercise. Then, too, they were untrammeled by corsets, shoes and the inconveniences of clothing. To the minds of some women the idea of physical exercise conveys only the idea of hard fatiguing work. Mild exercise continued day after day is best for the body and spirits and health. Without proper exercise there can be no health, and without health there can be no real beauty.

There is no stronger proof of the sound remedial value of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription than that it restores the wasted form to its wonted roundness.

The mighty restorative power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear—removes pain and misery at certain times and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It is a wonderful prescription prepared only from Nature's roots with glycerine, with no alcohol to falsely stimulate. It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, dragging-down sensations, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. Address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

Captain O'Flynn Writes Home

Says Belleville Boys are Well and Always Ready for Action

Mrs. O'Flynn received three communications from Captain O'Flynn dated 4th, 7th and 8th of March. He said they had been relieved from the trenches and that he considered they were much more fortunate than the English troops who held the trenches through January and Februray, as the condition of maters then could hardly be described. He commends especially the bravery and steadiness of the English troops and says it is admitted by all that their conduct during the winter campaign was magnificent.

He writes that Dick (Lieut. Ponton) and he are in the best of health and that he had been chatting with some of the Belleville boys on the preceeding day, and they were all well. He specially mentions Mr. Fred Wallace, who is with the artillery, and is getting along fine and said Fred never looked better. He wished to have the information sent on to Mrs. Robert Wallace.

When writing the last letter he says that the experience in the trenches is such a novel one that one never will forget it. The Germans are a cheerful bunch of fellows and they often hear them singing at night and at times not a shot is heard, nothing but an awful silence, which is much worse than a fusilade of shots. At times if it were not for the casualties one would imagine they were all actors playing a part for the movies.

A few nights before the letter was written a group of Germans in the trenches started to sing "God Save the King", and it sounded odd coming from the trenches. The Captain says he had often pictured in his mind what the trenches and grounds between them were like but his mental pictures were all wrong, everything is so different from what he imagined.

He says he never was so proud of the British soldiers as he is to-day. It is wonderful what they have gone through during the long winter months.

He wrote a long and interesting letter, going into many personal matters and at the conclusion said that he might not be able to write as regularly in the future as in the past, as demands upon them were increasing all the time and sometimes it was almost impossible to write.

FOR SORE MUSCLES, STRAINS, SPRAINS, BRUISES

Rub in a few drops of Absorbine Jr. and you will be agreeably surprised at the prompt relief. It reduces inflammation and swelling—allays pain and soreness.

Used as a Rub-down after violent exercise or physical exertion it puts vim and energy into jaded muscles, limbers the joints and gives the body the glow of health. Rub-down made by adding one ounce Absorbine, Jr. to a quart of water or witch hazel.

Absorbine Jr. is more than a liniment—it is a positive germicide and therefore its uses and efficiency are doubled. Applied to cuts, wounds, sores, it kills the germ, makes the part aseptically clean, and promotes rapid healing. Economical as only a few drops are required at an application.

Made of herbs and safe to use anywhere.

At all druggists, $1.00 per bottle or postpaid. Manufactured only by W. F. Young, P.D.F., 457 Lymans Bldg., Montreal, Can.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Application for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

PATRIOTIC GONG STRIKES TWELVE AT GRIFFINS OPERA HOUSE

of peace which have just been commemorated between the United States of Canada. As Canadians we can look with pride on the fact that we have not committed an unfriendly act to the neighbors to the south of us. We in giving are doing nothing more or less than our duty. Our sons are fighting for British citizenship, and they are going to be successful. Our duty towards them is to do all we can for them. We hope for a speedy termination of this great struggle. (Loud applause).

Col. Ponton, in his usual eloquent and affable manner, moved a vote of thanks to the speakers, and Mr. R. Tannahill seconded the same. This was heartily endorsed by the audience. The meeting closed with the National Anthem and cheers for the King, Hon. Mr. Rogers, Mr. McDonald and the chairman of meeting.

NOTES.

During the evening the chairman announced that the committee had received the promise of a subscription of $2,000 from a citizen whose name he was not at liberty to announce at the time, and that several promises of $500 had been received. The Hon. Mr. Rogers read a telegram from Toronto expressing the regret of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen D. Lazier at not being able to attend and announcing through him their contribution of $500 to the Belleville fund, with the promise of more if the war continued longer than this year. Good for Mr. Lazier! Belleville's boys are coming over with the goods.

Mr. R. Tannahill, Manager of the Bank of Montreal, and Treasurer of the Patriotic Fund here, announced to the committee last evening that he would contribute $500. Well done, Mr. Treasurer.

All these promise well for the ultimate success of the campaign. They are just preliminary victories. The real fight for conquest begins tomorrow—Thursday morning. The members of the various teams meet tonight, at 5.30 at the Y. M. C. A. for supper, following which a selection of the names to be canvassed by each team will be made. Let every worker be present. Supper at the 'Y.' at 6.30 and work immediately afterwards at the Headquarters.

An excellent example of the spirit in which the citizens of Belleville are responding to this Patriotic Appeal is found in what the Staff of the Ontario School for the Deaf did yesterday. At a meeting of the staff the question of what each should do was fully discussed, and it was decided to give at least 3 per cent. of their entire year's salary and make payments in March, April and May of this year. This unselfish example on the part of the Staff means that the Patriotic Fund will receive over ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS. — A noble example. Let the citizens of Belleville all do as well.

The committee in charge are deeply indebted to Mr. H. B. Stock, local manager of the Bell Telephone Co., for the free use of a telephone. Mr. Stock volunteered this service and now if anything is wanted just phone 30,000—that's our number—Thirty Thousand. A real contribution to the cause.

Offers of help are pouring in to the committee from all sources, all of which are gratefully acknowledged. Your help will be appreciated. Call around.

Master Jas. Gill of 193 James St., called at Headquarters yesterday to say that he wanted to do something, but had no money. He would, however, give Four Pairs of Pigeons. Well done, Jim! We'll sell them at auction. A good example. Real estate, horses, or anything that will bring good money will be accepted by the canvassers.

Among the visitors from Ottawa yesterday was Belleville's oldest and most distinguished citizen — Senator Sir Mackenzie Bowell, ex-Premier of the Dominion of Canada. Sir Mackenzie spoke at the meeting at the Opera House last evening and at the conclusion announced to the committee that he would contribute $1,000 to the Belleville Patriotic Fund on behalf of himself and family. Well done, Sir Mackenzie!

Ottawa, Ont., March 21, 1915.

J. F. Wills, Esq., Chairman Patriotic Committee, Belleville, Ont.

Arrived here all right. Mrs. Corby will subscribe $500.00 towards your good work.

War Consuming Wool Of Billion Sheep Per Year

Only 603,957,000 in the World

Because of This, Prediction is Made That Everyone Will be Forced to Wear Cotton.

The following article from the "Chicago Apparel Gazette" sets forth plainly the condition of the wool markets of the world, showing the quantity available and the excessive demand brought about by the requirements of 10,000,000 men on the firing line whose uniforms have to be replenished every four weeks:—

"The following are quotations from a very interesting and significant statement on the situation issued by Renstorf, Lyon & Co., cotton brokers, New York City: "At the most conservative calculation the military operations in Europe are consuming wool at an annual rate equivalent to the product of one billion sheep per year. According to the most authoritative estimates which we have been able to obtain there are approximately 603,954,000 sheep in the world. The most recent figures make the distribution of sheep as follows:—

North America	67,653,443
South America	112,782,018
Europe	161,888,831
Asia	110,058,874
Africa	51,357,381
Oceania (including Australia	107,217,140
	603,957,717

"The world's production of wool available for commerce which of course does not include the home consumption of ? ?? *shrdlu countries, is placed at 2,880,889,000 pounds (unscoured). In all the destruction of the present war nothing approaches the waste in clothing. Most of the 10,000,000 men on the firing line are peasants who ordinarily get a suit of clothes once in four or five years. Many of them make an overcoat last from ten to fifteen years.

"Reliable estimates made by members of the British and French war supply agencies, place the life of a uniform at four or five weeks, and mufflers, four or five weeks, underwear less than a month; socks less than two weeks; and overcoats not more than five weeks.

"Under the new rule put in force bby the British Army Medical Corps every soldier on the firing line is given a complete new clothing outfit every four weeks. The old clothing is then burned as a precaution against disease.

"The average uniform as demanded in specifications and completed orders from this country which have sent to Europe contains 6½ pounds of fine clean wool, while the overcoat has 10 lbs. of clean wool. Here alone are 16½ pounds of wool which has been scoured and made free of 'nails' (small hairs that drop off when wool is spun into yarn) which represents the outer equipment of one soldier. One pound of unscoured wool contains in some grades less than five ounces of clean wool; and the loss through manufacture results usually in the cloth retaining only in the neighborhood of thirty per cent. of the original unscoured weight.

"On such a basis the overcoat and uniform of one man on the firing line represents on the most conservative calculation 33 lbs. of wool on the back of sheep. For 10,000,000 fighting men and 10,000,000 men in reserve this means 660,000,000 pounds of wool in the grease to supply one overcoat and one uniform for each soldier.

"For 10,000,000 men on the firing line alone at the average rate of renewal figured on, it would require the product of nearly one Billion sheep per year for just one overcoat and uniform per month, and with no allowance for socks, sweaters, underwear or mufflers, and without making any provision whatever for the soldier held in reserve.

"As the war progresses there will ndoubtedly have to be substituted larger and larger amounts of cotton for wool in uniforms. The governments of belligerent nations are willing to make almost any sacrifice to obtain wool, and they are now paying prices which no one else can pay. The price of wool is advancing by leaps and bounds. Shoddies and rags in which reclaimable wool is found are at the highest level in many years.

"The buying of wool for the use of contractors for army uniforms has been on such a tremendous scale, and prices have gone so high, that it has been impossible for more than a few woollen manufacturers in America to lay up a supply for the future. Imports of wool into this country normally reach about 200,000,000 pounds of unscoured wool per year. They are now running at the rate of less than one-tenth of that, while the Domestic production of wool which is normally about 325,000,000 pounds of fleece wool per year, has fallen below that figure owing to the slaughter of sheep for meat.

"The European nations for at least seven months of the year will insist on obtaining woollen garments for their soldiers for hygienic reasons. Eventually more cotton will have to be used, but this will be because the supply of wool has become practically exhausted."

Dressmaking Prices

In order that we may have a large number of ladies try our new Dressmaker, we are offering remarkably low prices in this department.

For Dresses we will charge from $10 to $15; and for

Cloth Suits, we will charge from $12 to $15 for the making.

These garments will receive the personal attention of Miss Cook and will be turned out in the best style and workmanship.

We may say that these prices are about one half what is charged for the same class of work in larger cities. We will be pleased to show you the new materials and give estimates for garments completed.

You need have no question about Miss Cook's ability to please you. Her testimonials from former patrons and the garments she has already completed are most satisfactory. In addition to this, you have our personal guarantee.

She has a first class staff in her workroom and will be glad to have you give her a trial order.

Don't Cough Your Throat Sore "Nerviline" Will Cure You Quickly

THE ANNOYANCE OF A BAD COUGH SOOTHED AWAY IN ONE DAY.

Nothing so bad for the throat as coughing, and nothing half so annoying as to have some one near by that is hacking, sneezing, or constantly clearing the throat.

Rub on Nerviline—it will save you all further pain and distress. Even one good rub with this soothing, penetrating remedy will bring the finest relief, will take out that rasping soreness, will stop that irritating tickle that makes you want to cough so much.

Nerviline isn't something new. It has a record of forty years of wonderful success behind it.

In rubbing on Nerviline you use something safe, reliable, and sure to cure. Its action is marvellous. The way it sings in through the tissues—the way it penetrates to the seat of the congestion is really a wonder.

For chronic colds, coughs, or sore throat you can't beat this trusty old family remedy. Its name spells cure for any sore of pain in the joints or muscles. Try it for rheumatism, rub it on for sciatica or lumbago, test it out for neuralgia or headache—in every case you'll find amazing virtue and curative power in Nerviline.

Most families keep the large 50c. bottle always handy on the shelf; trial size 25c., at all dealers in medicine, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

OUR WARRANT FOR SOLICITING SUPPORT FROM OUR CITIZENS

In soliciting contributions to the Belleville Patriotic Fund the committee are anxious that the request be supported by the reasons for so acting. Occasionally we tell one another why we should contribute and let it go at that. But there is and are more than one reason. To put these before the people we re-print here ten statements. Any one is sufficient to convince. Taken altogether they should be irresistable.

1—I owe to my country, and to the Empire of which we are a part, either to fight myself or to help make it possible for others to fight in this supreme struggle.

2—As a Canadian I have enjoyed the privileges and protection of British Citizenship and have never yet been called upon to contribute to or in defence of the Empire.

3—I have not, as yet, paid any war tax. My Mother Country has borne the burden of my protection and alone.

4—In this hour of trial I desire Great Britain to realize that every Canadian is upholding and supporting her cause.

5—The war in which we are engaged is a righteous cause, a struggle for truth, liberty and for the sacredness of treaties and the given word.

6—I cannot go myself, but I can help to make it possible for others to go by guaranteeing that their families will be provided for in their absence.

7—Every soldier who has gone from Canada is as truly my representative as he who has gone or will go from Belleville.

8—The object of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is to make provision for all families of all soldiers going from Canada to the war.

9—I know I am subscribing to a fund which will assist the family whose bread-winner has answered his country's call. Those who have gone to the front are making greater sacrifices than anything I can do at home.

10—An unparalleled crisis has arisen in the world's history which calls for supreme sacrifice on my part. I should do my duty. I should fight or pay.

—THE PATRIOTIC FUND COMMITTEE.

TODAY IS THE DAY TO PAY! PAY! PAY!

The Honor of Belleville is at Stake, Citizens Duty to Posterity Is to Give Today

CITIZENS OF BELLEVILLE: You have a solemn duty to perform today and tomorrow. At no time in the history of our city has there been such a demand for liberality on your part, and probably never again in history, and certainly, never again in our lives, will there be such a demand. So each and every individual must give to the utmost limit of his means to save the fair home of our city from a disgrace which will go down in history.

What will happen if we do not do our share? This is what will happen: The citizens of Kingston, of Peterborough, of German Berlin and other loyal cities of Canada must take care of OUR soldiers' families; of these families that WE pladged ourselves, solemnly, to protect and provide for, must do Belleville's share as well as their own. Such a condition of affairs seems impossible, but the only alternative is for YOU, READER, to give to your utmost or forever hang your head in shame in this loyal community.

TODAY, 64 of Belleville's Citizens, of Belleville's busiest Citizens from every walk in life, will leave their various businesses and occupations to call upon YOU and receive your donation. Be on the look-out for them, and if you want advice, ask them. They will explain how you can give MORE than you can afford; and that's what must be had. MORE than you can afford. Because our lads in the trenches are giving more than they can afford for us. Keep that in mind when you are figuring on what you can afford to give. Picture these men, who are there in France, suffering privations, hunger, sickness and even death to preserve for us that FREEDOM which makes it possible for us to GIVE.

BELLEVILLIANS BE BRITISH, AND GIVE. GIVE. GIVE. WE MUST HAVE $30,000 TODAY AND TOMORROW. YOUR BIT WILL HELP IT.

The Campaign for the $30,000, which we'll surely get, was launched with a supper for all the workers at the Y.M.C.A. at 6.30 last evening, provided by the Argyl Chapter I. O. D. E. and Queen Mary Institute. The enthusiasm was infectuous, and every one of the workers displayed an eagerness to climb into the fray. After the supper the committees met at the Fund Headquarters to complete arrangements for today's canvass. Not a stone was left unturned to make the Canadian Patriotic Fund feel mean to think that Belleville's loyalty was placed at so low a figure as $30,000.

RUSSIAN BATTALION WITH THE CANADIANS

So Many Muscovites Offering in Ottawa and Elsewhere That Suggestion of Separate Unit is Finding Favor—Recruiting Record Maintained

OTTAWA, March 24.—So many Russians have been offering themselves for service in the Canadian Overseas Contingents, that there is some talk of forming a Russian battalion to serve with the Canadians.

Many Russians have already enlisted, but the difficulty is that many cannot speak English and it is impossible to enlist them, even if they have had former military service.

During the past few days a number of Russians have applied to enlist for the new service battalion of the Governor-General's Foot Guards. It is believed that the news of the fall of the great Austrian fortress of Przemysl has led to the sudden offer from so many Russians. However, most of them have so far been refused on account of their lack of knowledge of English.

Recruiting is very satisfactory for this Fourth Contingent unit. The 38th Ottawa Regiment, it is now found, when all the companies are gathered together, is two or three hundred over strength. The additional will be either transferred to the new Fourth Contingent unit, or to some other Ontario regiment which is under strength.

FIGHT ZEPPELINS OVER PARISIAN CITY

Temps Announces Change of Policy—Projectiles from Aeroplane Guns Increase Danger

PARIS, March 24.—While the Zeppelins did not renew their attack on Paris last night, "alarms and excursions" were the order in the capital. From 9 p.m. until 3 a.m. the city rang with trumpet blases. Lights were extinguished, relighted, and extinguished again. Parisians rushed eagerly about the streets and through the balconies, oblivious of the danger and heedless of the regulations.

The Temps hints that a new decision arrived at by the authorities prevented the raiders' arrival. Saturday the authorities opposed the idea of an aerial combat above the city. Now The Temps warns Parisians to keep to cover in future, lest projectiles from the cannon on the French aeroplanes do greater damage than the Zeppelin bombs.

"No available means to destroy the raiders now will be neglected," says The Temps.

WATCH THE THERMOMETER

The heat of the campaign will be registered in front of the FUND HEADQUARTERS at Pinnacle and Bridge Streets, as a huge thermometer has been placed there for the benefit of the citizens. Watch the mercury climb towards the $30,000 mark. Also take to heart the inscription, "What are you doing to raise the mercury?" DO YOUR BIT.

Knocked Down Robbed in Street

Montreal Man Set upon by Thug and Relieved of Five Hundred Dollars

MONTREAL, March 24.—Police and Detectives are hunting all over the city today for the bold highwayman who this morning knocked down Jas. O'Brien, a collector in the employ of the Montreal, Light, Heat and Power Company, and took from him a sum of money said to be five hundred dollars.

O'Brien was on his way to the head office from the branch office of the company, at the corner of St. Catherine and University streets, and when passing the corner of Beaver Hall, Hill and Belmont street, he was knocked on the head by somebody who darted out of the shadow and attacked him.

He had no chance to recognize the men who hit him—he says there were more than one—but as soon as he recovered, he gave information to the police. Lieutenant Kavanagh and two policemen are working on the case. The men pulled O'Brien into a lane off Belmont street and one was seen running out of the lane into Dorchester Street by Mrs. Johnson, who keeps a tailoring shop on the corner of Dorchester street and the lane. She declares she would be able to identify the man, if she were to see him again.

At the office of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company today, officials said they had not ascertained the exict amount of money O'Brien had in his possession at the time of the hold up, but they thought it would hardly be as much as five hundred dollars, as had been reported.

MR. HEARST FOLLOWS SIR JAMES WHITNEY

Mail and Empire Pleased, Globe Says Bar Will Continue "Deadly Work Uncurbed"

TORONTO, March 24—Commenting on the legislation of the Ontario government announced last night, the Globe says:

"Premier Hearst's first measure dealing with the liquor traffic leaves the bar to continue its deadly work uncurbed."

The Mail and Empire says: Premier Hearst is following in the path of Sir James Whitney, "whose government did more in nine years to lessen the evils of the liquor traffic than all his predecessors in the thirty-eight years of Ontario's history as a province of the Dominion had done—carefully guaging the means to the end and making sure to be right before going ahead.'

CANNOT PAY TOO HIGH TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN TROOPS

(Canadian Press Special)

British Headquarters France, March 25.—Sir John French told an Associated Press correspondent today there was no doubt of the outcome of the war. "I was never so confident of victory as I am today. I am as confident as General Grant was when he took command of the army of the Potomac. He kept at it, and so shall we.

"The most critical time of the whole campaign," he said, "was on the retreat from Mons to Le Cateau, when in open country and in a dangerous position, the German ambition for the annihilation of our little army might have been realized if our cavalry had not been equal to its task of covering the flanks of our steady disciplined regulars." He thinks there is an inclination to exaggerate the importance of the artillery. "The weapons which decide the day are the rifle and the machine gun, and the infantry is still the queen of battles.

"The conduct of the Germans," said Sir John, "has been bad, very bad. I know that it has been, but it has varied, depending upon the commanders. If a commander approves of outrages, they occur."

Speaking of the French army, the British commander-in-chief said they have the dash of Napoleon's days. Man for man they are better than the Germans and their army has continually improved, while the German army has deteriorated, of which we have abundant evidence.

"Neuve Chapelle was an important victory. It proved that with a strong push we could put the enemy out of a well fortified position and hold what we gained."

Sir John concluded by saying that the conduct of the British Territorials had surpassed expectations. "As for the Canadians, I cannot pay too high a tribute to them."

M. P. Proud Of His Boy

Son of Dr. Clarke Distinguished Himself in Action

OTTAWA, March 24.—Dr. Michael Clark, of Red Deer, is probably today's proudest parliamentarian. This afternoon he received through the Militia Department, from the officer who commanded the squad of fifty members of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, in their charge upon the capture of German trenches in Belgium, a message warmly congratulating him upon the "gallant and soldierly conduct" of his son James Albert Clark, who participated in the achievement. The message was followed by congratulations tendered to Dr. Clark, by Premeir Borden and General Sam Hughes on behalf of the Canadian Government.

This morning Dr. Clark received a letter from "the boy" himself. In it he writes modestly of the celebrated charge, as follows:

"Since last writing you we have had our first bayonet charge. The Germans had a trench rather close to ours, so we had to take it. There were fifty in the charge, including snipers. To say the least, it was a very warm corner. We crawled out of our trench and were within a few yards of the Germans before they noticed us. Then, so to speak, hell broke loose. Machine guns and volleys of rifle fire make quite a noise, but we stuck with them and put them on the run. It was rather exciting, but I guess we will have quite a lot of it before long."

OTTAWA'S HORSE SHOW CANCELLED

OTTAWA, March 24—The cancellation for this year of the Ottawa Horse Show was announced today. Owing to the war and the fact that many of the members are at the front, it was deemed best to call everything off. Hon. Clifford Sifton's famous hunters and jumpers are to be sold shortly by auction at New York. Other local owners will likely exhibit their horses on the American side only.

AUSTRIA MASSES HALF MILLION TROOPS TO FIGHT ITALIANS

ROME, March 25.—(Special.)—A half million Austrian troops are now massed in southern Tyrol and the Trentino, where strategical organization for a fortnight have been carried on with feverish activity, indicating that invasion is feared to be imminent.

Practically all villages between Susana and Lake Garda have been evacuated by their inhabitants. Many houses along the frontier have been dynamited, so as not to hamper the range of guns and to destroy cover to an evading army.

The eastern portion of the city of Rovera has been razed and the debris used to improvise fortifications. Field batteries are posted on every point of vantage. Trees have been ruthlessly felled everywhere.

The region is entirely devastated. Heavy guns are mounted at an altitude of 7,000 feet. The inhabitants along the frontier are treated as spies and closely watched.

The Austrian defensive preparations are on such a vast scale that practically everything is known to the Italian Government, including detailed particulars as to calibre, position and range of every Austrian gun. The task of the Italian intelligence department is easy, as the inhabitants spontaneously supply all information, and urge the Italian brethren to hasten their deliverance.

A Geneva despatch states that the Italian Government ordered the seizure yesterday at Luino, near the Swiss frontier of 22 freight cars containing graphite, sulphur and other supplies said to have destined for the Krupp gun works at Essen. An Italian agent, it is also reported has been arrested on the charge of purchasing the supplies for the enemy.

Turks Routed On Suez Canal

Column of 1,000 Appears Near the Suez and Is Put to Flight—Germans With It

LONDON, March 24.—A statement was given out by the Official Press Bureau last evening telling of a defeat inflicted on a Turkish force operating against the Egyptian town of Suez. The statement says:

"On the 22nd instant, at dawn, one of our patrols discovered a party of the enemy near El Kubri post, opposite Suez. Shots were exchanged.

"Aeroplanes estimated the number at about 1,000, composed of infantry, artillery and a few cavalry.

"The guns at El Kubri opened fire and inflicted casualties, whereupon the enemy retired and formed a camp eight miles east of the Suez Canal.

"Early this morning, a force under General Sir George Younghusband attacked and routed the enemy, who is now in full retreat.

"A prisoner says this force came direct from Bir El Saba, having taken twelve days en route, and that General von Traumer and three other German officers were with it."

Special Attention

The Campaign Committee wishes the Citizens of Belleville to distinctly understand that while an effort is being made to canvass as many of the citizens as possible today and tomorrow, that in such a short time, and with the number of workers who have volunteered, that it is impossible to personally visit nearly all the Citizens of the City. The Committee wishes to appeal to every Citizen to contribute what he or she can whether canvassed or not. The headquarters of the Fund at the corner of Bridge and Pinnacle—opposite post office, is open all day and evening where any contribution—regardless of size—will be gratefully received. Let everyone do their best and do it voluntarily. Phone 30,000.

To Increase Senate to 96

Two More for the Prairie Provinces and Three for British Columbia

OTTAWA, March 25.—Special—Sir Robert Borden has given notice of a resolution in the form of an address to the King for an amendment to the constitution. It asks that the British North America Act, 1867, be amended, first to increase the number of Senators from 72 to 96. Although 72 was the number fixed in 1867 there have been several increases since up to the present total of 87. The amendment will thus provide an increase of nine. The nine will be made up by increasing the representation of Manitoba from four to six, of Saskatchewan from four to six, of Alberta from four to six, and of British Columbia from three to six.

Owing, no doubt, to the high price of flour, rhubarb pies are being erected without a roof, which is an improvement.

TWO GERMAN BATTALIONS CUT UP AND PUT TO FLIGHT

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 25.—A Reuter despatch from Petrograd says: According to a semi-official statement, two German battalions were completely cut up and another put to flight when the Germans attempted to recapture trenches taken by the Russians on Tuesday, near Karaska, North Poland. The booty taken at Przemysl included 500 wagons and 5,000 tons of coal.

A despatch from Geneva says the Austrians admit the loss of only six generals, 2,500 officers and 70,000 men in the surrender of Przemysl.

A Berlin despatch says Dr. Karl Liebknecht, the famous Socialist member of Parliament who has displeased the government by voting against the budget has been mustered into the Landsturm and assigned to service in Alsace.

A prominent American business man at Copenhagen, returned from a visit to Germany says the commercial classes there are very despondent. German business men admitted to him that Germany is certain to be defeated and they believed the war would end in August.

General Larne, commanding a division in the French army has been killed by a bullet while inspecting the trenches.

TERRIFIC FIGHT RAGING IN THE CARPATHIANS

Austria Engaged In Life or Death Struggle in the Carpathians—Ossowetz Wins Fight—Germans Withdraw Big Guns and Abandon Siege

LONDON, March 25.—Special—On the eastern front all eyes are centred on the gigantic struggle now raging in the Carpathians, midway between the Dukla Pass and the Uzok Pass. All reports agree in regarding this as the most sanguinary battle of the campaign. It is the decisive blow at the Austrian army, and the fall of Przemysl was the signal for a general Russian advance in force. No decisive result is expected for several days, but the Russians claim to be advancing.

Reports from Berlin confirm the view held that the Russians have flung their whole weight in this region against the enemy, now depressed by the failure to relieve the Przemysl garrison.

A most important official announcement has been made in Petrograd, says the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Company, that the Germans since Sunday have removed all but four of their heavy batteries from before Ossowetz. The Russian statement adds:

"A couple of 42-centimetre howitzers were abandoned after the first battle, one of which was damaged by our fire. Shots from the howitzers failed to crush the masonry of the fortress. Superiority in artillery fire was distinctly on our side. Not only was the German attack far from endangering the Ossowetz forts, but the enemy failed to dislodge our infantry from its field works.

A Petrograd despatch states: Already the Russians have begun to burst the southern barriers across the Carpathian passes, where they had been on the defensive since December, when the Germans launchd their great scheme to help the Austrians and outflank the Russian left from Hungary. The column which was defeated in the last Austro-German attempt to relieve Prezemysl has again attacked with tremendous energy. After seventeen charges the Russians drove the enemy westward, themselves having to wade neck-deep through the swift current of the River San, which mountain snows had flooded.

This latest initiative on the part of the Russian extends westwards beyond the Dukla Pass.

SAID BATTLESHIP WAS STRANDED ON REEF

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, Mar. 25.—Jesse Boyd, an officer on the American steamer Carib, sunk by a mine in the North Sea, reached here today after some time spent at Bremer-Haven, Germany. A German officer told him the Karlsruhe, after having stranded on a reef last December was destroyed by the crew to prevent her falling into the enemy's hands. Lieut. Weddigen, commanding the Submarine U9, told him German is preparing "the greatest naval surprise of the war," but refused to give particulars.

ALLIES REPULSE ATTACKS

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS March 255.—This afternoon's official statement: In the Champagne district there was yesterday a fairly lively artillery engagement. In the neighborhood of Hill No. 196 we repulsed three German attacks.

In Argonne a German attack at Fontaine failed. At Sparges we repulsed three counter attacks.

On the remainder of the front there was nothing to report.

ENCLOSED A CHECK

(Canadian Press Special)

OTTAWA, Ont., Mar. 25.—The case of Ernest Powell, Ottawa drug clerk, who made a profit of sixty-three hundred dollars on medical supplies to the Militia Department, came to a sudden end today when the committee received a letter from Powell, stating that he did not consider it honorable to keep the money and enclosing a check for the amount.

ROUND UP AUSTRIANS DRILLING IN CHURCH

Were in Charge of Men Brought from the United States—Used Dummy Rifles and Drilled with Precision

TORONTO, March 25.—Special—Inspector of Detectives George Kennedy, Inspector Crowe of No. 3 division, and nine headquarters detectives, surrounded St. Stanislaus Polish Church, at 16 Denison avenue, about 11 o'clock last night, and rounded up about 30 Austrians and Polacks, who were drilling in the hall of the church. They were locked up in No. 3 station on a charge of illegally drilling. It is the first arrest for the offence of "illegally drilling" within the memory of the oldest police official, and is probably the only one since the Mackenzie rebellion.

The detectives watched the manoeuvres for some time before breaking in on the drillers. Dummy rifles were used and orders were given in Polish and Austrian. According to Inspector Kennedy, the men were a well drilled body and carried out every order with military precision. With the men placed under arrest was an American-Austrian, who according to the police, was brought across from the United States for the express purpose of whipping the squad into shape.

Jack and Jess Working Hard

Johnson and Willard Getting Into Condition fo he Big Fight

HAVANA, March 25.—(Special.)—Warm weather today gave Jack Johnson and Jess Willard the first opportunity in several days to work in the open air in training for their battle for the world's heavyweight championship on April 4. Both pugilists drew crowds of people who were anxious to see them at work.

Willard trained at Miramar in the presence of 500 spectators, a third of whom were women. Many tourists were among those who watched the challenger do an hour and a quarter's hard work at the pulleys, punching the dummy, throwing the medicine ball and boxing 12 rounds. He faced John Pents for three round, Falter Monahan four, and Jim Savage five, and later wrestled with Tom O'Rourke.

Willard has developed a straight left. His wind is only fair. His sparring partners landed freely today, and despite the fact that they are smaller men the challenger was easily thrown off his balance in the clinches. Willard hits a terrific blow when he lands, but is still far from a finished boxer. Without defending himself he took punishment about the head and body, apparently not discomfited. During the morning Willard did six miles of road work.

KINGSTON

A very fine framed panoramic photograph of the Kingston officers who are serving with the 21st Battalion, has been presented to Major Dawson and the officers of the 14th Regiment by Captain Harry Pense. The photograph with a list of the names of the officers has been hung in the office of the 14th.

Captain Gray and Lieuts. Shepherd and Sharpe have been appointed a board to investigate certain matters pertaining to the transport of the 21st Battalion.

The R.C.H.A. are going to hold an athletic night in Ontario hall on Monday night when they will give Jiu Jitsu performances, boxing bouts, wrestling matches, fencing, etc. This is not under the militia Y.M.C.A. but a garrison program.

The local recruits of the 39th Battalion, which will mobilize in Belleville on April 1st, will leave the city under Lieuts. Dalton and Brandon on Friday morning at 9.15 and proceed to Belleville.

About half the men of the 21st Battalion are on leave. This is their last leave before going overseas.

"C" Battery, R.C.H.A., has a football team and they will play the 14th Guard team in artillery park at two o'clock on Saturday afternoon. The 14th say football is not their game, and they will expect the battery to play them at indoor baseball on the following Saturday.

Lieut. Steacy, commanding "C" Battery, R.C.H.A., is certainly working his men and determined to make them soldiers fit for any emergency and undertaking. Every morning the men are given physical drill on the square at Tete du Pont Barracks, and they are rapidly developing into a fine body of men.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

THE PATRIOTIC FUND

At 2.30 this afternoon the patriotic barometer, which is suspended in front of the Patriotic Association headquarters on Bridge street, showed that up to that hour [illegible],000 had been contributed towards the fund. The members of the various teams were to-day making a thorough canvas for subscriptions.

PORT HOPE BOYS HERE

The members of the 46th detachment of Port Hope, who have enlisted as members of the 3rd contingent, arrived here this afternoon for the purpose of joining the 39th Regiment which is being mobilized in this city. They were a fine looking body of young men, and showed efficiency in drill. To-morrow the Lindsay boys will arrive in the city.

LONDON Mar. 25.—The British Government has refused the request of the United States that an American Consular Officer be permitted to take a station at the Port of Kirkwall in Scotland, to report on American cargo on ships detained there.

GERMANY THE LOOTER

Articles of Hague Conventions Deliberately Set Aside

Articles 46 and 52 of The Hague Convention specify that private property must be respected by belligerents, and requisition cannot be claimed for other than the army of occupation. That is, only the invading army on the spot has a right to requisition stores or supplies from the community of which it has gained control, and then only for its own local use. The Germans subscribed to those articles, in common with others, and in the case of Belgium this is how they observed them:

In Antwerp they seized $2,600,000 worth of cotton, $1,000,000 worth of rubber, $1,200,000 worth of woollens, $2,000,000 worth of leather.

In Ghent they seized cotton nets, flax and other raw material worth $1,700,000.

In Charleroi they seized $300,000 worth of copper, and tool machines worth $2,400,000.

In Duffel they seized $200,000 worth of nickel.

In Malines they seized $500,000 worth of canned goods.

The facts were filed by the Belgian Minister with the United States Government as official. In all, about $57,000,000 worth of raw materials were seized in Belgium, and transported to Germany for the use of German factories.

The Atholl Highlanders, a force of men drawn from the Atholl country, and commanded by the Duke himself, is the only private regiment which still exists in Great Britain.

Peter Thompson went to visit his son in Montreal. It was his first visit to the city and the young man showed him all the sights, concluding with an ascent of Mount Royal. In a burst of enthusiasm young Thompson said: "See, father, isn't it wonderful down there!"

"Well," said his father, "if it's so wonderful down there, what did you drag me up here for?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Of Chile's population of about 3,250,000 it is estimated that 15,000 die of tuberculosis annually.

You CAN trifle with Nature.
But listen!
You CAN'T handle soft pitch with bare hands without smirching them.
You CAN'T take a dist of poison and expect to live. Can't be done.
You CAN'T see comfortably without glasses if your eyes are defective — the more you try, the more discomfort.

The wearing of scientifically constructed Glasses will end your eye trouble. And we construct them on the premises.

Selects Man For Big Job

Alfred Allan Booth to be Chief Organizer of War Munition Body

LONDON, March 24.—According to a Liverpool report printed in The London Express, Alfred Allan Booth, Chairman of the Cunard Line has been selected by Lloyd George as Chief Organizer under the Government scheme to increase the output of war materials. Lloyd George recently announced that the Government was looking for a "strong, pushful business man," to be the head of a central committee. Booth became the Chairman of the Cunard Line in 1909 when he was only 37 years old.

BOUVET TOOK CREW TO DEATH IN NINETY SECONDS

Disappeared in Vast Smother of Steam and Foam, Littering Sea With Bodies—How British Ships Went Down—The Irresistable and Ocean Were Struck Admidships

HENEDOS, March 24.—"I have received from eye-witnesses on the ships of the allied fleet, first hand and vivid recitals of Thursday's atempt to force the Dardanelles. It was certainly one of the most extraordinary and spectacular events of the war, and into the bargain perhaps the most daring feat on a large scale in the history of naval operations. I have been able to gather details of the engagement which make it possible to reconstruct the scene.

Operations began at 9 o'clock in the morning, when the majestic fleet of English and French battleships with the smaller craft entered the mouth of the strait between the outer forts, which had been silenced in an earlier bombardment. A fresh breeze was blowing from the northeast and there was a good deal of sea, but otherwise the weather was fine.

At ten o'clock the forts at the Narrows opened fire and the ships responded, the Queen Elizabeth with indirect fire from a range of fourteen miles. By noon the cannonade was terrific. As many as one hundred and fifty guns of calibre of 6 to 15 inches were engaged in a furious duel, pouring hundreds of tons of metal into each other.

Before two o'clock the fighting had reached a climax. From a point of vantage, afforded by a conical hill, which is the chief landmark of Tenedos, I could see the water in the basin where the fleet was assembled, whitened by the spots rising from the Turkish shells. The German gunners were working 13-inch howitzers and the damage must have been considerable had only the gunnery been better. The fact that so little effect was produced may be carefully attributed to the careful destruction by concentrated fire of the smaller guns of the ranging buoys, with which the channel was thickly sown.

The fleet's losses were due to drift mines of high efficiency, which floated thickly on the surface of the seas in the upper reaches of the strait. Mines exploded from shore, may also have effected part of the destruction.

When Bouvet Hit Mine

At 2.15 the French battleship Bouvet struck one of the flating deaths. She sank in 90 seconds. According to an officer of the Gaulois, who was watching through range-finding glasses she heeled to starboard after the explosion and remained three-quarters of a minute with her deck at an angle of forty-five degrees, the smoke and flame, which rose to a great height, nearly hiding her from view.

With a swift, shuddering motion like an animal in a death struggle she then turned completely on her side till her fighting tops touched the water, the stern being submerged. Half a minute later she disappeared in a vast smother of steam and foam, littering the sea with the bodies of her crew.

The Irrestible was struck amidships and her engines were shattered, most of the deaths occurring in the stokehold. While pinnaces, which had been cruising on the look out for mines, were removing the crew, the Turkish guns poured in a murderous hail of shrapnel. The fate of the Ocean was similar.

The Gaulois, I was told today, was pierced near the bows, just below the heavy armour belt, by a torpedo or shell, which first struck the water a few inches away. She began to fill rapidly, and was run aground on one of the Rabbit Island at the mouth of the strait, where she has been pumped out and satisfactorily repaired, and is now afloat again. No one aboard her was injured.

One English ship had two shells enter the same basement. This fact is humorously attributed by the crew to the name plate reading "Kaiser Wilhelmstrasse," which was removed from a corner of a street at Walfish Bay, being displayed there.

During the afternoon one of Chanak forts was observed to be burning fiercely. Many Turkish guns were silenced.

The fleet retired at dusk after a bombardment lasting nine hours, which inflicted great damage on the famous defences.

The Queen Elizabeth continued to fire her fifteen-inch guns at short intervals throughout the day.

The failure so far to force the Narrows is attributed to the mining of the waters. The fortress guns alone would have been quite incapable of defending the advance of the Allied fleet in the Sea of Marmora.

Get Away With $2,000 Worth of Jewelry and $349 Cash in G. A. Derscuch's Home

NEW YORK, March 24.—Detectives from the Fourth Branch Detective Bureau hunted all yesterday without success for the burglar, or burglars, who broke into the apartment of G. A. Derschuch at 11 West Eighty-Eighth Street early Monday morning and got away with $2,000 worth of jewelry and $349 in cash. Apparently the burglars chloroformed the entire family, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Derschuch, their daughter, Helen, nine years old; George, six, and Mrs. Derschuch's father, E. H. O'Brien.

Mr. O'Brien awoke at 4 o'clock with a violent headache, which he presumes came from the chloroform. He noticed that all the electric lights were turned on and started an investigation of the apartment. He found clothing scattered all over the floors. Mr. O'Brien awoke the rest of the family with difficulty, and yesterday the children were under treatment by Dr. Henrique.

No trace of the burglars was found. They had entered evidently by climbing a stairway fire escape attached to the Progress Club next door to the apartment, crossing the roof, and descended the rear fire escape to the Derschuch kitchen window.

There have been several burglaries in the neighborhood recently. On Friday Paul Bechtel's bakery at 629 Columbus Avenue was robbed, and a week ago a lot of silver and several hundred dollars was stolen from the home of Mrs. A. Wilson, 101 West Ninety-first Street.

Bayonet Charge Drove Germans Out, Counter Attack Repulsed

Another engagement in which the Princess Patricias distinguished themselves is told by Wm. Marchington in the following cable to The Globe, under date of March 23rd:

It is reported here that the Princess Patricia's Regiment has again figured in a charge which resulted in considerable gain. They were ordered to retake a lost trench. The Canadians, I am informed, not only did so, but they captured two others, driving the Germans out at the bayonet point. It was in this charge that Lieut. Stewart of Halifax was wounded. His name has already appeared in the official casualty list. He was shot in the stomach while leading a charge which was a sequel to the Neuve Chapelle victory. The Germans making a counter-attack, enjoyed a temporary success, but later were driven back with heavy losses. The Princess Patricias suffered slightly from enfiladed fire while occupying a V-Shaped German trench. The British artillery gave the Canadians splendid support.

Alleged Spy Was Apprehended

MONTREAL, March 24.—The report that a German spy was discovered and arrested on board the steamship Missanabie, on which a part of the second contingent sailed to England, is contained in a letter just received from George Wilcox, of 50 Beaudoin street, St. Henry, who is with the 23rd Battalion at Shorncliffe.

When the Missanabie and her sister transports were travelling at night with every light covered, so that German submarines could not place them, the spy flashed signals through a porthole.

"All lights were out or covered up all the way across," writes the soldier, "but there was somebody giving us away. He kept flashing a light through the bottom porthole. They couldn't get him until the last night. The spy proved to be a bandsman on the boat who was supposed to be a Spaniard, and appeared to be from his record on the steamer. He was arrested on the deck as we came from Ireland to England."

HE GOT THE SNIPER

TORONTO, March 25.—(Special.)—Twelve hours after they had received a letter written in the trenches in France by their son, Charles R. Herman, a private in the 49th Regiment with the 2nd Battalion, the parents received official intimation at their home in Frankford that their boy had been killed in action on March 8. Herman, who was only 18 years of age rose from bugler boy to bugler-sergeant, and when the war broke out he was so anxious to get to the front that he enlisted as a private. In his last letter to his parents he gave a thrilling account of an experience with German snipers. He had taken a pot shot at a Hun, who fired back, the bullet passing through a sand bag, and just missing Herman's neck. The Canadian's next shot sent the German to his last rest. Young Herman closed his letter with the remark that were he never to return, his parents would remember that their boy had died for his King and country.

BREAD OR PEACE CRY SPREADS IN GERMANY

LONDON, March 25.—(Special.)—A despatch from Copenhagen to Reuter's Telegram Company says:

"Red posters inscribed 'bread or peace' are continually appearing in towns in the Province of Schleswig-Holstein and in Hamburg and Lueback according to a telegram from Woyens, on the German frontier, published in the newspapers of the Danish capital.

"The police remove the placards, but they have not succeeded in arresting any of the persons responsible for them."

THE FEDERAL ELECTIONS

(Hamilton Spectator)

The Liberal party, after violating the so-called truce and offering a want of confidence motion on the budget, is now dreadfully afraid that its challenge will be accepted to the fullest extent, and that there will be an early appeal to the people. The Toronto Globe apprehends "a premature dissolution for the purpose of holding a premature election.". It advocates the living out by the Borden Government of its five years' term, and an election in the summer of 1916.

The Toronto News has taken the trouble to ascertain the record of the Laurier Government in this matter. It says: "Sir Wilfrid Laurier was first returned to power on June 23, 1896, and his subsequent appeals to the constituencies were made on Nov. 7, 1900; Nov. 3, 1904; Oct. 26, 1908, and Sept. 21, 1911. Four years, four months and a half elapsed between the first two dates; three years eleven months and 26 days between the second two; three years eleven months and 23 days between the third two, and three years, ten months and a half between the last two."

Doing a little figuring ourselves, we find that the space of time between elections under the Laurier Government was, approximately, 52½ months, 48 months, 48 months and 46½ months. This makes a total of 195 months, which, divided by four gives 48¾ months as the average duration of Parliament. In other words, during the whole of the Laurier administration from 1896 to 1911, the distance between elections was almost exactly four years.

Following this precedent, the next Dominion election ought to take place in September of this year. One thing might have afforded reasonable ground for a departure from the rule at the present juncture; a hearty support by the Opposition of the war measures of the Government of the day. That support has been withheld and every possible opportunity has been seized to make party capital out of the incidents of an exceptional period. We cannot say what Sir Robert Borden purposes doing—perhaps he does not know yet himself—but sure we are of this: he would be amply justified, in view of the fierce onslaughts he has had to bear and the truculent abuse to which he has been exposed, in seeking during the coming summer or autumn a new mandate from the people.

THE PARTY MANAGERS

The Winnipeg Free Press, commenting on the developments of the past week at Ottawa, has this to say:

> The managers of the Conservative party have been eager for an election ever since the opening of the war because they saw, or thought they saw, an opportunity to win easily. Twice they tried to force an election, and twice their plans were balked by an uprising of public opinion; but there is no doubt that they have now full control and will bring on the election at the moment deemed most opportune.

And who may the managers of the Conservative party be? asks the Edmonton Journal. If it has managers, they are surely the majority of the Cabinet presided over by Sir Robert Borden.

Despite all kinds of rumors, coming from a wide source, as to the holding of an election, there has been no dissolution, and till there is one the Government is not open to praise or blame in this connection.

DUNLOP TRACTION TREAD

NO OTHER TIRE THUS FEATURED

Here are some of the many features applying exclusively to Dunlop Traction Tread Bicycle tires—the only tire with a built-into tread—the V-shaped top of the tire is made by iron moulds after the tire proper is completed. That means a skid-resisting surface which cannot tear off, as so often happens with ordinary-made bicycle tires.

The only bicycle tire that is practically puncture-proof. Your wheel is making revolutions on a series of "V's" which contain no air. Thus the air-containing portion of the tire is kept clear of the ground.

Don't fail to equip your mount with Dunlop Traction Tread, or Dunlop Special, the rubber-studded bicycle tire.

It was apparent for a time last autumn that some Conservatives wanted an appeal to the country then. But it also was soon apparent that they had not the power to carry their ideas into action.

So long as the Opposition conducted itself as it did during the August session and avoided political strife, there was no warrant for precipitating a contest. But now a different situation has been created.

The control is in the same hands as it was five or six months ago. It has not changed in the slightest, but the attitude of the Liberal leaders has.

They have raised an issue that is quite as vital as one arising out of the actual sending of troops would have been, and Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues would be quite justified under these circumstances in asking for an endorsation of their course by the electorate, particularly as the average life of a Canadian Parliament has now elapsed.

It was up to the Opposition to say whether or not there should be an election. Having take the stand it has, it has now no reason to whine if the Government decides to go to the people.

It was within the power of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to avoid a contest, or at least to put the administration in a very unfavorable light if a contest were brought on. But he deliberately chose to force one, and he and his supporters must accept the consequences.

MASSING THE FORCES

Despatches from Britain indicate that a strong feeling of optimism regarding the war prevails there. It would be unreasonable to expect greater progress than has been made up to the present, and everything has been prepared for an effective offensive campaign now that Spring has opened up. But, as a writer in the current issue of The Round Table very aptly remarks, while the Allies have prevented Germany from imposing her will on them, they are no nearer as yet to their main positive object, that of imposing their will on Germany. He adds that accordingly there is only one question before the Empire at the present time, "how best to concentrate every available atom of its strength upon the task of defeating the Central Powers." The worth of every measure depends on whether it will or will not help the Allies to mass greater forces at the decisive point at the earliest possible date.

CURRENT COMMENT

All Belgians must submit to have a certain number of pigs billeted upon them. But after seven months of Germans, probably the Belgians won't mind much.

Montreal News: "When Sir Edward Grey assumes a positive tone about the smashing of the Kaiser, he speaks by the book. His London speech was probably based on assurances of various kinds which may have the effect of greatly shortening the war."

Hamilton Herald: "Now that the German airmen are dropping bombs promiscuously upon ships in the North Sea, the neutrality of the neutral nations will become harder than ever to maintain. One of these days those German airmen are likely to take a drop too much."

H. G. Wells, England's famous author, predicts that the naval war of the future will be a battle of submarines. That may be. It is hard to discount the future. In the present conflict, however, they would cut but a sorry figure in reducing the fortifications of the Dardanelles.

Every good citizen of this city should take a special local pride in all that pertains to home. The schools, the churches, the amusements, the business, pleasures, the picnics, the celebrations, in fact everything should be looked on by our own people as just as good as can be gotten up elsewhere. The city that says "we can" will always succeed.

Hamilton Spectator: "Never before were such radical changes in respect to the liquor traffic introduced in the Ontario legislature as those for which, under the guidance of the Hon. Mr. Hanna, the Hearst Ministry has now become responsible. They are far beyond anything heretofore proposed by the present government, greatly as the record of that government in actual achievement surpasses that of its predecessors."

Toronto News: "Much ill-advised writing has appeared in certain newspapers about the backwardness of Canadians in enlisting. While in Toronto, the Minister of Militia once more stated that Canada is sending troops to the Old Country as fast as the British War Office will take them. All the recruits wanted are available and during the next few months every training camp in the Dominion will be busy preparing men for the front."

Stomach Troubles Due to Acidity

SO SAYS EMINENT SPECIALIST

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind, and stomach-ache are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach, causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach, and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the fermenting food. Such fermentation is unnatural, and acid formation is not only unnatural, but may involve most serious consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid, and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, probably the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known and it should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are dangerous and unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist and thus enable the stomach to do its work properly without being hindered by poisonous gas and dangerous acids.—M. Inauguration of Canada's Hospital

LONDON, Feb. 24.—The inauguration of the Duchess of Connaught Canadian Red Cross Hospital near Taplow, Buckinghamshire, at the close of last week, records the establishment of yet another hospital fostered and financed by Canada. Mr. J. Obed Smith, commissioner of emigration, who, together with a few leading London Canadians, made an informal visit, was so pleased with what he saw that he made some observations thereon:

Canadians, he said, will always remember the whole-hearted sympathy of Mr. and Mrs. Waldorf Astor, who have so generously placed a portion of their estate at Cliveden, about three miles from Taplow, at the disposal of the Canadian Red Cross Association. On the estate, Mr. and Mrs. Astor had a very large brick covered tennis court in which their friends could play six sets at once; this has been entirely remodelled and necessary additions erected, all at their cost, so that Commissioner Hodgetts, commissioner of Canadian Red Cross Society, was able to accept the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Astor, and with the funds placed at his disposal by the Canadian Red Cross Society, was able to fit up 100 beds, and those who had the privilege of inspecting the hospital arrangements found conditions excellent and nothing wanting, as Canadians know and expect when Colonel Hodgetts has charge of the arrangements.

The hospital is somewhat unique in that the personnel is provided by the Canadian Army Medical Services. The Canadian Red Cross Society is responsible for the upkeep of the hospital, receiving from the War Office the usual grant per patient per diem. Surgeon-General G. C. Jones placed as superintendent so excellent a physician and organizer as Lieut.-Col. Charles W. F. Gorrell, of Ottawa, and Miss Campbell, of Montreal, as the matron.

Everything is up to standard, and scores of huge packing cases have arrived providing more than sufficient in the way of wearing apparel, bandages, etc., and even medicinal supplies, furnished by the women of Canada.

Among those present were General Jones, director of the Canadian Military Medical Service; Colonel Hodgetts, Major and Mrs. Leonard, whose generosity has helped to make the establishment of this hospital and its maintenance a possibility, Mr. Richard Reid, agent-general for Ontario, and Sir William Osler, who is also generously giving his services as consultant to this hospital, which it is hoped and believed will become the chief Canadian base hospital when completed, as Colonel Hodgetts hopes it will be by the addition of a structure more in the sanatorium style, in which 400 additional beds will be provided.

The occasion was honored with the presence of Sir John Furley, the veteran Red Cross worker, who was Red Cross Commissioner in South Africa, and well-known to Canadians. Owing to exceptional pressure of business, Sir George and Lady Perley were unable to be present, but all know the full extent of their sympathy in the work.

I am certain that if Canadian people could see the care, combined with economy, which is being displayed in providing for Canadian soldiers, who will fight and may fall in defending the Empire, there would be no hesitation or lack of funds for so noble a purpose.

The hospital staff are housed in Taplow Lodge, on the estate, another evidence of the courtesy and kindness of Mr. Astor, who is Conservative member of the British House of Commons for the division of Devonport, and during his enforced absence on Parliamentary duties, it is needless to say that the efforts of Mrs. Astor to assist in providing what is necessary are not only dispensed willingly but with that grace and charm which have already endeared her to the nurses and the whole medical staff.

Drug Clerk Tells of His Profits

Powell Says the $8,600 Made on War Contract Is all His Own

OTTAWA, March 24. That he had consulted Mr. W. F. Garland, M.P. for Carleton, about some prices to be charged the militia department for field dressings; that he had secured Government orders for the supplies, amounting to over $40,000, and had made $9,000 profit on them for which he had to account to no one, was the interesting evidence given before the Public Accounts Committee yesterday morning by Mr. E. E. Powell, the drug clerk, who was on the stand at the previous meeting of the committee. Mr. Powell, it will be remembered, was the young clerk in the Carleton County Drug Company's store, owned mainly by Mr. Garland, who was appointed Ottawa agent for Bauer and Black, of Chicago, to secure Government orders.

Recalled this morning he was subjected to searching cross-examination by the committee and varied his evidence somewhat as to whether he had consulted Mr. Garland before fixing prices. When first placed on the stand this morning Powell stated he had made the prices himself without assitance.

To the invoices he had added what he considered a fair margin.

In one case, however, he had sold the department an item for $5.30 which had cost him $6, as the department had objected to the latter figure. Mr. Powell said he had made 28 per cent. profit on the goods he had sold, not 40 per cent., as claimed by the Auditor-General.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wm. German, who pointed out that the original price Powell had fixed for field dressings had been 23 cents, that he had afterwards reduced it to 21 cents and that as a matter of fact the dressings had cost him 16 cents, the witness admitted that he had discussed the prices of some of the goods with Mr. Garland, but not all of them.

Powell then gave evidence as to his profits, stating that there was now $6,000 to his credit in the bank, this being the balance remaining after his goods were all paid for.

About $2,600 more was coming, a profit of 28 per cent., which was not regarded as high, in his business, said Powell.

"After you got the letter from the militia department, explaining the prices you spoke to Mr. Garland?" asked Mr. German.

"What did he say to you?"

"I don't remember."

"Did he suggest that the price be reduced?"

"No."

The witness then told the committee that no one else was interested in his contract and that the sum he had in the bank belonged entirely to him.

Mr. Kyle asked him why he had testified on Friday that he was to get no compensation for the services, whereas today he stated he was to get the whole profit.

The witness replied that he had not understood the question on Friday, taking it to mean that there were no amounts specified which he was to get.

Powell testified further that he was paid $15 per week in the Carleton Drug Company's employ. His contract business was entirely apart from his work in the store, which he had continued as usual. He told the committee he did not get all his supplies from Bauer and Black, having secured some at local stores in Ottawa and he admitted that in some cases his profit had been 50 per cent.

The committee then commenced its investigation of a contract awarded to P. W. Ellis and Company, of Toronto, for binoculars.

Lt.-Col. W. G. Hurdman, of the militia department, stated that between [illegible] in Ottawa and Montreal he had secured 120 pairs of binoculars when war broke out.

After this all purchases had been made through the Ellis company. He did not think they were paid $57 per pair of the binoculars, but 10 per cent over the cost. He denied that he was a shareholder in the Keystone Optical Company, of Ottawa, which had supplied some first-class goods to the department through the Ellis Company; he did not even know who the company was. He considered the Ellis prices fair ones.

The committee then adjourned until to-morrow morning.

My Corns Were Ended This Way

Countless women have told other women about Blue-jay plasters. Now a million corns a month are ended in this scientific way.

Women who know Blue-jay do not suffer corns. When one appears, they put a Blue-jay plaster on it. That ends the pain. In 48 hours the corn is gone forever, with no soreness left.

If you can't believe it, ask your friends. Half of them have probably ended corns with Blue-jay. If you still doubt it, ask us for samples. Try them on corns of your own.

Don't coddle corns. Don't pare and keep them. Don't use old-time treatments. A famous chemist has made corns utterly unnecessary. That sort of torture is a thing of the past.

MORE JAP TROOPS ARRIVE IN CHINA

PEKING, March 24.—Some fear is expressed here, both by foreigners and by Chinese that the arrival of additional Japanese troops in Manchuria and Shantung Province may cause friction, but the Chinese have been warned by the Central Government to conduct themselves discreetly.

According to Chinese reports, 600 Japanese troops with eight field guns have arrived at Tsinan, while other detachments have been stationed at points along the Shantung Railway. Six thousand more soldiers are said to have reached Manchuria, 3,000 going to Mukden and 3,000 to Dalny.

Censor Blamed If Nation Fails To Realize Peril

Information is Concealed, Not From Enemy, But From British Public

LONDON, March 24.—The Daily Chronicle in an editorial says:

"A good many recent vents of varying importance from the Clyde strikes downward, have warned us that large sections of our people do not even realize the desperate nature of the life and death struggle in which we are involved. And how should they, with the censorship constantly exerted to conceal information, not from the enemy but from the British public, and a War Office which prohibits all regular services of war correspondents?

"Brief and occasional visits to the Allies' lines, which are permitted at intervals to a few trained journalists under official guidance, have done something to show us the character of the trench warfare day by day, but these writers have had no opportunity of describing or reporting any actions. We hear of successes and in general terms the gallantry of the men, but their losses and the names of the units engaged we only learn from the casualty list. The last are served out to us in straggling daily instalments, and lack of proper presentation hides nothing from the students, let us say, of the German General Staff, whose business it is to add figures, calculate units and compare dates, but effectually baffles the British public whom alone it is entirely calculated to bewilder.

"Ours is not a nervous nation, liable to be stampeded into panic. Nothing does us more good than to be told frankly of the difficulties before us and of the couse of surmounting them. Why, after all these months of experience of the disastrous unwisdom of treating us like children, is not this done? It was the knowledge of our men's trials, not of their triumphs, that brought recruits flocking to our new armies. It is only by the same knowledge that the whole energy of our manhood, in the workshops no less than in the trenches, can be kept concentrated upon the achievements of our national safety."

Certain Death Faced Canadians

Capt. Ware, of London, Ontario, Halted March to German Lines

LONDON, Ont., Mar. 24.—How Captain Frank Ware, formerly of the 7th Regiment of this city, and now staff captain of the 1st Infantry Brigade of the Canadian expeditionary force fighting in France, saved several Canadian battalions from annihilation at the hands of the Germans is described in letters received here by friends and relatives of London officers.

Captain Ware, who is on the staff of Lieutenant-Colonel Mercer, of Toronto, brigade commandant, was detailed to accompany Lieutenant-Colonel Mercer and another unnamed officer to a certain village where several 1st Brigade battalions were together. The officers arrived all right, but there was no sign of the men, who had taken another route. Five hours after the appointed time, Captain Ware volunteered to ride out and endeavor to find the missing detachment. His offer was accepted.

It was dark when he started, but he managed to get his bearings with the aid of a compass. Knowing the direction the men should have taken to reach the village and the route by which they were marching he at length overtook the marching column in the dark. When discovered, the missing Canadians were headed directly for the German lines and were within a short half-mile of the enemy's trenches when halted by Captain Ware. Not only were they within range of the German artillery, but within rifle range as well, and nothing but the opportune arrival of the London officer saved them from walking directly to their death.

Captain Ware halted the command and managed to bring it back to the appointed village without the loss of a single man or the discovery of its exposed position by the Germans.

"A MAN'S WORK OUT HERE"

"Lesson to Slackers at Home,' Writes Sergeant With Canadians

LONDON, March 24—Sergeant F. Townsend, of the First Canadian Contingent, writing to a friend at his old home in Yorkshire, says: "It is a man's work out here. If only some of the slackers in Thirsk Market Square could see what the boys are doing, they would never hold up their heads again. The only things we want are plenty of socks and an occasional shirt, but they are hard to get."

Second Lieutenant Percy B. Lees, of the Northhamptonshire Regiment, who is officially reported killed, was in Canada when the war broke out, and returned home to take a commission.

Lieut. H. O. D. Wilkins, of the Bedfordshire Regiment, who is reported among the wounded, is a graduate of the Royal Military College, Kingston.

AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th. 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of "Fruit-a-tives". I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking "Fruit-a-tives", I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives".

Three Regiments Left in England

OTTAWA, March 24.—Details as to the proportion of the First Canadian Contingent now in France and the appointment of Col. Seely in command of a Canadian cavalry brigade, were given in the House this afternoon by Major General Hughes, Minister of Militia.

Mr. MacDonald thought that in view of the intelligence which was being daily received of the loss of Canadian soldiers at the front, it would be advisable to know whether the whole of the first Canadian contingent had gone across, if such information could be properly furnished. He also referred to newspaper statements as to Col. Seely's appointment, and asked whether the militia department here had been consulted as to the appointment.

"General Hughes stated that the first division of Canadians, as well as the Princess Patricias and the hospital service had gone over to France. Three regiments of the first division, including the 9th, had remained behind as a detail. The Strathcona Horse, the Canadian Mounted Rifles and the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery had remained, and with some British corps including, he understood, the King Edward horse, formed a brigade under Col. Seely.

As British troops were also included in this command, it had not been necessary for the War Office to consult the Canadian authorities as to his appointment.

WOMEN WILL WORK WHILE MEN FIGHT

ROME, via Paris, Mar. 24.—A movement is under way in Italy to substitute women for men in the work of industry and commerce in case of complete mobilization. It is proposed that the women be paid the same wage as now received by the male workers with the provision that part of it be turned over to the families of men called to the colors. The plan provides that the female workers shall surrender their posts to the soldiers when they are disbanded. An office has been opened where women may register an express an opinion as to what work they are best able to do in case of need.

Sixteen Killed in Giant Snowslide

Twenty-four Injured while Thirty-four are Still Missing

VANCOUVER, B.C., March 24.—At least sixteen people were killed and 24 injured, while 34 are missing as the result of the snowslide which early Monday morning swept away several bunkhouses at Britannia Mine at Howe Sound. Besides the bunkhouses part of the aerial tramway of the mine was carried away. The mine level is on the side of a mountain and nearly five thousand feet above the shore of the sound. The tramway destroyed extended from the mine to the beach. The slide swept away a bunkhouse, containing 15 men, a cook house containing ten men, and several private houses in which were a number of women and children. Several men who were going off the night shift at midnight were also killed. At last reports rescuers were working on a pile of debris. Fifteen of the injured have been brought to Vancouver by steamer.

To Throw Open Western Oilfields

C. P. R. Decides Operations in Calgary District Will Soon Begin

MONTREAL, March 24.—It has just been decided by the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway that its holdings in oil-fields in the Calgary district be thrown open for development, and now under certain conditions leases will be given of the petroleumn and gas rights.

The company will charge $1 an acre, payable half-yearly in advance, the life of leases to be fixed at ten years. The area of each lease will be limited to 640 acres, which must consist of adjoining quarter sections or legal subdivisions.

In addition to each rental, the company will require royalty of ten per cent. on the output either in cash or fluid. Lessee must commence actual work of drilling within six months after the lease is granted and continue drilling until four thousand feet are reached, unless a five-barrel well is reached. Within four months of completion or abandonment of the first well drilled, the lessee must commence drilling the second well, and same conditions apply to the third and fourth wells.

PRESS OF GERMANY ON PRZEMYSL AFFAIR

Praise Garrison But Admit it a Serious Blow to Teutonic Cause

BERLIN, via London, March 24.—The press of the German capital unites in paying tribute to the defenders of Przemysl, who it is declared, only hunger could subdue. At the same time there is no disposition to make light of the defeat. The Lokal Anzeiger says:

"We have no intention of minimizing the loss our brave allies have suffered. Przemysl was strong and a great fortress. It showed its strength in its proud defeince. We mourn with our allies its loss and the loss of its commander and garrison, who have won laurels whose glory captivity cannot destroy."

The Vossische Zeitung says the fort's fall releases the beleaguering army, but while it is not known where it will be employed, the Austrians undoubtedly are informed, and will take the necessary steps.

"While we thoroughly agree with the view of the Austrian General Staff, that the fall of Przemysl can have no influence on the general situation", says The Kreuz Zeitung, "we, neverthless, are honest enough to admit it is a painful blow dealt our cause on the right wing of our mutual thousand-kilometre front."

Since nets are being used to fish for submarines, the world may expect soon to see a superbutterfly chaser to net airships.

A BRONCHIAL COUGH, PERHAPS WEAK THROAT USE "CATARRHOZONE"— DEAD SURE CURE

WONDERFUL SUCCESS REPORTED IN THOUSANDS OF BAD CASES.

How many thousands are there who would gladly pay any sum to be cured of bronchitis or catarrh. Many could be cured if they would just use common sense in selection their remedy.

Bronchitis of course is an inflammation of the bronchial tubes which were made for the passage of air alone, and neither the moisture of an atomiser nor the liquid of a cough syrup can get where trouble really is. The disease parts can only be reached by a remedy that can force its way through all the breathing organs. Doctors who have used "Catarrhozone" say it is the only rational cure for bronchitis. It cures by inhalation.

You breathe in its healing balsams, inhale its soothing antiseptic vapor and relief is immediate.

Simple to use, delightful and pleasant—nothing compares with Catarrhozone which is the cure of the day for all bronchial and throat troubles.

Mr. H. B. McLaughlin, the well-known representative of Parks and Blackwell, Toronto, says: "I have used Catarrhozone for years and can honestly say it is the only remedy that relieves me from a painful attack of Bronchial Catarrh. The inhaler for Catarrhozone is always in my pocket and I simply couldn't get along without it. I firmly believe Catarrhozone is a wonderful remedy.

Large size sufficient for two months' use, guaranteed, $1.00; small size 50c; sample or trial size 25c. Sold by dealers everywhere.

A SPECIAL APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE OF BELLEVILLE!

YOU ARE MANY and you have many ideas, but there is at least one idea which you possess in common---the idea of standing for the right thing in the community.

We call upon the people of Belleville, one and all, for earnest support of the War Relief Fund; for definite action; for real substantial, real money help.

In all the splendid record of the past, handed down through the ages as a precious heritage, is there one brighter gem of sacrifice and service than the gem you now have the privilege of encrusting upon that record?

To-day's opportunity to stand shoulder to shoulder with all society in safeguarding our soldiers' dependent women and children, will be looked back upon by you through all time as a priceless privilege.

Give! Give! Give! $30,000 Or More

We urge generous and immediate action by every man and woman who has funds available or who will solicit contributions to this cause.

And to Every Individual in Belleville

No matter what yon feel able to give---be it a dollar or a dime---send it or bring it to the Fund. We will need for this War Relief Fund every penny we can get. The power of the moderate and small contributions is enormous in the aggregate, and every one swells the total.

A DOMINION ORGANIZATION.

The National Patriotic Relief Fund was incorporated at the last session of Parliament.

The President is His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught.

The Honorary Secretary is Mr. H. B. Ames, M.P., of Montreal.

The Honorary Treasurer is Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance.

The Auditor is the Auditor-General for Canada.

An Executive Committee composed of representative men from all parts of the Dominion determine the policy of the fund within the scope of the Act of Incorporation.

WHAT BELLEVILLE PROPOSES TO DO.

The payment will be optional with the giver, whether to make payment in a lump sum, or to spread the payment over periods during nine months. It is the hope that people who are willing but not able to make a substantial payment in one sum, may thus have time to spread the payments over several instalments in the future. Let this fact be borne in mind.

The Idea of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is This:

The soldiers have gone to fight not for their home town or any particular locality, but for all Canada.

The whole of Canada should combine to take care of their families.

The fund is One Fund, and each locality is administered by the Local Branch.

In Belleville, for instance, families of the soldiers will be looked after by the local branch acting for the National Association.

All the families throughout Canada will receive aid on the same basis, and none will be neglected.

This is a sensible and patriotic plan. Belleville will fall in line. Do all yon can, but do it now.

"WAR"

A SERIAL STORY BY BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

What goes there? A spy? One? No, seventeen. There they came in four rows, four in a row, marching with bowed heads, surrounded by a square of soldiers. Behind, in a wagon lies a corpse, and bound to it a twelve-year-old boy—the dead man's son—all condemned to die. I withdraw, but hear the firing and the smoke, and I shudder. The boy is dead too.

At last a comfortable night in bed! A poor little town! Provisions? Yes, taken from the inhabitants on requisition. All they had for the coming month. "Requisition!" It is a good thing to have a pretty name for an ugly act. But a night's sleep and a meal mean a great deal to me just now. When I was about to tumble into bed, an orderly came in and brought me something for which I pressed his hands, rewarded him handsomely, and promised to do something for his family. What the fine fellow brought me gave me the keenest pleasure, and freed me from an anxiety which I had been unable to shake off for thirty-six hours—he had brought me our Puxl. He was alive, beside himself with joy, though bodily mangled. Ah, such a scene of reunion! He interrupted his greedy drink ten times to bark with joy. I bound his poor legs and gave him some supper. Finally we both slept, and in the morning when we woke he stretched out his small body, breathed licked my hand again and again deep—and was no more. Poor Puxl, it is better so.

Another day and its horrors. With my eyes shut it comes to me in frightful pictures. Nothing but desecrating agony! How can some men give their war reminiscences with such delight? Do they lie and paint the scenes in story-book fashion for the sake of heroics? The more horrible things are, the more gloriously do they describe them; the more shocking the scenes, the more indifferent and easy they make it appear. Writers seldom speak of these horrors with disapprobation, indignation, or rebellion. Some may, perhaps, heave a few sentimental sighs of sympathy, but they are ever ready to sing the glories of war—"Lift your heart to God and your hand against the enemy, ra-ra, Hurrah!"

To-day two pictures impressed themselves upon me. Rocky heights, with jagers climbing up them like cats. They were ordered to "take" the height. The enemy was firing down. As the bullets from above struck them, they threw out their arms, dropped their rifles, and rolled crashing to the bottom, and over the rocky projections they were smashed to pieces. The other scene: A rider, a little way from me, was struck by a shell, which ripped the lower part of his body off, disembowelling him. The horse swerved, and carried this mangled, bleeding mass, which at a short distance fel to the ground and was dragged over the stones by the galloping animal.

An artillery section stands with its wheels sunk deep in the mire of water-covered road. Dripping with sweat and blood from the cruel blows, the horses drag at the sinking guns. One has dropped, but the lash keeps falling on the poor beast, who cannot move. Does not the man see this? Yes, but he is responsible for his guns and must fulfil his duty. The tormented, willing, faithful creature does not understand it, and has made his most desperate efforts. What must it think?—think, as animals think, not articulately, but insensately; not in words but in feelings, which are all the more acute because they can find no expression. And with its only expression, a shriek of pain, the poor thing sank; and that shriek rings in my ears yet, it even haunted my next night's dream. To sense the pain of one artillery horse and then multiply it by one hundred thousand—for that is the usual number slaughtered in a long campaign—gives one some idea of the mass of agony men heap upon these poor unfortunate dumb brutes—these same men who go with pleasure to meet their foes. The men are supposed to know why they go, but the poor beast knows no reason why he is hewn into helpless agony.

To Be Continued.

Uncle Sam is going to have a navy to be proud of—if he can get enough sailors to man it.

THE HUN'S DIARY

War, then as the Germans and leaders know it, is restrained and governed by no laws, no sentiment, no religious feeling, not love for suffering and heroic man. It is, to quote Professor Morgan, whose critical introduction to "The Usages of War"—The German War Book—should be made available to American readers in this crisis, an orgy of calculating, undeviating cruelty, the only limitation on which is the fear that the enemy may retort in kind. The Germans in this century have retrograded deplorably and betrayed civilization. They have gone back to the savagery of the Thirty Years' War.

"Practice follows precept." "Like Master like man." The gallant German diarists from whom I have quoted so freely have at least some excuse to offer for their crimes—the soldier's law which enjoins obedience and bans argument. In the military library of France—"France, the Mother of Arts, laws and armies"—the Hun's Handbook is catalogued, but on the fly leaf there is a note which directs the student to read the rules and refrain from their practice.

V.—The War was Premeditated

The immediate cause of the war was Austria's insolent note to Servia, backed by Germany. The predisposing cause of the war was Germany's ambition to "secure a place in the sun"—"world-power or downfall." During the last decade, at least, every chancellery in Europe has known that Germany was preparing to attack England. A preliminary war with France was a mere incidental but not the final object. To secure "weldmach" England must be conquered and her possessions taken. That the scheme to subdue France first and separately went astray and that England was from the first found aligned on the side of France and Russia was one of the extraordinary miscalculations committed by Germany.

In German messes, naval and military, the toast of the "Tag"—the day for war against England—has been drunk for at least 16 years. Naxal and military men in Germany have spoken of nothing else. In September, 1901, I was present as a guest of the General Staff of the German Army at the Kaiser Manoeuvres in East Prussia. It may be recalled, perhaps that special interest attached to these manoeuvres because of the presence of the Kaiser and the Czar. From the time I left Berlin until I entrained at Dantzig for home all the talk was of the coming fight with England. On this occasion one heard most of the German Navy' whose plans for aggrandizement were then taking shape. The English people alone refused to take the idea seriously, and in a military sense, at least, they made no preparation. The Navy, it is true, was kept as usual, at the highest degree of efficiency. It is necessary to emphasize that Germany deliberately, carefully and continuously prepared for war with the object, when the hour of destiny sounded, to strike hard and victoriously for world-power in order to determine the nature of the guilt of the guilt of the conspirators and later to apportion the punishment to the crime. A man who murders in the heat of passion and without premeditation is less culpable before the law than the man who, with malice aforethought kills in cold blood.

The responsibility of the Kaiser has been, from the first, a vexed question which will not be discussed here. It is certain, however, that many of his public speeches with the exalted references to Divine Power, Shining Armor, the Archangel Michael's Sword, the great Elector's Spirit, My Grandfather's Immortal and Invincible Memory, the Future of my Kingdom is upon the Sea, the Mailed Fist, God and me—one might say all the spread eagle, "Deutschland over all" series of oration—though doubtless only symbolical in some instances, were not in their general essense either designed or intended to allay the unrest and quieten the suspicions of Europe.

The most remarkable speech by the Kaiser is that reported to have been made at a secret council meeting in Potsdam in June, 1908—please note the date as seven years ago—at which the German Emperor announced his decision to go to war.

The Kaiser began by declaring:

"After long hours of fervent prayer, light has at last come to me. The outlook is, I admit, dark, but we need not despair, for God, our great ally, has given into our hands the means of saving our empire from the dangers which are threatening its happiness and welfare.

"You know what I mean. It is that wonderfull invention which his Excellency Count Zeppelin was enabled, through the grace of the Lord, to make for the safeguarding and glory of our beloved Fatherland.

"In this invention God has placed the means at my disposal to lead Germany triumphantly out of her present difficulties and to make once and for all good the words of our poet, 'Deutschland, Deutschland ubor Alles.'

"Yes, gentlemen, Germany, over everything in the world. The first power on earth, both in peace and war! That is, the peace which I have been ordained by God to conquer for her, and which I will conquer for her with the help of the Almighty."

The Emperor then went on to unfold a scheme by which this end was to be accomplished. When sufficient large Zeppelins were built, England's North Sea, Channel, and Atlantic fleets would be destroyed, "after which nothing on earth can prevent the landing of our army on British soil and its triumphant march to London." Fast steamers belonging to the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd lines would be relied on for the transport of the invading army.

The war would be against Great Britain and France, said the Kaiser. Russia was suffering too much from the effects of her war with Japan to enter the conflict.

The Emperor went on to speak of the United States as a country, "where even now I rule supreme, where almost half the population is either of German birth or German descent, and where 3,000,000 German voters do my bidding at the Presidential elections." That country would next be taught a lesson. German power would be supreme in South America and South Africa, and, among other things, the German flag would "wave over the holy shrines of Jerusalem."

Time will show!

The End

Gospel on the War

LONDON, March 24.—The Daily News says an extraordinary address was delivered on Friday last in one of the largest halls in Berlin by Bishop Faulhaber of Speyer, "one of the most notable preachers in Germany," as the Vossische Zeitung attests him. His subject was the war in the light of the Gospel, and the following are some of his statements, according to the Daily News:

"The Gospel as a message of international love among mankind finds, it is true, no pleasure in the mutual massacre of nations, but the peace greeting of the Gospel is not a political truce toward men, it is religious peace toward God. Religious propaganda by means of arms is forbidden, but with the cry, lay down your arms, the Gospel has nothing to do, since it reserves for authority the right to appeal to the sword.

"Nowhere do the Gospels says, as the peace propagandists falsely assert, that peace has precedence before war. In the light of the Gospel the fable of eternal peace appears as a superstition. The Gospel has in the whole course of the history of the world never represented war as anything but an inevitable fact.

The present war, then, does not mark the collapse of Christian order of the world. When the Gospels say: 'If thou art smitten on the right cheek give the offender also the left cheek,' they do not mean it in the sense that if somebody wishes to take from thee, East Prussia to give him also West Prussia."

Do you know that no grocer can be sure of getting the same quality of tea in bulk twice running? It is impossible for him to have the extensive machinery that makes it possible to blend the choicest teas in verying proportions to form an absolutely uniform tea like "SALADA." So true is this, that many grocers will neglect quality and only think of the greater profit that bulk tea affords them.

Dropped Dead on Way to Funeral

Dr. A. A. Dame a Victim of Cerebral Hemmorrhage—Long Practice Here

TORONTO, March 24—While on his way to the funeral of the late street railway inspector Wallace, to act as pallbearer, Dr. Alexander A. Dame, aged 68 years, 863 College street, dropped dead opposite 330 Roncesvalles avenue. Cerebral hemorrhage is stated to have been the cause of death. Deceased had been a specialist on disease of the eye, ear, nose and throat, and had a very lucrative practice. He graduated from Queen's in 1886, since when he has practised almost continuously in Toronto. He leaves a son, Mr. A. D. Dame, Canadian representative of the Master Builders' Association.

The late Inspector Wallace, to whose funeral the doctor was going, also dropped dead on the street, expiring on Saturday afternoon at Dundas and Arthur streets.

ONE HUNDRED MILLION WAR VOTE PASSED

Resolution Moved by Sir Robert Borden—A Brief Discussion —War Stamps on April Fifteenth

OTTAWA, March 24.—The special war taxes not already in force, all come into force on April fifteen. This includes the war stamps on letters. This clause in the tax bill was passed just before one o'clock to-day. All necessary legislation will be ready by that date. Stamps are already printed.

The resolution for the $100,000,000 war vote was moved by the Prime Minister to-day and passed after only a few minutes' discussion. The bill based on the resolution was also introduced and given first reading. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that when the bill was discussed in committee he would like the Government to state what had been done since the outbreak of the war to provide for the defence and security of the country. He knew that there were certain patrols maintained, but little else was known beyond this. Regarding naval operations also, all that was known was that the Niobe and Rainbow had been put in commission again and the two submarines acquired.

Sir Robert Borden said the Government would give all the information that it was advisable to make public. Replying to Mr. A. K. Maclean, Halifax, he stated that the Government would consider any suggestions made by the Opposition regarding the defence of the country.

The bill embodying the tariff increase was put through committee this morning and given third reading. There was little discussion.

Hope of prorogation by Easter has about passed away as the Liberals now desire a longer period of investigation into the militia expenditure and the Government is quite willing to accede to their desire. If precedent had been followed there could have been no investigation of any of the war expenditure until next year or when these accounts were before Parliament. However, Sir Robert Borden would not take advantage of this to delay investigation, and permitted the accounts to be brought before the committee at once, and has given every facility for thorough examination. To continue this work Parliament will, in all probability, adjourn over Easter, and after then reassemble, and the bicycle, automobile and motor truck purchases will be probed. Major T. W. Russell of the Canada Motor Cycle Company, who is in Western Canada, has been wired to appear before the committee.

Longshoremen Tie Up Pacific Trade

Strike Started in Vancouver and Has Now Spread Along Pacific Coast

SEATTLE, Wash., March 24.—Roland B. Mahoney, of Buffalo, N.Y., United States Commissioner of Conciliation, Department of Labor, arrived in Seattle unexpectedly last night to investigate the longshoremen's strike which has delayed shipping in all Puget Sound ports. He arrived in the train with T. V. O'Connor, President of the International Longshoremen's Association, who also came to investigate the strike.

The Government took cognizance of the strike, it was said, when it was learned there was danger of shipping along the entire Pacific Coast being tied up.

The longshoremen struck first at Vancouver, B.C., when two wharves reduced the pay of truckers. The strike was extended to American ports as a boycott against vessels which had been worked by non-union longshoremen at Vancouver and soon developed into a general strike affecting all coastwise, Alaska and oversea shipping on Puget Sound when the longshoremen demanded that all crews be drawn from union lists instead of being selected at the wharves.

All the shipping at Seattle, Tacoma, Vancouver and Victoria, B.C., is now being handled by non-union men.

TWELVE-YEAR-OLD BOY IS MURDERED

OWEN SOUND, Ont., March 24.—Herbert Thackaray King was arrested last night on suspicion of having murdered twelve-year-old J. E. Nicholson, of this town. King is alleged to have persuaded the boy to accompany him on a trip in a hired buggy, and about an hour after their departure the barns and piggeries of his brother, William King, were in flames. Those, who went to aid in fighting the fire discovered the body of Nicholson on the side of the road with a knife wound in the back.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

The Answer
To Your Clothes Question!

YOU are doubtless reading, these days, many advertisements concerning Clothes—big type and small type!

YOU have been appealed to in plain figures and plied with "wonderful reductions" which you may have discovered exist mostly on paper!

YOU have been bored with fabric, fashion, and fit, and served with dissertations on Style!

YOU have seen argument exhausted—exaggeration run rife and good horse sense depleted!

BUT!

Don't Forget When All Is Said That It's The Clothes That Count!

This being the case, allow us modestly to remark that our Spring Suits and Top Coats at the moderate prices we have mentioned below are the best of Clothes, the best of Values and they should be the Clothes for you!

CALL FOR POLICE

Last evening the police answered a call to the Ideal Cafe, where it was alleged a party was using profane language. The arrival of the officer resulted in all differences being settled without an arrest being made.

MATCH POSTPONED

The rifle match between 10 members of the Ladies' Rifle Club of the city and a similar number from the members of the Belleville Men's Rifle Association, which was to have taken place to-day has been postponed until to-morrow. The postponement was due to the fact that the ladies had another function to attend to.

STOLE GRAIN

Some time during last night the premises occupied by Mr. Post as a livery, and situated on Front street, were entered. The uninvited guests took away with them a quantity of cracked grain. An entrance to the premises was gained through a window in the rear of the premises.

DEATH OF AGED MAN

Mr. Jeremiah Scrimshaw, aged 87 years, died last evening in the Township of Thurlow, after being ill for some years. Deceased had lived all his life in this county, and for years followed his occupation as a gardener. He was a widower. Mr. Wm. Schrimshaw of this city, is a son of the deceased.

FOUND DEAD IN BED

Mrs. Richard Boulton, an aged lady, who resided at Bayside, Sidney Township, was this morning found dead in bed by her daughter. Deceased was about yesterday, and last evening retired apparently in her usual health. Heart disease was given as the cause of death. Some two years ago, about this time, Mr. Boulton, husband of Mrs. Boulton, was found dead in bed in the same house and room. A family of two sons and three daughters survive.

LADIES WIN IN INTERESTING DEBATE

A very pleasant time was spent last evening in the Parish Hall of Christ church, when the A. Y. P. A. held their fortnightly meeting. The main feature of the evening was a debate: Resolved that the 18th century was more productive to the world than the 19th century. The affirmative side was taken by three young gentlemen of the Bridge Street Ever Ready Club, Messrs. Osborne (leader) Mounteer and D. Holton; and the negative by Miss Erma Panter, (leader) Miss M. Diamond and Miss J. Bishop. Many good points were brought out by these speakers, showing that the subject had been most thoroughly prepared. The judges, Mr. Irvin, Dr. Proctor and Dr. McCullough, after a lengthy discussion, awarded the decision in favor of the negative, declaring the ladies had scored a few more points than their opponents. Miss V. Moran rendered a solo, and Miss S. McPherson a reading, which added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening. A large number of the members and friends of the A. Y. P. A. were present, and also many of the club members of the Bridge Street Ever Readies. Mr. Jack Diamond, President of the Society, was the chairman of the evening. Dainty refreshments were served at the close by the committee in charge of the programme.

DEATH ROLL.

MRS. JOHN FORIN

Jane Forin, widow of the late Mr. John Forin, died last evening at six o'clock at her residence, 2 Forin street. Mrs. Forin was born near Dunkeld, Perthshire, Scotland, in 1832, being the eldest daughter of the late Alexander McLaren, of Tyendinaga, who came to Canada when she was quite young, marrying in 1854. Mrs. Forin had resided in Belleville some 61 years, and was deeply beloved by all who were privileged to know her. Deceased was a life-long member of John Street Presbyterian Church since its inception, and identified herself with every noble cause.

The surviving children of the late Mrs. Forin are: Mrs. (Rev.) John Campbell and Mrs. Thorton Fell, of Victoria, B.C.; Judge Forin of Nelson, B.C., Dr. Alex. Forin of Edmonton, Alta., Mrs. (Rev.) David MacLaren of Toronto, Mrs. John MacLaren of Brockville, and Peter McL. Forin, barrister of this city. Also surviving her are fourteen grandsons and twelve grandaughters. These with a large circle of relatives and friends sorrow at her departure, but live expectant of a final meeting. Funeral announcement later.

TRAMPS PROTECTED

Three tramps were last night provided with shelter at the police station. They were men of middle ages and represented various nationalities.

The High School Exhibit

Have you seen it? If not, squander ten cents—buy a ticket and go. Mr. MacLaurin and staff have worked laboriously to produce an exhibit of the work done in the Art department of the High School. The work performed by the pupils is on exhibition. It was a great surprise to me to see the efficiency exhibited. The exhibits are numerous. People form different opinions and see things from different points of view. What would strike one as remarkable might strike another as commonplace and inferior. It might not be invidious for me to mention some of the work, which struck me as particularly well done:— A horse's head; a bunch of grapes; several of apples and fruit; one of a rose; patterns for rugs; a well-executed picture of a moose in a forest. Two portraits deserve especial mention. They were painted by Miss Knight. Both are pictures of the fair and youthful artist. The first one was painted from her reflection in a mirror. The next is a very charming picture of the artist when in a laughing mood. Both are gems. Professor James has had control of the Art school and has certainly produced great results. The loan exhibition will occupy your attention for hours, if you do it justice. Citizens who have curios or antiques should loan them for this exhibition. The gallery of pictures shown, of course, does not attract as greatly as if done in colors. All of the pictures are of a brown tint, which gives a sombre effect. There is one exception —a beautiful "Aurora." The pictures, however, reproduce with fidelity the work of the old masters and the principal pictures which are on exhibition in the galleries of the old world. If a number of them were purchased for the High School they would undoubtedly prove of great benefit to the pupils. It is the desire of the Principal and staff that a number of these pictures should be purchased. The entire exhibit is most creditable to the pupils and the staff of the High School.

Yours truly,
J. J. B. FLINT.

The box social, held at Eggleton School House, was all that could be desired. A good programme was provided. Next came the sale of the lunch boxes. Mr. A. W. Andrews, the auctioneer knows how to get the high prices, the gentlemen not murmuring, paid the price and got a dainty lunch.

Nathan Bronson, Clayton Rook, Madoc and Miss Ophelia Moore, Mount Forest, spent the week-end at Mr. Jos. Bronson.

FOOD QUESTION
Settled with Perfect Satisfaction
It's not an easy matter to satisfy all the members of the family at meal time, as every housewife knows.
And when the husband can't eat ordinary food without causing trouble, the food question becomes doubly annoying.
A lady writes:
"My husband's health was poor, he had no appetite for anything I could get for him, it seemed.
"He suffered severely with stomach trouble, was hardly able to work, was taking medicine continually, and as soon as he would feel better would go to work again only to give up in a few weeks.
"One day, seeing an advertisement about Grape-Nuts, I got some and he tried it for breakfast the next morning.
"We all thought it was pretty good although we had no idea of using it regularly. But when my husband came home at night he asked for Grape Nuts.
"It was the same next day and I had to get it right along, because when we would get to the table the question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts' was a regular thing. So I began to buy it by the dozen pkgs.
"My husband's health began to improve right along. I sometimes felt offended when I'd make something I thought he would like for a change, and still hear the same old question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts?'
"He got so well that for the last two years he has hardly lost a day from his work, and we are still using Grape-Nuts."
Name given by Canadian Postum Co. Windsor, Ont. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."
Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

OBITUARY.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Adam Hall took place on Sunday, March 21st. After a brief service at the house the cortage proceeded to the Presbyterian church in the 5th Concession of Thurlow, where an impressive service was held by the Rev. McLeod of Kingston. The interment took place in the family plot adjacent to the church.

Thou art gone from pain and suffering,
To join your friends above.
But we know that God has taken thee,
Through His most infinite love.

Oh, dear mother, how we'll miss thee,
As we think of thee day by day.
But we know it was for the best,
That He has taken thee away.

Sleep on, dear mother, sleep.
Until some future time
Then we shall see thee face to face,
Within a brighter clime.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.
Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.
Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.
In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.
Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.
The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.
The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.
For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands
W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.
The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.
Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.
In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.
Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.
A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.
The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

FOXBORO

For a month our young people have enjoyed a series of Thursday evening taffy-pulls at the homes of Mr. Anson Tucker, Mr. E. Caverly, Mr. C. Rose and Mr. C. Gardiner. Their hospitality is very much appreciated by the young people.

The Epworth League is ending the Conference year with programmes of deep interest to all. Following the evening program in discussion on the Ideal Church, we had an excellent evening with the immortal dreamer of Bedford jail. Papers were given under the following headings: Puritanism, Bunyan's early life, Bunyan as a preacher, Bunyan as an author, and in Bunyan's country. Then came an evening in discussion on Industry, based on the parable of the talents.

But the great event of the season is to come on Thursday evening, April 1st. This is not an April-fool joke, but a real grand concert in two parts. The first part is a debate on: "Resolved that devotion to fashion is a greater evil than the tobacco habit." Affirmitive side taken by J. B. Shaw and Wm. Prentice. Negative side taken by W. B. Tufts and R. B. McMullen. The second part is a drama entitled "Rebecca's Triumph," given by sixteen young ladies.

The Italian diplomatic baseball pitcher seems to be winding up for the great curve that will put the Indian sign on Austria's pennant-winning hopes.

Spring officially arrived Sunday. We have only the almanac's word for it, however.

Belleville Will Do It's Duty, Have You Done Yours?

Nearly $30,000 Collected the First Day, Fund Will Remain Open To-Morrow to Give Everyone a Chance

Are we down-hearted? No! No! Such were the sentiments of the patriotic canvassers last evening when they met at the Y. M. C. A. at 6.30, where the Women's Canadian Club provided supper for a tired lot of men, following which the captains of the various teams reported the success of the day's canvass as follows:—

Team No. 1, E. F. Dickens, captain	$1659 00
Team No. 2, A. P. Allen, captain	1886 65
Team No. 3, H. McGinnis, captain	356 00
Team No. 4, W. D. M. Shorey, captain	1260 50
Team No. 5, L. P. Hughes, captain	570 00
Team No. 7, Wm. Carnew, captain	1320 00
Total of new subscriptions secured by the teams	$7052 15

To this was added the amount of the previous list, the subscriptions secured by the Finance Committee, Senator Corby's contribution of $5,000 and the City of Belleville's grant, and it was found that of the $30,000 which was the objective of the campaign, over $29,000 had already been secured.

Enthusiasm ran high. The success of the first day's work surpassed the expectation of the most sanguine. The captains reported a most cordial reception of the canvassers by the citizens. Many had their subscriptions ready and waiting. Many of the canvassers had met with few or no refusals, and in the face of the success of the first day's work the workers decided that if equal hard work was done on Friday Belleville would contribute fully $40,000 to the Patriotic Fund.

Following supper a hearty vote of thanks to the ladies was moved by Mr. O'Flynn and seconded by Mr. Sneyd.

The amount secured by the respective teams does not, in any way, represent the amount of work done by the individual members of these teams. Some of the teams had a full complement of men—eight; while No. 3 and 5 had only two men working. The amount secured by these teams in reality represents magnificent results.

Considering the number of canvassers working the result of yesterday's canvass is remarkable. The organization provided for eight teams of eight men each. Of this number not more than one half turned up for work yesterday, consequently the labor fell heavily upon the few.

Owing to the small number of canvassers the committee find that the canvass cannot be as thorough as hoped for. The desire was to appeal to all the citizens for support for this cause. To canvass personally is impossible, but the committee desires to appeal through the press to every citizen of Belleville to do what he or she can. The Committee Rooms at the corner of Bridge and Pinnacle streets—opposite the post office, will be kept open this even and ALL day Saturday. Call and leave what you can. Do not think that your support is not desired because you were not canvassed personally—that was impossible. The duty is upon the shoulders of every Canadian—the privilege is yours. Let every Belleville citizens respond.

Among the subscriptions of yesterday were a variety of amounts from 25 cents to $500. The widow's mite is equally appreciated. Among the larger amounts received yesterday, not previously acknowledged were subscriptions of $500 each from Mr. Thos. Ritchie and The Graham Co., Limited; $300 from Mr. J. J. B. Flint, and $200 from Chairman J. F. Wills, in addition to $50 already paid.

A LAST APPEAL.

Owing to inclemency of the weather yesterday, sufficient ground was not covered by the canvassers. Therefore, with the limited number of workers it will be impossible to canvass everyone to-day.

Now, then, CITIZENS OF BELLEVILLE, if you are worthy of the name of Citizen, you won't wait to be canvassed. Why should you have to be shamed into DOING YOUR DUTY? Why wait until you are asked to contribute to the fund? Don't let the other fellow do your share. He who gives without asking gives doubly. The Fund Headquarters are at the Corner of Bridge and Pinnacle Streets, opposite the Post Office. They will be open until MIDNIGHT TONIGHT AND ALL DAY TOMORROW—SATURDAY. If you haven't been canvassed, go in yourself and contribute what you can. Others are doing it. WHY NOT YOU? REMEMBER, there are men and women in Belleville contributing towards the fund who are now depriving themselves of the necessities of life. HAVE YOU CONTRIBUTED YET? If not, what does your conscience say? Will you feel like looking your neighbor in the face after this appeal is over? Don't wait. DO IT NOW! If you can't get to the Fund Headquarters yourself today, mail your contribution to R. Tannahill, Bank of Montreal, Belleville, so that it will be received tomorrow and your name placed on the HONOR ROLL of Belleville.

LET YOUR MONEY DO THE SHOUTING.

GERMANS SEND ANOTHER DUTCH SHIP TO BOTTOM

Media With Oranges for London, Deliberately Sunk with Gunshots—Crew Given Fifteen Minutes to Escape

LONDON, March 26.—(Special.)—The Dutch steamship Medea was sunk in the English Channel today by the German submarine U-28, according to an announcement made last night by the Official Press Bureau.

The Medea was about ten miles off Beachy Head, carrying a cargo of oranges from Saloniki for London, when the submarine appeared and stopped her. The submarine demanded to see the ship's papers, and the Medea's mate was therefore sent aboard the submarine with them.

The submarine then took the Dutch ship in tow, and proceeded with her for half an hour. At the end of that time the mate was sent back to his ship with a message from the German captain that the ship would be sunk in fifteen minutes.

The Medea's crew promptly took to the boats. As soon as they were safely away from her the ship was sunk by six shots from the submarine.

After being at sea four hours in two open boats the crew were picked up by the British destroyer Teviot. They were all landed safely at Dover last night.

The Admiralty in reporting the sinking of the Medea by the U-28 says:

"The ship was flying the Dutch flag and had a Dutch crew aboard. Her name 'Medea, Amsterdam,' was painted in large letters on her sides. The ship's papers were taken by the Germans, who refused to return them."

The trawler Alprecht was attacked by a submarine today. A torpedo passed within ten feet of the fishing boat while she was crossing the Channel. A British patrol boat chased the submarine, which, however, disappeared.

Lloyds' Register contains the name of the Dutch steamship Medea of 1,235 tons, hailing from Amsterdam. She was built in 1913, and is owned by the Koninklijke Nederlandsche Steamship Co., which owns about fifty ships.

Boots Wear Four Months

Private "Charlie" Ross Back from Salisbury, Preferred Home Make

OTTAWA, March 25—Evidence of a new character was brought out before the Boot Committee this morning, when Private Charles Ross, of the Queen's Own Battalion, who was invalided home from Salisbury Plain, testified that he had worn a pair of Canadian militia boots for seventeen weeks before repairing them. They were then half-soled and the heels fixed and he had worn them until two weeks ago. He went to Valcartier Camp and thence to Salisbury, returning on February 18, was constantly engaged at both Valcartier and Salisbury.

"How have they worn," asked R. A. Pringle, K.C.

"Very well."

He would not have had them half-soled then, only that he had burned them.

"Are they a serviceable boot?"

"Yes."

"What kind of weather was it at Salisbury?"

"It rained fifty-five days straight. It was wet all the time."

"How did the Canadian boots wear, from your experience?"

"Very fine."

CANADIAN BOOTS BETTER.

"Did you wear British boots?"

"Two weeks." The boots were produced and he said he found the Canadian boots more comfortable, and he preferred them. He found the Canadian boots best for marching.

"Did you hear any complaints at Salisbury?"

"No."

He had read of the inquiry and wrote to Ames Holden Company; it was only by chance he wrote to that firm.

Col. Barton, resident Purchasing Agent for the British War Office, stated that orders have been placed recently in Canada for 25,000 bandoliers and 16,000 brushes. Half the four million dollar clothing order has been completed and shipped and the remainder will go forward in three weeks. Tenders are being asked for two million oat and sand bags.

MADE BY AMES-HOLDEN CO.

In answer to a question from Mr. Macdonald, he said that he took ill in December and was sent back to Canada in February to the hospital at Quebec. He was still there.

"Why were you struck off the list?" asked Mr. Macdonald.

"For rheumatism. But I have no papers to that effect."

He said he knew nothing of the complaints of General Alderson or other officers at Salisbury Plain.

Mr. W. P. Matthews, of Ames-Holden, identified the boots of Private Ross as made by their firm.

GERMAN TROOPS FIND THE YSER A TERROR

Great Pains Taken Not to Let Unseasoned Men Know they are Bound There—Stories of Cruelty by Officers

LONDON, March 26.—(Special.)—The Daily Chronicle has the following from its Amsterdam correspondent:

That there is a terror of the Yser for many German soldiers seems certain from accounts I have lately received of scenes and incidents in the far western corner of Belgium. In spite of all the frontier guards, there is still a good deal of uncensored communication with Holland and news occasionally reaches us from the heavy heart of the German lines. From this it seems clear that large bodies of young and unseasoned men are never allowed to know the exact locality to which they are being sent when they entrain. It is never for the rail-heads nearest the Yser, always it is for some destination whose name is not synonymous with certain death, for such is the reputation of the Yser front. A roundabout train journey is arranged in order to delude the soldiers still further if possible. According to their officers, the enemy in front of them is always more than half-beaten and ready to run away at the approach of the ever-victorious Germans.

There are stories of the appalling suffering of German soldiers on all sides here. A young soldier after many days in the trenches crawls away with fast-failing strength to a lonely cottage where he lies more dead than alive. The inmates lift him in and revive him and, driven by sheer agony, he breaks the rule of the army and takes off his boots, and again faints and cannot be aroused. The cottagers fearing punishment if the man is found thus under their roof, seek out an officer and report the matter to him. The officer visits the cottage and sees the exhausted soldier's feet are swollen almost shapeless. He is no longer any use as a fighting machine, and without further ado the officer shoots him dead as he lies in a fainting condition in the peasant's cottage. An example must be made. It is by no means an uncommon thing in the German lines to see a number of soldiers, sometimes forty or fifty in a body, being marched to the front with their hands tied behind them. In the firing line they are given the choice of shouldering a rifle and entering the trenches or facing a firing party.

ENEMY'S SUBMARINE SUNK IN THE ENGLISH CHANNEL

LONDON, March 26—Special—According to a statement by the British Admiralty last night, the German submarine U-29 has been sunk in the English Channel with all hands, and the British are rid at last of the most destructive of all the German undersea terrors which have been preying on their shipping. On March 11 and 12, within 36 hours, the U-29 sank no less than six ships off the Scilly Islands.

The text of the official statement follows:

"The Admiralty have good reasons to believe that the German submarine U-29 has been sunk with all hands."

This makes the sixth German submarine, so far as the British Admiralty has reported, sunk, five of them at least by British warships, since the outbreak of the war, and in only one case has the British report been denied by the Germans. Besides these, a French warship recently sank a submarine off the French coast, and three British merchant captains have put in claims for the rewards offered for merchantment ramming German underwater craft. One of these claims that of the captain of the steamer Thordis, has been allowed by the Admiralty and the reward paid.

NINETY-FIVE MILLION DOLLARS IN WAR ORDERS FOR CANADA

This Amount Placed by Allies Alone, Mayor of Folkestone Likes Samples of Canadian Troops

LONDON, March 25.—An official memorandum regarding war orders states that at least ninety-five million dollars' worth of war material and equipment has been ordered by the allies from Canada, and that this expenditure does not include that incurred on behalf of the Canadian contingents, which exceeds twenty-five millions. Seventy-two Canadian companies have beengiven orders for machining shrapnel shells and 67 are engaged in making the various parts required. The orders placed in the United States amount to more than a billion dollars.

"Tell the Canadian troops we are proud and pleased to have them in our midst," said Sir Stephen Penfold, Mayor of Folkestone yesterday. "They are a fine body, well dressed. We will do our utmost to make their sojourn among us as pleasant as possible. They are certainly an acquisition to Folkestone."

The War Office has written J. G. Colmer, secretary of the Canadian War Contingent Association, accepting the offer to enlarge the Queen's Canadian Hospital at Shorncliffe. The work will be proceeded with at once.

Costs a Cent To Get a Drink

OTTAWA, March 25.—Employees of the city and visitors at the city hall have to pay a cent for a drink of water now. With the permission of the board of control, the Public Service Cup Co. of Canada, Limited, has installed cup vending machines in the city hall. To obtain a drinking cup from these contrivances, it is necessary to deposit a cent in a crevice. The city receives no profit from the transaction the payment of cups going to the company.

HIGHWAY BILL BEFORE HOUSE

TORONTO, March 25.—The Ontario government's highway bill which came down yesterday will provide for increasing the grant toward country road constructions from 33 1-3 to 40 per cent. and establish a contribution of 20 per cent. for maintenance.

Townships will be given 25 per cent. of the cost of keeping a road overseer. The bill is in skeleton form and makes no special provision and sets no amount for expenditure this year.

The grant will be limited to $4,000 per mile on suburban roads.

INCREASE MADE IN DEER LICENSE FEES

TORONTO, March 25.—The Fish and Game Conittee decided to-day to recommend increases in the deer licenses from two to three dollars, and the increase of moose linceuses from five to seven dollars. They also approved of an increase of the bounty for timber wolves from $15 to $20. A bounty on brush wolves is recommended of five dollars.

The number of decoys a duck hunter can use was limited to 35 for each man and the flocks of decoys must be kept at least a hundred yards apart.

LARGE DELEGATION INTERVIEWS GOVERNMENT

(Canadian Press Special.)

TORONTO, March 26.—Two thousand hydro radial delegates from every part of the Province arrived here today by every possible means of conveyance to interview the Government with a demand for a thirty-two hundred dollar subsidy per mile for the construction of radial railways.

One portion of their very long memorial says the depopulation of the rural districts and congestion in the towns has been largely caused by the absence of railways in the thinly settled portions of the province and that the construction of such railways would mean the re-discovery and re-settlement of rural districts, and would practically pay for the subsidy expenses.

AUSTRIA AND ITALY FAIL TO AGREE

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, March 26.—The newspaper Agenzia Nationale says the negotiations between the Italian and Austrian governments regarding the cession of territory have definitely failed. Austria's final terms were of such a nature that Prince von Buelow thought them not worth while submitting and it is reported that he has resigned the role of mediator. A royal decree has been promulgated greatly extending the prohibition of exports.

Russian Victory In Carpathians

Austrians Driven Back in the Uszok Pass—Successful Russian Advance Against the Enemy in Bukowina

LONDON, March 26.—(Special.)—On the eastern front three battles are raging, and the Russians report successful advances in Bukowina, the Carpathians and northern Poland.

Telegrams from Buckharest report a great victory over the Austrian extreme right in Bukowina. These state the Russians with strong new forces have driven the Austrians back in the Uszok Pass of the Carpathians.

It is thought here that the Russians by bringing up new forces, may have succeeded in turning the Austrian right and in reaching the Sereth River, thus getting behind the Austrian army operating in the vicinity of Czernowitz.

The Russians have also resumed the offensive in the region of Pilica River, southern Poland, and have, according to the Petrograd statement, taken Domanevitze, an important German position, while in the north heavy fighting is again in progress along the East Prussia frontier, despite the condition of the ground.

ALL CALM ALONG THE FRENCH FRONTIER

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 26.—This afternoon statements: Yesterday was calm along the greater part of the front with almost continuous rain. Attempted attacks by the enemy between the Meuse and the Moselle were easily and immediately repulsed.

The enemy made two attacks at Bois De Comsenvoye and Bois Des Caures, northward of Verdun, three at Eparges and two at Bois le Pretre.

TURKS READY TO SURRENDER CITY

LONDON, March 25.—The Evening Chronicle publishes a despatch from Bucharest, Roumania, to the effect that the Turkish government recently decided to surrender Constantinople and the Dardanelles to the attacking fleet. The surrender was all but arranged, the Chronicle says, when at the last moment it was blocked by Germany.

GIVE TO-DAY

Good old Belleville! Nearly $30,000 the first day! That's Belleville's answer to the question of its loyalty. A new mark was set last night——$40,000, or bust! That's the spirit! Yesterday was real campaign weather—rain and mud, just like they have in France. The workers must have kept that in mind, because the rain and mud interfered in no way with the work. However, with the sharp frost last night it will be possible to move the heavy artillery into action, so have your purse strings open to supply the ammunition. With the silver bullets you supply today the enemy will be overcome. The enemy—Want, and his allies—Anxiety and Suffering—will be put to rout, and the families of our heroes in France saved from humiliation. GIVE TODAY!

TOWN EXCITED OVER ARREST OF ALLEGED GERMAN SPY

LINDSAY, March 25.—A mild sensation was caused this morning when it became known to a few intimate in military and police circles that a traveller representing a Toronto firm, had been placed under arrest by the military authorities suspected of being a German spy.

The gentleman in question, who purported to be representing Milne & Co., manufacturers of neckware, Toronto, was placed under arrest and military and civil authorities conferred as to the mode of procedure to follow. After a short conference with a representative of the bar, the Militia Department, Ottawa, was wired, an order being received to detain the man and that he be sent to Kingston, where his naturalization papers will be examined and other matters investigated.

It appears that the traveller first aroused suspicion when he called on a local dealer and opened up his samples of neckwear. The buyer was surprised because of the fact that another regular traveller for the same firm visited Lindsay about two weeks ago and placed a large order. Certain questions asked by the stranger as to how many soldiers were in Lindsay and when they were to leave, also aroused suspicion, which led to his apprehension.

The gentleman had quite a foreign accent, and when questioned by the authorities stated that he was born in Berlin, but produced his naturalization papers. He was quite affable and obliging, seemingly being quite frank and not disposed to hedge. He further stated that he had been in the habit of calling on Lindsay dealers before.

However, rather than taken any chances and according to instructions from headquarters, he was apprehended and will be further examined, although to some of his questioners he appeared to be quite bona fide.

REV. C. G. SMITH AT PETERBORO

PETERBOROUGH, March 26.—Rev. C. G. Smith of Belleville, who last year conducted special services in Murray Street Church, is in the city and is conducting a similar series of services each night this week. The large audience last night is prophetic of a very helpful week. The public who last year heard Mr. Smith's Sunday evening address on the Inside of the Cup will be glad of another opportunity to hear him.

ATTACK WAS REPULSED

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN Mar. 26.—The Army headquarters today gave out the following: On the heights of the Meuse, southeast of Verdun and near Combres, the French yesterday again attacked strongly in an attempt to take a German position, but after a determined engagement they were repulsed.

The fighting at Hartmanns Weller-kopf still continues. The Russian attacks on the Lakes to the east of Augustowo have been repulsed.

NATIONAL STEEPLE CHASE

(Canadian Press Special)

LIVERPOOL March 26.—Ally Sloper won the Grand National steeplechase here today, Jacobs, was second and Father Confessor third.

BRITISH AVIATORS IN SUCCESSFUL RAID

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 26.—A Daily Express despatch from Rotterdam says many persons were killed and wounded during the British aviators' successful raid on Hoboken, near Antwerp, both by bombs and by shrapnel from the wild firing of the German gunners. Two submarines were damaged and a portion of the works set on fire, and there is no doubt the raid accomplished its purpose of seriously delaying the placing of a fleet of new powerful submarines in the North Sea by the first week in April.

ESCAPED FROM CAMP

(Canadian Press Special.)

NEW YORK, Mar. 26.—A news agency despatch from Capetown says that Colmaritza, from whom, along with other rebels, a death penalty was withheld by the Legislature yesterday, has escaped from the detention camp and fled towards Central Africa.

NORWOOD RESIDENT CALLED BY DEATH

A well-known and much esteemed resident of Norwood, in the person of Mr. Bristow W. Moffat, was suddenly called to join the silent majority yesterday morning. He had been ill only a few days, and the announcement of his death was quite a shock to the community. Deceased had just passed his sixty-sixth birthday a few days ago and up to that time was apparently hale and hearty. The late Mr. Moffat was a man of high integrity. It had frequently been said that his word was as good as his bond and his veracity unquestionable. He was a hard working, industrious man, a devoted husband and father, and a good citizen.

He is survived by his wife and five daughters, viz.: Mrs. H. R. Pickens, of Panama, U.S., Mrs. A. A. McRoberts, of North Bay, Mrs. Chas. Ballard, of Mount Eagle Valley, Ont., Gertrude of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Evelyn who resides at home. One brother and two sisters are also living: Thomas of Norwood, Mrs. Creighton, of Syracuse, N. Y., and Mrs. Bartley, of Bad Axe, Mich.

The funeral will be held on Sunday afternoon from his late residence, Victoria St., and will be conducted under Orange auspices, deceased having being for a long period an active member of that Association—Norwood Register.

From the beginning of spring to the opening of the straw hat season is yet a long time.

Since chop suey has been popularized, the old-fashioned name hash, has fallen into disuse.

THE MAN-HATERS AT HOLLOWAY STREET

Last evening the Young People of Holloway St. Church gave their play "The Man Haters," in the School room and although the night was unfavorable, they were greeted by a large and appreciative audience.

A splendid programme preceeded the play, consisting of duets, readings, instrumental and vocal solos by Mrs. Denmark, Miss May Williams, Mr. Lawson, Miss Morin, Miss K. Henderson, Mr. Pimlott, and Miss Sanderson, every number of which was well received. Just as Mrs. Sanderson had sung her solo "Spring Song" she was presented with a magnificent bouquet of red roses, in behalf of the Young People, who gave the play, as an expression of their appreciation of her services in training them. Seldom have a lot of amateurs done much credit to a play, and to themselves than did the Young People of West Belleville last night.

A hearty vote of thanks was given to the young people who put on the Play and all, who so ably contributed to the success of the programme. The concert closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

MINE SWEEPERS DOING SOME GOOD WORK

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 26.—The battleship Queen Elizabeth and Agamemnon and the cruiser Cornwall entered the Dardanelles Wednesday night to protect the mine sweepers, according to a despatch to Reuter's from the Island of Tenedos, dated Thursday. At ten o'clock the Turkish artillery at Erenkui fired five shells and the forts at Kilid Bahr also fired. The British vessels replied with twenty rounds. To this the Turks made no reply. From midnight until morning the mine sweepers continued with their work without disturbance and with very satisfactory results.

PROMINENT RED CROSS ORGANIZER DEAD

BERLIN, March 26.—Special—The Serbian Daily Tribuna announces the death of Lady Paget, head of the British Red Cross in Serbia, from spotted fever.

The Lady Paget referred to in the above despatch is apparently Lady Ralph Paget, daughter of Lady Arthur Paget.

Sir Ralph Paget has been the British Minister in Belgrade for several years. During the Balkan war of 1912-13 Lady Ralph Paget acted as a nurse in the military hospital at Belgrade, and won the affection of the wounded soldiers to an unusual degree.

Young Lady Paget's maiden name was Louisa Leila Margaret Wemyss Paget. She married Sir Ralph Paget in 1907.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. Hector Prenter of Toronto, while in Belleville, will be the guest of Mrs. R. J. Graham, Charles street.

Mrs. Henry Corby entertained at luncheon in Ottawa on Wednesday last.

Mr. H. Reid has returned from Lipdsay, where he has been occupied during the past six weeks instructing a signalling class.

Mr. A. Wendling of Brockville, has returned from a month's visit to friends at Detroit, Toronto and Belleville.

Miss Marjorie Gulliver, of Belleville, is the guest of her cousin, Mrs. Jarvis, at the home of Mr. Jas. English of Madoc.

WHAT AWED PRZEMYSL

Russia's Reservists With Mixed Collection of Guns

PETROGRAD, March 25.—The Russian force to which Przemysl surrendered consisted of five divisions only of national reservists, with five hundred guns. The national reserves are not trained soldiers, but mostly are men over forty years of age.

The artillery was of somewhat mixed collection. The best guns were Creusot, long Toms, which have a long-range and are almost as handy as ordinary field-pieces. About one-third of all the Russian guns were pieces which had been discarded during the early months of the war in consequence of overuse, the regular batteries being supplied with new and improved guns.

With these discarded and worn-out weapons among others, General Sellwanoff contrived to hold the garrison in awe and finally compelled the surrender of the fortress, which is compared for strength and defensive power to Metz. The guns mounted at Przemysl numbered, it is believed, between three thousand and four thousand.

The inhabitants of the town who still remained after general evacuation in October last, totalled only a few thousands and nearly all were Jews. The town itself is uninjured, but bridges and forts have been blown up.

Invalided Home From France

Driver Yateman of the 34th Battery Arrived Here Today From the Front

Richard Yateman, aged 22 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Yateman who reside at 82 Mill street in this city, and who enlisted with the 34th Battery as a driver and left with the First Canadian Contingent for the front, has been invalided home. He arrived here at an early hour this morning. At the reinforcement base in France he sustained painful injuries in the chest from a kick by a horse on the 15th of February. He was sent back to England, where he contracted typhoid fever, from which he was laid up for about three weeks. Being sufficiently recovered as to be able to travel, he was invalided to Canada. Upon arrival at Halifax he received honorable discharge. After the accident he notified his parents of the injuries he had sustained but did not mention anything of his returning home. His arivel here was unexpected. To a representative of The Intelligencer, Yateman stated that as soon as able he would go to Kingston in reference to his case. The injured driver exhibited a sample of the boots given out to the soldiers at Salisbury Plains, which were condemned. He has in his possession many mementos of the war, such as shells, badges, military buttons, etc., also souvernirs he gathered in several places which he visited. Yateman denies the report which became freely circulated here that he was married at Devizes.

KING GEORGE VISITS HARWICH STATION

In a Pinnace He Makes a Tour of Harbor—Luncheon on the Ganges

HARWICH, Eng., March 26.—Special—King George yesterday paid an informal visit to the Harwich naval station. Wearing the undress uniform of an Admiral of the Fleet, the King arrived on a special train in a downpour of rain.

On alighting, the King shook hands with a few naval and military officers on the platform of the station. He then noticed the white dock clad sailors in the guard of honor drawn up along the platform were without overcoats, and ordered them to withdraw immediately to shelter.

The King in a pinnace made a tour of the Harbour, visiting the various warships and taking luncheon on board the Ganges, a training ship for boys. The Monarch showed particular interest in the repair ship, on board which he watched the artificers at work. He also inspected one of the newest of the submarines.

Later King George crossed to Felixstowe, where he saw the mine-sweepers and witnessed a seaplane flight. He returned to London early in the evening.

FIELD MARSHALL LEAVES CONSTANTINOPLE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 26—The Exchange Company received a despatch from Athens saying the Field Marshal von der Goltz, who has been in Constantinople for some months representing German military interests, has left the Turkish capital for Sofia, Bulgaria. At the same time General Liman von Sanders, commander of the Turkish forces in Europe, has left Constantinople for Adrianople.

Plain Talk About Your Eyes

If, from false pride, you refrain from wearing GLASSES which you know you really need—

If you wilfully neglect your sight—

If you persistently suffer from such folly—and you surely will—

You are not deserving of sympathy, but you should be severely censured,

If this causes you to awaken to your true condition—we can be of service to you.

Confesses He Murdered Boy

OWEN SOUND, Ont., March 25.—Henry Thackeray King, the Englishman arrested here for the murder of 12-year-old Eddie Nicholson, yesterday confessed to the crime. He gave no motive other than an unreasoning rage with his brother, William King, for turning him adrift a week ago and from the fact that he was refused employment at a factory. In the presence of a witness he gave a written and signed confession, and it is stated that as he was driving with the boy he had been seized with a homicidal mania and said: "Something came over me so that I drew the dirk knife from my right-hand coat pocket and struck the boy down."

King's story is that when he was refused employment at the North American Bent Chair Company he decided to drive out into the country a couple of miles to say goodbye to a couple of friends. He decided to take a boy with him to hold the horse, and picked Eddie Nicholson. When some distance over the top of the waterworks hill King stopped the horse and got out of the buggy. The boy also got out. It was then that King suddenly stabbed the boy without premeditation.

On his return to Owen Sound he became obsessed with the idea that the act of his brother in turning him adrift had made him indirectly responsible for the murder and decided to retaliate by burning his brother's buildings. He got the rig again from the livery, drove out to his brother's place, and fired the barns and piggeries. The knife with which the murder was committed was found in a fence corner near the scene of the crime.

Writes Herself A war letter Seeks Charity

LONDON, March 25—On the charge of writing herself a letter from the front, by means of which she obtained nearly $100 from a charity society, a sentence of six months was passed by a local police court on a woman named Elizabeth Reader. The letter purported to come from her husband, but the envelope containing it was received by the husband safe in his own home from a friend in the ranks. By the slight change from Mr. and Mrs. the woman used the envelope to deceive the Slodiers Families Relief Association. The fabricated letter letter read:

"Dear Liz: Just a few lines, hoping you are better, also the dear children. I am fairly well myself, only my hand is rather painful.

"Don't you worry yourself and make yourself ill, for we must pray to God for the best, for with His help I shall come back home safe and well. I hope you will get your money safe.

"Dont worry if you don't hear from me for a little while, as we are going up to the firing line this afternoon, so pray to God to keep me safe. If you don't hear from me soon, write to Major Walker. I will now close, as we are to get a pop at them, so tata for a while—from your loving husband, W. R. Reader."

AMERICAN SUBMARINE GOES TO BOTTOM

HONOLULU, March 26.—Special.—The American submarine F-4, which was submerged at 9.15 a.m. yesterday, two miles off Honolulu harbor, had not reappeared at nightfall, and grave fears were expressed for its safety. The F-4 carries a crew of twenty-five men, and is commanded by Lieut. Alfred L. Ede.

The three other submarines of the F group stationed here, the naval tug Navajo and launches were scouring the ocean for miles about the harbor entrance last night in search of the missing vessel. Naval officers said they were hopeful that no serious mishap had befallen the F-4, but they admitted that the circumstances of the craft's prolonged disappearance gave rise to much apprehension.

Campaign Workers Are Entertained

In the assembly room of the Y. M. C. A. building last evening, the members of the Patriotic Campaign were provided with supper by the ladies who are members of the Women's Canadian Club. The spread provided was all that could have been desired.

Ex-Mayor Wills, chairman of the Campaign Association, occupied the chair, and seated around the festive board were the captains of the various campaign teams and associate workers.

After due justice had been done to the goods things provided, the captains of the various teams were called upon to report the result of the canvas for the day. These reports were received with much enthusiasm.

Capt. E. F. Dickens for No. 5 team, reported the collections as $1,659. He stated he was proud of the members who were associated with him.

Mr. Percy Ketcheson for team No. 7, reported on behalf of Mr. A. P. Allen, Captain, who was absent from the city, that their collections for the day were $1,866.65. He also reported that Prof. Johnstone has offered his assembly hall for a dance to be held at any time so desired.

Mr. Hope McGinnis, captain of No. 3 team, reported a collection of $356, but intimated that this amount would be much added to before the campaign closed.

Mr. D. W. M. Shorey, as captain of No. 8 team, reported that their collection amounted to $1,240.50. This amount had been collected from a number and the subscriptions were not of a large amount.

Mr. L. P. Hughes, as captain of No. 1 company, reported the collection of his team as $570.

Mr. Wm. Carnew, as captain of No. 4 team, reported $1,320 as being collected by his team. The captain stated it was a pleasure for him to be associated in this campaign.

Chairman Wills stated that the campaign had progressed in a most satisfactory manner. Over $29,000 had already been subscribed towards the fund.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn being called upon, congratulated those who were engaged in the campaign, and the result which had been achieved. He was proud of those who had so loyally stood by the cause. The repast provided deserved a compliment to the ladies and he moved a vote of thanks be tendered them.

Mr. H. Sneyd in a few complimentary remarks seconded the vote of thinks, which was carried in an enthusiastic manner and was tendered to the ladies by the chairman.

Mr. D. W. M. Shorey, being called upon, responded in a pleasing manner on behalf of the ladies. He said the ladies' hearts were in this campaign as much so as the men, and it was a pleasure for him to respond on their behalf.

The proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

WOMEN ARE ACTIVE IN JAPAN'S ELECTION

TOKIO, March 25.—Closing an exciting campaign, during which the wives of several candidate at Tokio made personal visits and appeals to the voters, a general election was held today throughout the Japanese Empire to choose a new House of Representatives.

The last House was dissolved by the Emperor on Christmas Day because of its refusal to ratify the military program of the Cabinet. Today's election therefore not only brings in a new House but decides the fate of the Cabinet headed by Count Chigenobu Okuma.

The appearance of women in the campaign for the first time in Japanese history caused a sensation and provoked considerable comment in the newspapers concerning the development of the "new woman."

The Government used all its efforts against corruption in the elections, and the police were ordered to make quick arrests in the case of bribe-giving and bribe-taking. As a result 1,500 persons were arrested.

The number of representatives elected today was 381, but the result will not be known for several days. Of the 545,000,000 population of Japan, only about 2,000,0000 persons have the right to vote.

TWO DOZEN AMERICANS HAVE FALLEN IN WAR

OTTAWA, Ont., March 25.—"The Canadian people will be amazed to learn," declared General Hughes, Minister of Militia, in Parliament last night, "that already more than two dozen Americans with the first Canadian contingent now on the battle line have fallen, and hundreds more are in the Canadian regiments fighting bravely."

HORSES AND CATTLE CREMATED IN FIRE

Mr. John Kincaid, son of the late William Kincaid, met with a heavy loss by fire about midnight Tuesday night. He lives about 2 miles west of Queenboro on Madoc road. The origin of the fire is unknown. Mr. Kincaid was at Toronto on business.

The barns were completely destroyed together with 32 head of cattle, 5 valuable horses, also implements, harness, etc. One buggy only was saved. There is a very small insurance.

It's Loaded You Say!

Well, I'll take your word for it, but don't fool with it here!

That's what any sane individual would say to a man with a loaded gun. Yet there are thousands tampering with table beverages loaded with a poisonous drug which gets in its work with sure precision.

Those beverages are Tea and Coffee—
Caffeine is the drug.

Headache, biliousness, nervousness, sleeplessness—these are some of the signs that so often accompany tea and coffee operations.

Knowing that tea and coffee are loaded, why not quit them both and use

UTILIZING SPACE

Now that Spring is at hand, and the theme of importance is more production, it might be a wise plan for Belleville land owners to consider the suggestion of The Kingston Standard and begin preparation for attack on their vacant lots, with a view to increasing the agricultural output of this city. There are many plots of ground in and surrounding our city that could be worked to advantage and the time is at hand to begin operations. Even though the owners do not see fit to take up the work of land production, there are many who would be glad to till the land, which would prove a boon to many local families. Going into the subject, The Standard says:

"Increased production is one of the cries at the present moment. Then why not make use of vacant lots in and adjoining the city? The idea has been tried in other cities, and has proved a great success.

"We know there are owners of such lots who are quite willing to rent these at nominal sums, or for no rent at all, to deserving people. But, sad to say, the fear is present in their minds, born of some actual experiences, that thieves will break in and steal the results. These dirty rascals have thus interfered in the past with what would have proved of great assistance to many people by preventing them being willing to plant these lots.

"But times are different now; all land that can be cultivated ought to be. What appears to us to be necessary is that following the example of some other cities a Vacant Lot Gardening Club should be formed. Lists of the vacant lots which the owners are willing to rent, the terms they want, and the condition of the land could be made out. Public notice could be given as to where application should be made for the lots. In some places subscriptions have been obtained in order that the land might be ploughed and got ready. In others not only is this done, but seed and tools have been provided so that the most destitute people might share in the benefits.

"What can be done by such a scheme is proved by the experience of Calgary. Last year about 250 vacant lots were cultivated by 174 gardeners, and produce worth at least $5,000 was raised. It is anticipated that even greater success will attend this year's efforts.

"The scheme is capable of many ramifications. Thus interest in agricultural matters may be increased, prizes can be offered for the best results, and the vacant lots in the city itself can be made attractive by having a border of flowers.

"Here is the opportunity for those people who are seeking the chance to go about doing good."

CHINA AND JAPAN

When Japan took Tsing-Tau from Germany it was generally expected that she would retain it, but it was not anticipated that she would go any further. But once secure in the possession of this territory Japan formulated certain demands upon China which she presented in the form of an ultimatum, and these demands have attracted very wide attention. The exact nature of them has not been made public, but some of the stipulations appear to have been most unacceptable to China. One Chinese writer in the United States asserts that Japan actually demanded that China turn over to her the Chinese arsenal at Hanyang. We cannot corroborate this statement; but Japan did ask that certain important places be policed jointly by China and Japan, and China was to purchase war supplies only from Japan. Now Japan is our ally, and we would not like to think that she meant to assume a virtual control of Chinese affairs, but her demands, so far as known, certainly pointed that way. But Great Britain, Russia, France, and the United States are all interested in the preservation of the integrity of China and could not allow Japan to take such action without remonstrance, and three of these Powers—Great Britain, Russia and the United States—have officially communicated with the Japanese Government pointing out that certain of the Japanese demands were not in harmony with the treaty agreements between China and the three Powers referred to. It is probable that these representations will be sufficient, and that the Japanese demands will be modified agreeably to former treaties.

BRONCHIAL COUGHS

When the bronchial tubes are affected with that weakening, tickling cough, they need immediate and sensible treatment. The breath seems shorter because of mucous obstructions; usually fever is present and your head jars with every cough. Your chest aches and the inflammation often spreads to the lungs.

The food-tonic that has proven its worth for forty years—is Scott's Emulsion. It drives out the cold, which is the root of the trouble, and checks the cough by aiding the healing process of the enfeebled membranes.

If you are troubled with bronchitis or know an afflicted friend, always remember that Scott's Emulsion builds strength while relieving the trouble.

CURRENT COMMENT

It is well that there are no New Englanders interned in Germany. An edict has just been issued by the German Government prohibiting pastry making. A New England without pie does not find life worth living.

"Bread and Peace" printed on red posters is appearing throughout the German Provinces. This cry for both bread and peace will soon become insistant. It would not be at all surprising if there was soon a sudden collapse of the German war machine.

At Washington they expect that a big battle will soon occur between the forces of Carranza and those of Villa in the Tampico district. Washington still appears to be under the delusion that the bandit operations in Mexico are similar to ordinary wars.

The Netherlands government has made a protest to Berlin on account of an attack by a German aeroplane on a ship flying the flag of the Belgian relief commission, and it is said at Washington that the United States should take similar action. Certainly the German government owes civilization an apology for such an act, if it was committed.

The capture of Przemysl seems to have been a bigger thing that was realized at first. Austrian boastfulness dwells on the prolonged siege—not on the details of the surrender. It is clear enough that the Austrian stomach has had enough of fighting; and we may expect to hear overtures for peace at any time from Vienna—either directed toward Petrograd or Rome.

Evidence seems to be accumulating from both the eastern and western theatres of war that events of the greatest importance will shortly take place. A new attack by land and sea is shortly to be made on the Dardanelles, while the indications are that a vigorous offensive in the west will shortly be undertaken. In the meantime the entry of Italy, Greece and the Balkan States on the side of the Allies draws nearer daily. Italy may take the step at any moment.

SCALE OF PENSIONS FOR THE CANADIANS

Annuity of $564 for Rank and File Disabled by Wounds, Injuries or Illness—Scale in Four Degrees—$22 a Month for Widows, $5 a Month for Each Child—Plan Presented Commons

OTTAWA March 25.—In the House of Commons today Sir Robert Borden tabled for the consideration of the members the new scale of pensions, which have been decided upon for militia men wounded or disabled on active service.

The Premier explained that the Government has power to enlarge the pension scheme under terms of the war measures act passed at the emergency session, but the order-in-council will not go into effect until it has been approved by the members. The order-in-council provides that the following rates of pensions will be granted militia men wounded or disabled on active service during drill or training or on other military duty, provided the disability was not due to his own fault, or negligence:

Rank and file. First degree $264; second degree $192; third degree $132; fourth degree $75.

Sergeant, first degree $336; second, $252; third $168; fourth $100.

Squad, battery, or company, sgt.-major, or quartermaster-sgt., first degree $372; second $282; third, $186; fourth $108.

The foregoing also applies to color-sergeants and staff sergeants.

Regimental Sgt.-Major, master gunner and regimental quartermaster-sergeant, first degree, $432; second, $324; third, $216; fourth, $132; warrant officer, first degree, $480; second, $360; third, $240; fourth $144.

Lieutenant, first degree $480; second $360; third $340; fourth $144.

Captain, first degree $720; second $540; third $360; fourth, $216.

Major, first degree $960; second $720; third $450; fourth $288.

Lt.Colonel, first degree $1,200; second $900; third, $600; fourth, $360.

Colonel, first degree, $1,440; second $1,080; third, $720; fourth $456.

Brigadier-general, first degree, $2,100; second $1,620; third $1,050; fourth $636.

Applying the Degrees

The first degree should be applicable to those who are rendered totally incapable of earning a livelihood as a result of wounds or injuries received or illness contracted in action or presence of the enemy.

The second degree shall be applicable to those who are rendered totally incapable of earning a livelohood as a result of injuries received or illness contracted on active service, during drill or training, or on other duty, or are rendered materially incapable as a result of wounds or injuries received or illness contracted in action or in the presence of the enemy.

The third degree shall be applicable to those who are rendered materially incapable of earning a livelihood as a result of injuries received or illness contracted during drill or training, or on active duty, or rendered incapable as a result of wounds or injuries received or illness contracted in action or in the presence of the enemy.

The fourth degree shall be applicable to those who are rendered in a small degree incapable of earning a livelihood as a result of injuries received or illness contracted on active service during drill or training or on other duty.

Where the injury is great enough to require the constant services of an attendant, such as the loss of both legs or both arms, or the loss of sight of both eyes, or where the use of both legs or both arms has been permanently lost, the rates shown in columns first degree and second degree may be increased one-third.

In addition to the above rates, a married officer, warrant officer, non-commissioned officer, or man totally incapacitated may draw for his wife half the rate provided in article 592 for the widow and the full rate for the children of an officer, etc., of his rank, subject to the limitations respecting the age of children. After the death of the officer, the widow may then draw the full rate provided in article 592 for widows and children.

The widowed mother of a totally disabled soldier may be granted a pension at half the rates fixed in article 592 for a widow, provided the soldier is her sole support and unmarried. In the event of the soldier's death, she may draw the full rate referred to.

Widows and Children

Pensions may be paid to the widows and children of those who have been killed in action or have died from injuries received or illness contracted on active service, during drill or training or other military duty at the following rates, provided the soldier's death was not due to his own fault or negligence.

Rank held by husband, son or father at time of death.

Rank and File—$22 a month for widow and $5 a month for each child.

Sergeant—$28 a month for widow and $5 for each child.

Squad Battery or Color Sergeant, Major, Squad Battery or A. M. Sergeant—$30 a month for widow and $5 a month for each child.

Color Sergeant, Staff-Sergeant, Regimental Sergeant Major, not W.O., Master Gunner, not W.O., Reg'l Quartermaster Sergeant—$30 a month for widow and $4 a month for each child.

Warrant Officer—$32 a month for widow and $5 a month for each child.

Lieutenant—$37 a month for widow and $6 a month for each child.

Captain—$45 a month for widow and $7 a month for each child.

Major—$50 a month for widow and $8 a month for each child.

Lieut.-Colonel—$60 a month for widow and $10 a month for each child.

Colonel—$75 a month for widow and $10 a month for each child.

Brig.-General—$100 a month for widow and $10 a month for each child.

Rates for Orphans

A widowed mother whose only son was her sole support and unmarried shall be eligible for pension as a widow without children and subject to the same conditions as hereinafter set forth.

In the case of orphans, the rates shown above for children may be doubled and the pension paid to legally appointed guardians.

Pensions to widows and children shall take effect from the next day following that on which the death of the husband, etc., occurred, and a gratuity equivalent to two months' pension shall be paid the first month, in addition to the pension.

The pension of a widow, a widowed mother or child may be withheld or discontinued, should such widow, etc., be or subsequently prove unworthy of it, or should she be or become wealthy.

The decision of the Minister as to whether a pension should be so withheld or discontinued shall be final.

The pension to a widow or widowed mother shall cease upon her re-marriage, but she will be eligible for a gratuity of two years' pension payable to her immediately after her marriage.

Neither gratuity nor pension shall be paid on account of child, (or orphan) over fifteen years of age, if a boy, or over seventeen years of age, if a girl, unless, owing to mental or physical infirmity, the child (or orphan) is incapable of earning a livelihood, in which case the pension may be continued till the child (or orphan) is twenty-one years of age, but no pension will be paid to a child or orphan after marriage.

Individual cases for which the regulations do not provide or sufficiently provide may be specially considered by the Governor-in-Council. Pensions may be paid monthly in advance.

2,000 BUTCHER SHOPS IN ENGLAND CLOSE UP

LONDON, March 25.—Two thousand butcher shops have been closed in England since the beginning of the war. The increased prices of meat, and the efforts in most households to economize closely, has been the cause for the decreased consumption which has hit the retail butchers very hard.

Probably more meat than ever before is being imported into the British Isles, but a large proportion of it goes immediately into the hands of the Government for supplying the soldiers at home and abroad. The business of the average retail butcher according to trade journals has decreased 20 per cent.

CATTLE RAISING IN THE BUFFALO COUNTRY

The result of the continued shortage in cattle, the future price of beef, and the solution of the perplexing problem of feeding the world, are vital questions uppermost in the minds of many thinking people to-day.

There is no doubt that the wide acres of Western Canada can, and will, be made to play an important part in bringing about a proper balance in supply and demand. In the Northern parts of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and in Alberta along the Canadian Northern Railway are many thousands of acres of the richest pasture in the world, well watered and treated by the sunniest of climates. These rolling hills for the greater part are still unpeopled and untrodden by the hoofs of domestic animals.

The foot hills district of Alberta is traditionally a cattle country, a natural feeding ground where peculiar climatic conditions prevail which make it best suited to cattle on the range. Ranchers who know old Mexico, Texas, Colorado, Montana, Wyoming and the other ranching states, as well as Alberta, are at a loss to understand the superior qualities of vast sections of this province as a pasturing field for live stock. They will tell you that so far as the appearance of the grasses are concerned the pasturage is about the same here as it is in Texas or parts of Mexico. But they say also, "Take four yearling steers out of the same herd in Mexico and leave one in Mexico; place a second one thousand miles north in Colorado; a third still farther north in Montana or Wyoming, and the fourth in Alberta, and it will be found that at the end of three years, when all four animals are ready for market, the Mexican product will weigh from 900 to 950 pounds; the Colorado steer will weigh from 1,000 to 1,050 pounds; those in Montana and Wyoming will weigh from 1,100 to 1,150 pounds; while the animal fed in Alberta will go to market weighing from 1200 to 1,300 pounds."

Why is it that these beef animals take on from 100 to 150 pounds extra weight with each progression northward between old Mexico and Alberta? The rancher cannot explain or answer the question but cattlemen all over America know that such is the case.

At Vermillion Experimental Farm an interesting investigation was conducted last Winter in the feeding of beef cattle. One lot of steers was fed indoors, each animal being allowed to stand untied in a box stall while another herd of the same number was left to feed and fatten outside on the native grasses. The result at the end of the experimental period was that the animals which had enjoyed the outdoor life weighed more and were of better marketable quality than those cared for in stables.

One of the causes assigned for the decline in stock-raising is the reduction in the areas available for grazing on account of so many big ranches being converted into farms. Experiments conducted at Vermillion would rather go to show that the old grazing grounds were too large, and that the feeding is really better when the animal is confined to a comparatively limited area, providing the pasturage is of the right kind and there is plenty of water.

Before there were any cattle in Alberta, or it was known that it was possible to feed them outside all the year round the Indian hunters could always find the buffalo during the Winter months pasturing in the foot hills. In the Summer the herds wandered on the plains and fed on the prairie grasses. The plains have since become grain fields but the foothill district extending north from the International Boundary for a thousand miles will always be a natural feeding ground for live stock.

In the Southern part of Alberta the altitude is greater than in the more northerly districts, but while the herds in the South have wider tacts of treeless pasturage, in the north from Red Deer on into the Peace River country, there are more trees, a richer vegetation and more natural shelter.

There is unlimited opportunity in this country for mixed farming and stock-raising. The country has only to be better known to attract a large number of people, and there will undoubtedly be a great deal of money made there out of stock in the near future.

VEGETABLE FOODS AND THEIR VALUE IN THE DIET

(By Frank T. Shutt. B.Sc., Dominion Chemist.)

That many of the ills that flesh is heir to arise from indiscretions in diet is a fact that more of us should realize, and the earlier in life the better. Many of us, and perhaps this applies especially to those who live in the city, eat too much. As a result we get too stout as life advances, and, what is still more serious, an extraordinary strain is put on certain of the organs of the system in nature's effort to get rid of the waste. Further, we who live more or less sedentary lives, eat too much meat; the man who sits at a desk all day long or stands behind a counter may work as hard as the navy or ploughman, but it is different kind of work. It does not call for the same amount of strong food. There is no necessity to diet ourselves by formula or to weigh out what we should eat, but but we ought to be guided to a certain extent in our eating by common sense and the knowledge which science furnishes respecting the requirements of the body for the maintenance of the vital heat, the development of energy and the repair of tissue.

As city people we might keep in better health and live more cheaply if we would eat less meat and concentrated foods and use more vegetables and fruit. And this advice might specially be emphasized for the summer diet, when there is not the same call for the system for the stronger foods.

Fresh vegetables are wholesome, palatable and productive of good health. Though in direct food value vegetables yield a first place to meats, it must not be supposed they are destitute of those nutrients which build up the body tissues and keep the machinery going. It would be possible, though not desirable, to live exclusively on vegetable foods. But vegetables, and especially fresh vegetables, are not to be regarded merely from the standpoint of maintenance, though we assert that now-a-days they would make a very good showing on the ground of economy. Nor need we urge their extensive use on the grounds simply that they are appetizing and furnish variety to the diet. They, in addition to these excellent qualities possess a medicinal value; they are aids to digestion and afford that bulk or volume to the food necessary for the right detention of the alimentary tract. Many vegetables contain salts which are gently laxative, relieving constipation, that scourge that is the forerunner of so many dangerous, and not infrequently, fatal diseases. And, again, many vegetables, especially those used in salads, have a special value in cooling the blood and are, therefore, most wholesome, especially in the summer season.

Fresh vegetables are vastly superior to those that are wilted from keeping a day or two, in succulency, crispness and palatability. To be enjoyed at their best, vegetables must be eaten strictly fresh.

DON'T KISS BABIES

For the first few months the babe should do little but sleep and eat. It should not be tossed about, kissed and tickled, nor should it be hawked about, visiting; its feeding hours should be regular, and between times let it alone.

The persecution these little ones suffer at the hands of silly relatives and family friends is really pitiful. Leave the babies alone and let them grow.

The death rate in the first three years of child life is greatest, and after that every added year increases its safety.

The most frequent cause of infant mortality is improper feeding, and impure milk; the stomach of the new born babe is a very small and a very delicate affair, but it is through the action of this small and delicate organ all growth comes, and the food which Nature has prepared for the babe's stomach is the mother's milk.

The wise mother will insist upon nursing her child not only for the child's sake, but also for her own. The mother-fed child is the one that escapes a hundred dangers to which the bottle-fed babe is exposed; follow Nature and it is well for mother and for child. Nature loves her own, and it is when we stray from her that infant mortality begins.

The mother must be well fed if she would feed her child; make no mistake about this. To-day we have so many food fads, and eat so many things that have really no food value, that often the mother's milk is deficient in certain essential elements necessary for the child's growth.

Think of all the elements required, bone, muscle, energy, nerve (we can't live today without nerve) the heart, lungs, in fact all the thoracic viscera, all the abdominal viscera, the skin, the brain—all must be fed and kept growing; and the mother must through the food she takes provide for herself and her child.

It is not difficult to understand that a most generous diet is required to meet these demands. Every food stuff should be a part of the mother's daily rations from the time of conception until the child is weaned.

There is no better resting place for a child than in a roomy carriage on the verandah, sheltered from the winds, or in the south room of the house, well ventilated, warm in the winter time—Canadian Home Journal.

WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU

You are a practical farmer. You read of great co-operative movements in foreign lands that have benefited the farmers of those countries wonderfully. By them our European brothers have solved many of the labor, marketing and financial problems that worry you. You read also, from time to time, of commissions and departments organized by our governments to assist you in these and many other ways. And all this makes good reading and tends to impress you with the idea that in the aggregate you are a mighty important factor in the body economic of the land.

But what good does it all do? That is the question you ask. Does it give you heavier crops; does it secure you cheaper or more efficient labor; does it market your products more directly or profitably; does it assure you that the price of hogs or wheat next fall will be such that you will make a reasonable profit labor and investment? Have you ever been able to borrow money upon easier terms as a result of this work and these plans you've read about? In other words, what is your personal, individual relation to all the agricultural extension work under way in Canada and elsewhere, to-day?

Upon the answer of those questions depends the value of all such work. It may be tremendously efficient in digging up scientific data of how to grow larger crops, of how money and labor have been secured in other lands, and how distribution systems have been perfected. It may be fruitful with plans of how these things may be brought about in Ontario. But if it doesn't get down close to the life of the man on the soil, if it doesn't see the situation from his view-point and seek out remedies suitable to his circumstances, it cannot show results. Unless it can increase either the net profits or happiness—and it should increase both—of the hundred-acre farmer in the provinces it isn't paying for its keep.

WHAT HAS BEEN THE RESULTS!

Has our agricultural extension work done this? Well, it has worked in the right direction; there is no doubt of that. About the most practical method yet devised of getting home to the farmer has been the district representative system. In a way the county demonstrator is an interpreter of all the agricultural instruction that has gone before. But, even so! he is handicapped. One man in a county cannot give individuals a great amount of time.

Our experimental farms and our agricultural specialists have been working for many years securing and compiling accurate information. They have been wonderfully efficient scientifically. A vast quantity of data has been collected in reports and bulletins about crops and farm methods. If it were applied upon the farms of Ontario production would be increased, possibly, one hundred per cent.

That is the point. "If it were applied"—but it isn't, and that has been the weakness of our departments. They have collected a great deal of valuable information, but they have never shown the practical, hundred-acre-farmer how to use it. They have not viewed the matter from his angle of vision.

The farmers have never been satisfied that the increase in crops would pay for the increased work in securing them, and they have not been certain that markets would hold if all else were favorable. Then there were the questions of labor and finance, and other questions, that the bulletins didn't attempt to answer.

Now these were questions of farm management and rural economics. The information published was good, but it wasn't accompanied by further information that would instruct the ordinary farmer how to apply it. In other words, while we have been given most valuable knowledge for years regarding production we have not been told enough about farm management and the distribution of farm products. And we must have these if the knowledge already acquired is to be used to anything like the degree its value merits.

So this would seem to be the next move for agricultural departmnts to make—to bring their work home to the average farmer, to show him not only how to produce a heavy crop, but how to produce it profitably. They must teach business efficiency, together with scientific efficiency, and they must teach it in terms the ordinary farmer will understand. Perhaps the next form of bulletin published will be one which will explain in a business-like way how, the knowledge contained in the previous ones may be applied.

WE MUST DO OUR OWN WORK

But after all, will the problem of the farmer be solved by our Governments! The history of other lands does not indicate that it will be. The healthiest kind of help is self-help. What will be done for the betterment of farm conditions, as it affects the small farmer, we believe, must be done by the farmers themselves. The work must come from the inside. When our farmers once decide to pull together to effect a definite end that end will be not far distant.

Before anyone can become an efficient manager he must have the progressive spirit—he must want to become efficient. After that it is only a question of time. He will have problems to study, but the important things that he wishes to study them. And, after all, that is the real problem.

How will we reach the indifferent rural leaders to inject new life into the fellows who have ceased to think of leadership. Old Ontario must have farmer? It comes down to a question of larger things.

METHODS AND RATES OF PLANTING CORN

The row or drill method of planting corn is still commonly followed in Ontario and Quebec. The investgation conducted by the Seed Branch shows that 956 farmers were planting in drills at an average rate of 2.14 pecks of seed per acre. The average results of thirty-two separate tests conducted throughout Ontario for a five year period shows that the hill method gave one ton of green crop per acre and more than the drills, and three eighths of this ton was in the form of freshly-husked ears. A four year average at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, shows two and three-quarter tons per acre in favor of the hill method. Hills should be three feet apart each way and contain three or four plants. Rows should be three feet apart and the plants nine inches apart in the row. Three and a half feet spacing might be preferable for large-growing varieties or weedy land. The hill method gives a much better opportunity for cultivating the land and controlling weeds, but the corn is rather more difficult to harvest than that which is grown in drills.

One bushel, 70 lbs. on the car or 56 lbs. of shelled corn, germinating 59 per cent., should be sufficient to plant five acres, by the hill method. One acre will require 60 cents worth of seed at $3.00 per bus. Seed corn of the same price planted at the average rate by the drill method will cost $1.60 per acre.

CLEANING AND GRADING SEED GRAIN AND FLAX

The 1913 Seed Branch inquiry into the condition of seed grain used in Canada showed that an average of 44 noxious and 138 common weed seeds were being seeded on each square rod of land in oats. Seed wheat and barley were equally foul and flax was about four times worse. Over 88 per cent. of the 2065 samples of wheat, oats, barley and flax collected as being shown were reported cleaned with a fanning mill, but most of the samples showed that either the mills were not equipped with the proper sieves or else they were not well operated. The remaining home-grown seed, almost 11 per cent., was being sown direct from the thresher with no cleaning whatever. Small, broken and shrunken seed in the samples also indicated the failure in grading.

Cereal grains should be graded to remove from one-third to one-half of the total bulk, and most of the weed seeds will be removed with the screenings. Some of the weed seeds are difficult to separate but most of them can be removed by a fanning mill. Any make of mill which has sufficient shake, angle or slope of sieves and wind supply may be provided with suitable sieves. The top sieves should be just coarse enough to let the grain run through and need sufficient slope to run coarse impurities over the tail of the mill. The lower screens should have openings of the size required for grading or removing weed seeds.

With wheat the grade for high-class seed is made over an 8/64 inch perforated zinc screen. The grade for oats is made over a screen with slots 5/64 by 1-2 inch. Barley requires the same type with slots larger depending on the size of the seed. Wild buckwheat may be removed from wheat by a screen with triangular perforation 0/6 inch or larger. Flax requires on top a woven wire sieve 3x16 inch mesh (3 spaces to the inch one way and 16 the other) and a 1/12 inch perforated screen below.

If sieves or screens of the desired size and type cannot be had from the fanning mill manufacturer, the sheet material may be obtained through any reliable seed house and made up by a carpenter.

Wrote 200 Stories Of the Sea

Yet Morgan Robertson Was Constantly Broke, Died Standing up

NEW YORK, March 25.—Morgan Robertson, who was found dead standing up in his room in a hotel in Atlantic City last night, had a romantic career as a sailor, author, jeweler and inventor of a submarine periscope. He was one of the most prolific writers of short sea stories America has produced.

Running away from his home in Oswego, N.Y., when sixteen years old, he shipped as a cabin boy and made two voyages around the world, occupying in the next ten years nearly every post on shipboard. Returning to America he made his home in New York and became a watchmaker and diamond setter, but after two years in which he said he was "almost constantly broke," he began to write his sea stories which have been familiar to all readers of periodicals for twenty years.

Although he wrote more than two hundred stories which have been published in fourteen volumes, he recently asserted in an unsigned autobiography that he had been reduced to straightened circumstances. Friends were making an attempt to aid him at the time of his death. He had come to Atlantic City to recuperate from a nervous collapse and seemed to be improving. A physician said death was due to an overdose of paraldehyde which he had been taking for heart trouble.

Mr. Robertson was 54 years old. Among the best known of his stories are "Sinful Peck," "Finnegan," and "Futility." His study in this city was fitted like a ship's cabin.

Developing the idea while writing a story, Mr. Robertson invented in 1905 an improved periscope for submarines which was purchased by a builder of such craft.

Ransacked Village to Find A Bible

Caledon "Court" Contained no Copy of the Holy Book

CALEDON, Ont., March 25.—The inquest into the deaths of James Stevens, the fifteen-year-old Barnardo boy, and Annie Violet Armstrong, his fourteen-year-old victim in the murder and suicide case which occurred on the Armstrong farm near here a week ago, was delayed twenty minutes in its opening to-day, while the village of two hundred was ransacked for a Bible with which to swear witnesses.

All was ready for a start when it was discovered that there was no Bible in the building. A search was instigated at once and the more likely residences were visited. Bibles seemed scarce, however, and it was not until twnty minutes later that one of the searchers returned, triumphant, bearing a copy of the Testaments.

Dr. J. Thomas, who had been called to attend the two children as soon as the fatalities had been discovered, testified that here had been no struggle. The bedclothing did not look as though it had been disturbed in any way, and the mirror which was found on the floor had not, in his opinion, been used as a weapon of defence.

"I believe that the boy committed suicide deliberately after he had seen that the girl was dying", he said.

He stated that Stevens had fallen from a horse last winter and had received a scalp wound. He did not think, however, that this had effected his brain.

The doctor also testified to his belief that prior to the murder the girl and the boy had been guilty of improper conduct.

Mrs. Armstrong, mother of the dead girl, told, between sobs, how she had searched for her daughter after seeing a blood-spot on the ground as she was entering the house, and how she at last had found her lying dead in the snow, near the pump.

Mr. Armstrong swore that he had always considered the boy to be of good character.

JACK JOHNSON ODDS-ON CHOICE

MEASURMENT OF MEN

The measurement of Jack Johnson and Jess Willard for the world's championship battle at Havana, Sunday April 4, are:

Johnson—Age, 37; height 6 ft. 1 1-2 in.; weight 217 lbs.; reach 76 inches.

Willard—Age 26; height, 6ft. 6 in.; weight 235 lbs.; reach 83 inches.

In all other departments of physical make-up, Willard measures larger than Johnson. He is bigger every way and younger.

Jeffries was the big man of the ring and as champion he weighed 220 lbs., standing 6 ft. 1 1-2 inches; Corbett, 187 lbs., 6 ft. 1 in.; Fitzsimmons, 170 pounds at 5 ft. 11 3-4 in.; John L. Sullivan, 5 ft. 10 1-2 in., at 195 lbs.; Sharkey, 5 ft. 9 in., at 190 pounds.

"WAR"

• • •

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

What anguish they endure—and terror so great that sweat drenches their bodies! And then the fever of the wounds, the terrible thirst, which is suffered by these miserable, abused one hundred thousand horses! This was my dream, and I awoke in a fever reaching for my water-bottle.

• • •

Another street fight. The crashing timbers and falling walls were the more horrible for the battle-cries, shots, and explosions of shell. From a wrecked house there flew over my head a window-frame, and the chimney fell to dust, stifling the air and stinging our eyes with the plaster dust. Fighting along the narrow lanes and streets, we finally came up on the open market-place. In the middle, on a high pillar, stood a statue of the Virgin Mother, with the Child in one arm, stretching the other in blessing. Here the struggle became one of demons—hand to hand. They were hacking at me and I was laying about me with terrific force. What I hit I do not know, for in such moments one loses the memory. Yet two terrible pictures remain in my mind. A Prussian dragoon, strong as Goliath, tore one of our officers out of his saddle, and split his skull at the feet of the Madonna. The gentle saint looked on unmoved. Another Goliath of the enemy's dragoons snatched my neighbor, bent him backwards, so that I heard his spine crack, and threw him lifeless under the same blessed lady's outstretched hand.

From the heights we saw again a spectacle. A bridge fell, with a train of wagons crossing it. Were they filled with wounded? I could only see that horses, wagons, and humans sank for ever into the rapid water. It was counted lucky, for it was the enemy's loss: our men had sawed the timbers as a successful strategy. Another picture from this height disclosed our own Khevenhüller's regiment inveigled into a swamp from which it could not extricate itself. While sinking into the morass, the enemy's shell killed them all. But they could not mutter a sound with their noses, eyes, and mouths filled with mire. This, we were told, was a tactical mistake. Any one is apt to err, and what does it matter if a few of the chess-board figures are lost? That the slime is in their eyes and mouths does not count; only the mistake is deplored, but the tactician will make up for it, and may be decorated with orders and promotions yet. Too bad that lately our 18th Battalion should fire all night upon another one of our regiments till daylight disclosed the error, and sad also that another troop was led into a pond through a conflict in orders, but little things like that will happen to the best players of the game of war.

• • •

I have settled it. This will be my last campaign. When I come back I quit the service. When a man has learned to look upon war with the horror that it produces in me, it would be a lie and a crime to stay in its service. As you know, I have always gone into battle with repugnance, but this detestation is so increased, this condemnation and decision has become so strong, that all the reasons with which I had held my judgment have ceased to argue in me. Our mutual study of the question has proved to me that the greatest souls in the world share this conception of war with me. Whatever comes, I am determined that at the end of this campaign I shall for ever close my military life. I cannot serve the god of war any longer. I have come to this conviction as some people change their old ideas of religion, which they gradually find have rested on folly and superstition; and so I can no longer keep up the deception, or kneel to the delusion, that army proclamations and cannon roars are consecrated things. Without any respect for the ritual of the god Mars, with its weird human sacrifices, I abjure for ever the cruel worship.

CHAPTER III.

The battle of Koniggratz ended in a terrible defeat which seemed decisive. My father told the news in such a tone as though it had been the end of the world. There was neither letter nor telegram from Frederick. Was he wounded or worse? Conrad had reported himself as untouched. The lists had not yet arrived, but the loss in killed and wounded was reported as forty thousand.

I wept for hours when the third day came without a line. While there was hope, I could still weep; had all been over my woe would have been without expression. My father was terribly depressed, and Otto full of revenge. He wished to join a corps of volunteers recruiting in Vienna. It was reported that the victorious commander of the southern campaign was to replace the defeated marshal of the north.

But no news came of Frederick.

A few days later there was a letter from Dr. Bresser, who was busy in the neighborhood of the battle, and wrote of the infinite misery and need of help, which was beyond imagination. He had joined Dr. Brauer, who had been sent by the Saxon Government, and a Saxon lady, another Florence Nightingale, was to arrive two days later. She came from the hospitals of Dresden to help in Bohemia. The two surgeons were planning to meet the lady at the nearest station to Koniggratz, and Bresser begged us, if possible, to send quantities of bandages and such supplies to his station, that they might be delivered into his hands. This letter awoke in me a resolution which I did not dare tell my family: I would take the box of bandages myself.

I announced that I would go to Vienna and prepare supplies for the doctor, and so managed to get away without difficulty. I could easily announce from there my real intentions to the family without their interference.

I had some doubts as to my want of experience, but I felt the compelling gaze of my husband fixed upon me, and he seemed to be stretching his arms from a bed of pain, and my only thought was: "I am coming, I am coming."

I found Vienna a mass of confusion. Everywhere my carriage passed vehicles of wounded men. I made my preparations hurriedly and started for the North Station. Here the crowds of wounded and dying were arriving, and the public crowded in with supplies and looking for friends; there were nurses, nuns, physicians, men and women from every rank, and the officials were busy pushing back the crowds. They sent me off too. But I protested: "I want to take the next north," but was informed that there were no trains for passengers, in order to keep the lines opened for the arrival of the wounded. Only one train would go out, and that was exclusively for the Relief Corps.

"May I go by that train?"

"Impossible." The voice within kept calling for me to come. I was about to despair when I caught sight of the President of the Relief Corps. I rushed to him: "For pity's sake, help me, Baron S——. You know me! Baroness Tilling, General Althaus's daughter. You are about to send a train to Bohemia. My dying husband needs me there. If you have a heart, let me go with that train."

With many misgivings he finally arranged to put me in the car of a surgeon who accompanied the train. It would be ready in an hour. I could not stay in the waiting-room; everything was turned into a hospital, and everywhere lay and crouched the wretched neglected forms of the mangled and wounded. And train after train came in with more wounded, and they were as quickly placed and carried away. At my feet was laid a man who gasped unceasingly, making a continuous gurgling sound. I stooped to speak a sympathetic word, but covered my face in horror. He no longer looked like a human being, his under jaw was shot away, and his eyes were hanging from their sockets. He was reeking with decay and corruption. My head sank back against the wall. But the sickening idea came into my head—could it be Frederick? No, it was not he.

As they carried the poor gurgling wretch away the regimental doctor said, "He need not go back to the hospital, he is already three-fourths dead." And with that the agonized creature threw up both his hands in pleading to heaven.

The hour passed, and I started with the two surgeons and four Sisters of Charity and several soldiers. The carriage was hot and filled with a mingled odor of hospital and incense, and I felt deathly sick. I leaned back in my corner and closed my eyes.

"Are you ill?" asked the sympathetic young surgeon. "I hear you are joining your wounded husband at Koniggratz. Do you know where to look for him?"

"No, but I expect to meet Dr. Bresser."

"I know him. We visited the battle-field together three days ago."

"Visited the battle-field?" I repeated, shuddering. "Oh, tell me about it."

The surgeon told his story, and I put it afterwards into my journal as I remembered it. From there I copy it now. I had remembered it quite accurately, for into every scene my imagination thrust one fixed idea—that there would be found my wounded Frederick, calling for me:

Behind a little hill the ambulance corps lay protected. Beyond, the engagement had already begun. The very earth and air trembled with the heat and explosions. Clouds of smoke and roaring artillery filled space. Orders came that we should fetch the wounded from the field. It takes some heroism to march into the midst of a battle when none of the fury of the conflict is in the mind to urge you on. The corporal in charge of the relief ordered the men to a point where the enemy had opened fire. Across the open ground they met groups of wounded dragging themselves and helping each other. One fell insensible, but not from a wound but sheer exhaustion. They explained: "We have eaten nothing for two days. After an enforced march of twelve hours and a bit of sleep, we were called to the fight unrefreshed."

The relief patrol pushed on. Let them look out for themselves, the surgeons were urged on to the more desperately wounded. They might be picked up on the way back, after help had been rendered to those lying thick in the battle. Everywhere lies a bleeding mass. The wounded swarm about thicker and thicker, creeping and dragging themselves over mounds of corpses, all stretched in mangled positions with the death-writhings still evident—hands clawing the ground, eyes and tongues projecting, teeth gnashed, and mouths gaping as the last breath had been drawn. So they lie, with their limbs and bodies mangled into shapelessness and stiffened with the death agony.

Down through a little ravine the patrol pushed. Here the dead and wounded were lying in heaps together. The shrieks for help, the begging, weeping, and lamenting, mixed with the cries for water. Alas, the provisions were soon exhausted, and what can a few men do in all this mass of hopelessness? If every helper had a hundred arms they could not do half of the rescue work. But they work like heroes until, suddenly, there comes the signal horn calling to another part of the field, while the broken wretches piteously beg not to be deserted. An adjutant comes in hot haste. Evidently a general has been wounded. The surgeons must follow, begging the poor fellows to have patience for they will return. But the promise was never meant and never believed.

So it goes on, page after page, in my journal. One account tells how a shell burst over a group of wounded who had just been bandaged and relieved, tearing them to pieces. Again, it tells how the fighting broke out around the ambulances, a fleeing and pursuing troop sweeping down the wounded, dying, and surgeons, all together; or when terrified riderless horses, maddened with agony, rushed over the wounded on the stretchers, throwing them crushed and lifeless to the ground. Again, the most frightful scene of all is described: A hundred helpless men lay in a farmhouse where their wounds had been dressed, when a shell set the place in a blaze, and their shrieks will ever remain in the memory of those who heard it—and in mine, for I fancied again, while the surgeon spoke, that Frederick was there, and I heard his voice out of the place of torture, and I fell back in my seat.

MOTHER SUPERIOR ROSARY HILL HOME

Tells How Vinol Restores Strength and Vitality to the Weak, Worn-Out Ones in Her Charge.

Rosary Hill Home, Hawthorne, N.Y.—"I have been at work among the sick and poor for nearly eighteen years, and whenever I have used Vinol for run-down, weak or emaciated patients, they have been visibly benefited by it. One patient, a young woman, was so weak and ill she could hardly creep to my door for aid, and was leaning on a friend's arm. I supplied Vinol to her liberally and in a month when she returned to thank me I hardly recognized her. She was strong, her color charming and her cheeks rounded out. These words are uttered from my heart, in order that more people may know about Vinol, as there is nothing makes me happier in the world than to relieve the sick."—Mother M. ALPHONSA LATHROP, O.S.D., Hawthorne, N.Y.

Such disinterested and reliable testimony should convince everyone of the merits of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic to build up health and strength for all weakened and nervous conditions, whether caused from overwork, worry or chronic coughs and colds. If Vinol fails to benefit we return your money.

The Answer
To Your Clothes Question!

YOU are doubtless reading, these days, many advertisements concerning Clothes—big type and small type!

YOU have been appealed to in plain figures and plied with "wonderful reductions" which you may have discovered exist mostly on paper!

YOU have been bored with fabric, fashion, and fit, and served with dissertations on Style!

YOU have seen argument exhausted—exaggeration run rife and good horse sense depleted!

BUT!

Don't Forget When All Is Said That It's The Clothes That Count!

This being the case, allow us modestly to remark that our Spring Suits and Top Coats at the moderate prices we have mentioned below are the best of Clothes, the best of Values and they should be the Clothes for you!

PLACES INSECURE

During their rounds of inspection last night the police found two business places insecure.

ON THE TRAMP

The only occupants of the police cells last night were two weary tramps, who according to their story did considerable tramping.

A COLLISION

Yesterday afternoon a collision occurred on Pinnacle street between an automobile and a vehicle, but fortunately no damage resulted.

DISASTROUS FIRE

On Wednesday morning, about two o'clock, fire broke out in the barn of Mr. John Kincaid, of Hazzard's Corners, and destroyed the barn and all its contents, including horses and cattle.

BURGLARIZED A COTTAGE

Two young men named Bird, who broke into a summer cottage near Coe Hill, owned by Mr. Chas. Rollins, and stole therefrom a quantity of fishing tackle and some carpenter's tools, were sentenced to one year in the Central Prison by Police Magistrate Jarman of Bancroft.

TAKEN IN MISTAKE

A member of the 39th Battalion reported to the police last night that his military cap had been taken whilst he was in attendance at the art exhibit at the High School. The police investigated the affair with the result the cap was found. It had been taken in mistake by another enlister.

DIED IN TORONTO

Died in Toronto on the 24th inst., Mrs. Wm. Dinnan, formerly Miss Mary Kelleher of Belleville. She leaves to mourn her loss a husband, father, Mr. Wm. Kelleher of this city; also four brothers, Charles, Patrick and John of Toronto, and Joseph of this city, and one sister, Mrs. Francis Chircutt of Deseronto.

BOYS FROM LINDSAY HERE

Shortly after one o'clock to-day upwards of 250 enlisters from Lindsay arrived here to join the 39th Battalion, which is being mobilized in this city. A band accompanied the contingent, which was composed of a fine body of young men. They were attired in red tunics and created a most favorable appearance as they marched down Front street.

NOTES FROM BANCROFT

(From The Times)

Elwin Whitefoot, jr., of this village left on Tuesday morning to join the third contingent at Belleville. Four from Maynooth also enlisted.

Mr. Benjamin Hague, of Dungannoon, died at noon on Tuesday. He was ninety years of age.

SOLD HER COUNTRY FOR FORTY DOLLARS

LUNEVILLE, France, March 25.—Marguerite Schmitt, a Frenchwoman, sentenced to death as a spy after being court-martialled, was shot yesterday after the troops of the garrison had been drawn up to witness the exeception. By her own admission at the trial, the woman accepted two hundred francs ($40) from the Germans to enter the French lines and obtain information.

CODDLING THE STOMACH

THE SO-CALLED "SCIENTIFIC" FEEDING

In this 20th century of advancement, people are too apt to listen to new theories and put into practice new-fangled notions of feeding. Not only do adults follow so-called "scientific systems," but they crew down the mouths of their children such scientific soft foods that require no exercise of the digestive organs, and the children are apt to become fragile and their stomachs too weak to take in strength-giving food and be able to assimilate it. This is a hothouse condition that no man, woman or child should permit. The muscles of the stomach require exercise just as any other muscles of the body; neglect them with too much ease and inaction and you raise a dyspeptic. Use a tonic made of medicinal herbs which will stimulate the stomach into greater activity—a remedy which will do this is one which has stood the test of public approval for over forty years, containing no alcohol or narcotic. We refer to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It arouses the little muscular fibres into activity and causes the gastric juices to thoroughly mix with the food you eat, simply because it supplies the stomach with pure, rich blood. It's weak, impure blood that causes stomach weakness. Get good blood through the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and you will have no more indigestion.

Sick people are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential.

Know Thyself

Read all about yourself, your system, the physiology of life, anatomy, hygiene, simple home cures, etc., in the "Common Sense Medical Adviser," a book of 1008 pages. Send to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y., 5 dimes (or stamps) for a cloth-bound copy. Duty paid.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgebury, Ont.

Of Interest to Trap Shooters

Local trap shooters have been notified by the Executive of the Dominion of Canada Trap Shooting Association that it has been decided to follow the practice of previous years with regard to the Association's Annual Tournament and restrict the entries to residents of Canada. Some members of the Association were inclined to favor throwing the Tourament open to all comers. This undoubtedly would have attracted a large number of American competitors. However, enquiries made among a large number of the leading shots indicated that it was felt that it would be better policy to continue the Tournament as an exclusively Canadian event and it was decided to act accordingly.

The Tournament is this year to be held in Ottawa, June 8, 9, 10, and 11th. Usually the Dominion Tournament has been held in August. The June dates were decided upon for this year because usually the weather in August is too hot for comfort and moreover August dates too often conflict with holiday arrangement of many of the trapshooters.

This is the first year that the Dominion Association is being run on an individual instead of a Club membership basis. The applications for membership are coming in rapidly and it is expected that in a few weeks the membership will exceed 500.

The program for this year's shoot is being prepared on a scale much more elaborate than that followed at any previous Tournament. The main features will be merely nominal entry fees and exceptionally large amounts donated for high average prizes. All Sweeps will be optional; all contestants whether in the sweeps or not will be elegible for the high average money; and there will be so many averages plans that it will be possible for a man shooting in good form to pull down in a single day much larger amounts than in the whole program at any previous Tournament. Arrangements have been made with the Government and the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association for the use of a portion of the Rockcliffe Rifle Ranges for the Tournament. The ranges are beautifully situated on the Ottawa River and the light and general shooting conditions will be ideal.

SIMPLY WONDERFUL FOR CHEST COLDS MAKSE 'EM WELL OVER NIGHT

Nothing Half so Quick to Relieve and Cure as Good Old "Nerviline."

Don't lie awake to-night coughing your throat sore—don't let your chest cold develop further—that's the way to coax on pneumonia.

Be sensible, and, as thousands before you have done, use Nerviline. It sure is a bully fine thing to knock out a cold or bad cough.

After once using Nerviline you'll swear by it for all time to come.

"You'll say it's more like a miracle than anything else to feel its warm soothing action upon your tight chest.

You'll be amazed at the quick way it cured your cough and broke up your bad cold.

It's safe for even a child to rub on Nerviline. Although five times more powerful than most other liniments, yet Nerviline has never yet burned or blistered the tender skin of even a child.

It's worth while to remember that wherever that is an ache or pain Nerviline will cure it.

Try it on your sore muscles, on a stiff joint, on the worst possible case of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, or lumbago. These are ailments Nerviline is guaranteed to cure mighty quick.

The mother of a large family can save heaps of work and worry, can cure little ills before they grow big, can keep the whole family well by always having Nerviline handy on the shelf. The large 50c bottle is the most economical. Trial size 25c at dealers or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Pleasant Tea by Quinte Chapter

A very successful tea was given yesterday by the Quinte Chapter, I. O. D. E., at the home of the Regent, Mrs. E. Guss Porter, realizing over sixty dollars. Mrs. Porter received the guests, assisted by Mrs. D. M. Warters. Mr. J. W. Johnson and Mrs. R. J. Graham presided at the tea table. Several councillors were kept busy selling home-made cookery and fancy work. Mrs. Wilmot, Mrs. Duff, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Mac. Waters and Mr. Kenneth Ross contributed to the pleasure of the afternoon by their singing and piano solos. The house was beautifully decorated; the drawing room with quantities of sweet peas, the library with red carnations and the sitting room with daffodils. The proceeds are to be used to purchase hospital supplies for the military hospital at Le Touquet, Boulogne.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

A Presentation

Yesterday morning a ring was presented to Capt. H. S. McElrath at Queen Victoria School. Captain McIrath was one of the entrance graduates of this school. He acted as captain of the cadets ever since they were organized. The following address was read by Lieutenant Ormond and Lieutenant Cooper:

Dear Harper:—We, your fellow pupils, heard with joy and pride of your enlistment in the 21st Battalion, 2nd Overseas Contingent for active service for the Empire in this, her hour of need. Right proud are we to know that, although only organized a few short years ago, this school has had the honor of having a soldier at the front. The example of their captain will be an inspiration to the cadets of this school. We ask you to accept this ring as a token to remind you when far away on a dangerous ground that you are ever included in the thoughts and prayers of this school. May God watch over you and protect you against the trials that beset the path of a brave, honorable soldier.

Signed on behalf of the school,
Harold Coppin, President of Q.V.S. Boys' Canadian Club.
Jean Kerr, President of the Q.V.S Girls' Canadian Club.

When the Lieutenant read "We ask you to accept this ring", Jean McIntosh, assisted by Jean Hitchon, presented the captain with a suitably engraved signet ring. Mr. Wilkin and Mr. Snider made a few suitable remarks. The meeting broke up by all singing the National Anthem.

Why Eyes Sparkle.

Merriment causes a frequent movement of the eyelids up and down, and as it is the function of the eyelid to release a tear each time it comes down the repetition has the effect of covering the eye with considerable moisture. The light shining on this moisture gives the sparkling effect. Inasmuch as the merry appearance of the eye is caused by tears, we are apt to shed them from laughing as well as from crying. Tears are intimately associated with our merry and our sad moods.

Criminality of Waste.

If I wanted to train a child to be thrifty I should teach him to abhor waste. I do not mean waste of money—that cures itself, because very soon there is no money to waste—but waste of material, waste of something that is useful, but that you cannot represent in money value to the waster. There is waste of water, waste of gas and things of that kind. If you would wish your children to be thrifty I would beg to impress upon them the criminality of waste.—Lord Rosebery.

Barnum's Ready Retort.

Barnum once appeared at Oxford to lecture on "Humbug." The rowdy students would not give him a hearing. At length, in a momentary lull, he shouted, "Then you don't want to hear anything about humbug?"

"We don't!" was the answer in a roar.

"Well," retorted Barnum, "I've got your money, and there's no humbug about that!"

The disturbance came to a sudden finish, and Barnum proceeded in peace.

Like Father, Like Son.

Rev. Dr. Somers was in the habit of addressing Sarah, his wife, in polysyllables when he wished the children to leave the room. He never dreamed that they understood until nine-year-old Jack, recovering from measles, was one day enjoying the dear privilege of hearing his mother read aloud.

The doctor ventured in and began softly, "Sarah"—

Dogs and Infection.

Dogs can carry infection along with them, as was clearly proved at Constantinople in 1865, when a single animal, entering the city from an infected district, started a cholera epidemic that killed more than 50,000. The dog, a valuable chow, was taken into his house by a dragoman, and a few hours later he and all his family were stricken down with the complaint, which spread thence to all parts of the city, even the sultan's palace being invaded.—Exchange.

Almost a Death Struggle.

A large crowd had gradually formed around the two fashionably dressed and oblivious young girls, and at one time it seemed necessary to separate them.

"What can it mean?" said the stranger who had just come up.

"It took me," said the man addressed, "some time to learn; but, as I understand it now, one girl has been six months in Europe, and while she was gone the other one has learned to play golf, and they are trying to tell each other about it."—Life.

Pickled Tea as Relish.

Pickled tea, "letpetso," is a rare delicacy in Burma and Siam. The leaves are thrown into boiling water and there remain until they become soft, when they are rolled by hand on mats and allowed to cool. They are then rammed down tight into the internode of a bamboo, a stopper is made of guava leaves, and the bamboo is suspended two days, with stopper down, to drain off the water, and then buried in the ground till the letpet has matured, when it is ready for sale and use. If not buried the letpet becomes black and spoiled instead of yellowish, as it should be. The letpet is rarely made into a drink, but is eaten, generally with oil and garlic.

Animals With Pockets.

Did you ever think what a curious thing it is that some animals have pockets—great, roomy, fur lined vest pockets, big enough to carry a family of little ones about in? Many of the animals native to Australia and Tasmania have these convenient pockets, and so has the possum, a common animal in our southern states. The kangaroo is the largest of this species. Full grown kangaroos go sixteen feet at a jump, and so when going on a long journey or running from hunters think what a comfort it must be to Mother Kangaroo to know that her babies are snug and safe in her pocket!—Exchange.

FRIENDSHIPS.

There are three friendships from which you can derive good and three friendships which are injurious. Friendship with the upright, friendship with the sincere and friendship with the man of observation—these are advantageous. Friendship with the man of specious airs, friendship with the insinuatingly soft and friendship with the glib tongued—these are injurious. —Confucius.

Dutch Angered at Sinking of Medea

Cabinet Meeting and Conference of Naval Officials—A Secret Session is Held

THE HAGUE, March 27.—(Special.) —Members of the Netherlands Government are refraining from any comment on the subject of interference with and destruction of Dutch shipping by German submarines beyond saying that requests for explanations have been sent to Germany, with a view to an eventual protest after Berlin's replay has been received.

The Ministry held an extraordinary Council this afternoon, following a conference between the Foreign and Marine Ministers and between the Marine Minister and the Chief of the Naval Staff. The subjects under discussion were not made public.

The newspapers are taking a serious view of the situation, owing, as they put it, to the repeated "unpleasant incident."

The newspaper Telegraaf, for instance demands that immediate action be taken regarding the sinking of the Medea, holding that it may be taken as Germany's reply to the Dutch request for an explanation of the seizure of two Dutch vessels.

"Arbitrary Highhandness."

The Handelsblad, dealing with the sinking of the Medea, says that the steamer's cargo could not have been considered conditional contraband, and adds:

"The sinking of the Medea is an act of arbitrary highhandedness which cannot be considered merely a lamentable error. This action, as well as attacks on Dutch ships from German submarines, cannot be condoned."

HAD NO TIME TO POSE

But Joffre's Wife Thinks Artist's Effort "Portrait of a Lifetime"

PARIS, March 26.—M. Jacquier, the painter, gives some details about his experience of painting Joffre's portrait. Three months ago he visited the headquarters of the general, who said: "I am too busy to pose properly. Will you make sketches while I continue my work?"

M. Jacquier made several sketches while General Joffre continued to read despatches and receive visitors, saying occasionally, "I am afraid your task is difficult, but I am not accustomed to be an artist's model."

M. Jacquier thinks, however, that he was thus enabled to make most characteristic studies. On his return to Paris he worked from the sketches and photographs. When the picture was nearly completed, Madame Joffre visited the studio. Although previously opposed to the idea of a portrait, she expressed the greatest satisfaction and telegraphed her husband: "It is the portrait of a lifetime. Never permit another to be painted."

FATHER AND CHILD BURNED TO DEATH

Fisherman's Home Consumed by Fire of Unknown Origin

PICTON, March 27.—Special—James Lowry, a fisherman, who lives at South Bay, twelve miles from here, was burned to death, with two of his children, aged four and six, in a fire which destroyed his house at an early hour yesterday morning. Mrs. Lowry, it is understood, is visiting friends in the west. The eldest daughter, who occupied with the other two children a room upstair, and one Ellis, who fishes with deceased, jumped from upper windows and escaped, so far had the fire progressed before being discovered. Lowry went to town Thursday with Ellis and left for home in the evening. He was 55 years of age. The origin of the fire has not yet been determined.

PATRIOTIC CAMPAIGN WORKERS ENTERTAINED

Grand Spread Provided by the Ladies—Address of Complimentary Nature—Officers and Solicitors Congratulated on Their Success

The members of the patriotic campaign committee were last evening at the Y.M.C.A. building, entertained by the ladies of the Women's Canadian Club at supper.

Mr. J. F. Wills, ex-Mayor of the city, occupied the chair. The spread provided was all that could have been desired. After due justice had been done to the bountiful repast the chairman, in a few well chosen remarks, referred to the ladies and the work they had done in the campaign.

Col. Lazier said he was delighted to say a few words on behalf of the ladies who had provided the repast. He congratulated all the teams on the canvass and the measure of success they had achieved. $30,000 was the amount aimed at in this campaign, but upwards of $37,000 had been obtained. The speaker moved a vote of thanks to the ladies for their efforts in the campaign and the spread they had provided.

Rev. Dr. Baker, Principal of Albert College, in seconding the vote of thanks, referred to the ladies and their efforts in a most complimentary manner. He had always been proud of Belleville, but never more proud of it than today. The ladies were deserving of every credit.

Ex Mayor Wills, on behalf of those present, tendered to the ladies the thanks of the campaign committee for the services they had rendered.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn, replying on behalf of the ladies, said the ladies of Belleville could not be surpassed. All appreciated the kindnesses extended to the members of the campaign committee.

Reports from the various captains of the teams of the money collected were then presented, being as follows:

Capt. Dickens	$ 721 90
Capt. A. P. Allen	2070 00
Capt. H. McGinnis	660 00
Capt. Shorey	1158 55
Capt. Hughes	607 00
Capt. Carnew	2264 65

Each captain referred in complimentary terms to the members of their committee, who had done grand work in the campaign.

The chairman announced that up to the present time $36,863.70 had been subscribed, which announcement was received with much enthusiasm.

The question of publishing the list of the donors was discussed and it was decided that the list be published with the understanding that those who did not desire to have their names published should intimate the fact to the members of the committee.

Hearty votes of thanks were tendered to Chairman Wills, Vice-Chairman Robertson, the captains of the various teams and the members of the teams for the active work they had performed.

SHELL PASSED BETWEEN TWO COBOURG SOLDIERS

Party of Highlanders Had Trying Time—Canadians and British Soldiers Finding New Methods of Reducing Casualties

LONDON, March 27.—Special—Officers invalided to England say that few Toronto men figured in the Neuve Chapelle battle, as they had just finished their shift in the trenches. In addition to the Princess Patricias, men from eastern and western Ontario participated. They were in the front line when the attack was delivered; so were the Canadian Highlanders. The Toronto men have as yet seen no strenuous fighting. Some of the Toronto Highlanders who were separated from the enemy by a rivulet discovered that the Germans had placed wire entanglements in the stream under cover of darkness. The kilties removed these without loss of life. They ducked when the Germans sent up star shells.

Two men from Cobourg, Ont., were sitting in the trench making coffee when a German shell whizzed through the parapet, passed between them and out through the rear of the parapet, exploding ten yards off, without hurting anyone. The trenches are now only eighteen inches deep, as water is struck at two feet. Sandbags and earth are piled up in front and back for protection.

The British and Canadians are preventing casualties by a new method of bringing rations into the trenches. The bully beef and hardtack are now thrown from trench to trench instead of being carried, as formerly.

MET DEATH BY LOOKING ABOVE THE PARAPET

LONDON, March 27.—(Special)—An officer of the first battalion of the Canadian Contingent at the front, writing under date of March 22, tells how Lieut. Galaugher, of Chatham, Ont., met his death in the trenches. Galaugher was shot through the head and instantly killed when he looked above the parapet to see what was going on where the Germans were entrenched.

Lieut. Douglas, also of the first battalion, received an accidental shot through the thigh while he was examining his revolver. He is progressing nicely towards recovery.

Lieut.-Col. Hill has resumed command of the first battalion, after an illness which kept him from duty for some time.

The same writer says in his letter that the Canadians have plenty of food, and, in fact, everything to make life as tolerable as possible, but they want action. They don't like standing still.

GENERAL SITUATION TENDS TO FAVOR ALLIED FORCES

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 27.—This afternoon's official statement says: During the night of March 26-27 the Germans bombarded Arras with shells of all calibre. Fire broke out in Arras, but it was quickly extinguished. Fighting has been going on La Boiselle under conditions favorable to the French.

In the Argonne district in the vicinity of Bagatelle there has been bomb throwing from one line to another, although no infantry attack has taken place.

After an energetic engagement which lasted for several days French troops were successful in reaching the top of Hartmann's Weilerkopf, which they captured from the Germans. The French also made progress on the northeastern and southeastern flanks of the ain army, taking more prisoners, including several officers.

The Germans have abandoned important war material and left numerous dead on these battlefields. The French losses were inconsiderable.

A German aviator dropped several bombs on the town of Willer, to the northwest of Thann. Three little children were killed.

FRENCH OCCUPY POSITIONS

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 27.—An official statement says, in the Vosges the French yesterday evening occupied the top of Hartmann's Weilerkopf, on the edge of a height held by German troops.

FIGHT IS POSTPONED.

(Canadian Press Special)

HAVANA, March 27.—The Johnson-Willard fight has been postponed from April 4th to April 5th.

Four Thousand May be Mobilized at Kingston

Indications are That this Number Will be Trained on Barriefield Heights This Year

KINGSTON, March 26.—Some days ago, a statement, made by the Minister of Militia in the House of Commons, was published to the effect that there would be no militia camp at Barriefield this year. Militia orders just published convey the official information, that there will be no camp, but the heights overlooking the St. Lawrence river will in all probability be used for another purpose. A press despatch published yesterday said that camps would be conducted this year, but they will be camps for the permanent or overseas forces.

Instead of having a militia camp at Barriefield this year, it looks now as though Kingston would have a mobilization here of the number of overseas units. Valcartier, Barriefield, Niagara, and some places in the west will be used for training units for active service abroad.

Indications point to a division of the camps, and Barriefield's share might be the 38th, 39th Battalions, the 8th Mounted Rifles and the 25th and 26th Batteries of Artillery. This would give Kingston about four thousand men, and would make military matters pretty lively for the whole summer.

TWENTY AEROPLANES ENGAGED IN BATTLE

BASLE, Switzerland, March 27.—(Special.)—In the recent aerial battle in Alsace no less then twenty aeroplanes were engaged on both sides. It was the greatest aerial fight since the beginning of the war. It took place in the triangle between Lorrach, a point on the Swiss frontier, and Muelhausen and Altkirch.

The French aerial squadron came from the Vosges, the Germans from a mountain in the Black Forest.

Fortress Istein opened fire on the advancing front squadron and soon the batteries of Altkirch joined in. Meanwhile the German aviators with musketry fire and mobs attacked the French airmen, who defended themselves with machine guns and rifles. The aviators circled around each other each manoeuvering for position, and watching every movement of their opponents, ready to dash in and hurl one another to death.

Finally, after the battle had waged for about an hour, the Germans withdrew and disappeared in the direction of Altkirch. All of the French aviators probably returned safety to their base, as there is no report of any casualties among them.

ANOTHER BELLEVILLE BOY GETS APPOINTMENT

Lieut.-Col. Herbert D. Hulme has been appointed Commanding Officer of the next battalion for overseas service, now being raised in British Columbia and trained in Vancouver. Colonel Hulme, (who has filled every position in the service, from Color Sergeant of Captain Ponton's celebrated old "Number 1 Company" in the XV, to the Yukon Rifle Brigade, and after that in command of the Duke of Connaught's Own Rifles, and also of the Engineering detachment, who were moved from British Columbia to Quebec), will be the right man in the right place in this new command, as he has all the capacity for leadership which is required in this great struggle, when West and East are united together in one common task.

FORTS AT DARDANELLES HAVE BEEN DESTROYED

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 27.—It has been established, says a Havas Agency despatch from Athens, dated Friday, that the forts at Dardanus have been destroyed and those at Kilid Bahr seriously damaged by the operations of the allied fleet in the Dardanelles. Sailing ships engaged in mine sweeping were fired upon by Turkish field artillery posted at Erenkeui, but the batteries are said to have been silenced by fire from two ships.

According to a despatch from Mytilene, three British and two French warships have anchored in the Gulf of Smyrna, with transports.

ITALY READY TO ENTER THE FRAY

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, March 27.—Every measure possible has been taken by the government preparatory to the beginning of hostilities by Italy on the side of the Allies.

Ontario Man Beaten by Turks In Persia

E. T. Allen, Missionary, Was Born in London, Ont.—The United States Acts

WASHINGTON, March 27.—(Special.)—Alarming reports of atrocities, including the hanging of sixty men taken from the French mission and five from the American mission compound at Gulpashan, Persia, stirred up the State Department today to further efforts to obtain protection for American missionaries and refugees in the vicinity of Urmiah, Persia, where an uprising of Kurds threatens a general Christian massacre. Some of the reports came in cables to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Mission in New York, one of which reads:

"Gulpashan destroyed; its men shot, women violated. Sixty men taken from French mission compound and five from American mission compound hanged. Allen beaten. Hanging pole erected in French mission yard. Massacre imminent. Implore State Department that the Consul at Tabriz proceed to Urumiah."

The missionary, Allen, referred to as having been beaten, is E. T. Allen, who was born in London, Ont., and became a naturalized American. Mr. Allen has been in the service of the board since 1891. He was sent, for the second time to Persia in 1911.

Six thousand dollars for relief at Urumiah was cabled today to the American Consul at Tabriz by the Persian War Relief Committee.

Ambassador Morgenthau at Constantinople has been twice appealed to by Secretary Bryan in the last few days to urge the Turkish Government to send protection to the imperilled section, and it was learned today that the State Department has received definite assurances from the Turkish Government that protection would be rushed to the scene.

TWO MEXICAN REPUBLICS ?

Rancher and Miner Thinks Such May be Outcome of European War

KINGSTON, March 27 - Special—John R. Henderson, who has arrived here from Mexico to visit his mother, states that the Mexican situation will not be cleared up until after the termination of the war in Europe. He thinks there is a strong possibility of two Republics being established, a southern one under Carranza and a northern one under Villa. Mr. Henderson has been in the cattle and mining business in the State of Sonora on the west coast of Mexico for the past ten years. It was in this State that nearly all revolutions have been originated.

WILL NOT REBUILD BELGIUM'S RUINS

BRUSSELS March 26.—The Belgian towns of Malines, Termonde, Louvain and Liege never will be rebuilt on their present sites if the under current of discussion among prominent Belgians results in action when peace is made. These Belgians propose that new cities be rebuilt on sites adjoining the ruins which are to be left as "monuments to the sufferings of Belgium."

Business is shrewdly mixed with sentiment in the proposal inasmuch as it is believed that the ruins will prove such an attraction for tourists that they will provide much of the capital necessary to rehabilitate the war scarred region.

CHANGE DUE TO BULGARIA

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, March 27.—Close observers believe there is a gradual change going on in the Bulgarian sentiment, and that she hopes to act jointly with Italy and Roumania in favor of the Allies.

THREE ARE KILLED SIXTEEN WOUNDED

(Canadian Press Special)

CAIRO, Egypt, March 27.—An official report of a skirmish in the desert last Tuesday says the British lost three privates killed, sixteen wounded, while the enemy left fifty dead and several hundred rounds of field gun ammunition, but carried off most of their wounded.

MONOPLANES IN ACTION

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 27.—Both Calais and Dunkirk were visited by German monoplanes this morning, but neither town was damaged. Six bombs were thrown on Dunkirk and one on Calais.

WOUNDED CANADIANS RESCUED IN DAYLIGHT

Two Members of Ambulance Corps Recommended to Headquarters for Conspicuous Bravery

FOLKESTONE March 27—(Special) —Wounded men at Shorncliffe state that Stretcher-bearer Prince, of No. 4 Company, Second Battalion, and one other man whose name is not available have been recommended to headquarters for conspicuous bravery under fire.

Sergt. Victor of the Second Battalion was shot through both legs while repairing wire entanglements. Prince and his comrade took the stretcher out in broad daylight and brought him in. They were fired on by the Germans, but reached cover unhurt. On two other occassions they performed similar acts of heroism.

Sergt. J. B. Barnes, of the Sherwood Foresters, has been awarded the Distinguished Conduct Medal for gallantry in rescuing Sergt. Victor Holland, of the Toronto Regiment.

On the occasion when the Canadians were first in action the Canadian artillery located a hidden German battery and placed a heavy shell under it, blowing it several feet in the air.

The German dropped a shell into a trench occupied by some Ontario men. The explosion knocked six down, but all miraculously escaped unhurt.

Ptes. P. E. Honour, of the Second Battalion, and J. F. Davis, of the Toronto Regiment, are the latest arrivals at Shorncliffe.

WIRELESS WAS INTERCEPTED BEARING FORGED SIGNATURE

Mystery of Earl Grey's Denial in British Commons Explained by Langhorne Incident

LONDON, March 27.—(Special.)—The mysterious case of Major Langsorne, of the United States Embassy at Berlin, arouses much interest here, where there has already been rumors of some difficulty concerning messages over the German radio picked up by British stations. According to one story which was circulating about the time of the inception of the German blockade, a wireless was intercepted which bore Laughorne's signature, and which stated that England planned to submarine some American boat and hen charge Germany with the responsibility. The message was then considered most curious and probably a forgery. It is recalled that at about the same time Earl Grey issued a denial of the foregoing allegation. At the time it was not quite clear just what Grey was denying, as the German charge had not received notice here. The conclusion is drawn that he was referring to the intercepted radiogram.

Submarines Look Over U. S. Ship

NEW YORK, March 26.—An officer of the American steamer Santiago, which reached here from Copenhagen asserted that their vessel was closely scrutinized on the way over by two German submarines which rose unexpectedly to the surface near the Shetland Islands at daybreak of March 14.

The submarines came up simultaneously, one on each side of the Santiago, less than half a mile away. They remained on the surface for a minute or two but made no signal to the steamer. Then they dived again and were seen no more.

Whitby Citizen Dead

James Rowe Philp Was a Resident Of the Town for Half a Century

WHITBY, March 27.—(Special.)—One of Whitby's early residents and most widely-known citizens died yesterday when death came to James Rowe Philp. Mr. Philp was born in England 81 years ago, and came to Canada when young. He lived in Whitby for considerably over half a century. He married a Miss Moore, and was a brother-in-law of Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Mrs. Philp predeceased her husband 3 years ago. Mr. Philp was a prominent Conservative and was collector of Customs at Whitby for about 18 years, only retiring four years ago on account of failing health. He was a member of the Board of Education last year, and several years ago served in the Town Council. Two sons survive: John, of Omaha, Nebraska, and Fred of New York. The funeral will be held on Monday afternoon.

NEXT BRAZILIAN DIV. IS LIKELY TO BE PAID

TORONTO, March 26.—A meeting of the Brazilian Traction Board will be held next week, when the financial necessities of the company, as outlined before will be considered. It is stated, however, that there is no reason for unrest, as the next dividend has been provided for.

D. B. Hanna, one of the directors, states that there was no reason for unrest among the stockholders. "Dr. Pearson will be here next week," he said, "and a meeting of the directors will be held. After this meeting a full statement of the company's financial affairs will be sent out to shareholders. The company will need more money to complete its entire system, but this is nothing unusual, and any financing can be done by the issue of bonds. I can't say that this will be done immediately. Any such expenditure will mean a more than proportionate increase in the company's revenue."

Mr. Hanna stated that the company's net earnings were well over 8 per cent. on the stock, and that as the dividend was only at the rate of 6 per cent. there was no reason why it should not be paid. Mr. Hanna further added that the money was already provided for the next divident payment.

He pointed out that if the new expenditures he mentioned were not made it would interfere with present earnings, but if made it would add materially to the company's revenue.

PRISONERS HAVE ARRIVED

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 27.— Reuter's Kiev correspondent says General von Kusmanek, who commanded the fortress at Przemysl, has arrived there a prisoner and has been assigned to quarters.

TURKEY CONCERNED BY NEW MOVE IN THE BALKANS

LONDON, March 27.—(Special.)—The Exchange Telegraph Company has received a despatch from Athens saying that Field Marshall Von der Goltz, who has been in Constantinople for some months past representing German military interests, has left the Turkish capital for Sofia, Bulgaria. At the same time, General Limon Von Sanders, the commander of the Turkish forces in Europe has left Constantinople for Adrianople.

Field Marshall Von der Goltz was the first Military Governor of Belgium. He was sent to Constantinople from Belgium the latter part of 1914 to advise in the matter of the conduct of the Turkish campaign.

General Von Sanders has been identified with the Turkish army for several years.

The departure of these two officers from Constantinople, one for Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, and the other for Adrianople, the second most important city in European Turkey and not far from the Bulgarian frontier, indicates some sudden development in the Balkan situation which is causing Turkey concern.

WARDEN KETCHESON PRESENTED WITH CANE

At the January session of the County Council, Warden Ketcheson invited all the members of the Council and County officials to be his guests on a trip to Toronto to attend the annual convention of the Good Roads Association. The convention was held this week and the members of the Council who attended the same were: Messrs. T. Walker, N. Vermilyea, U. E. Hubbell, W. Nugent, C. Thompson, W. E. Tummon, T. Montgomery, T. Naylor, E. W. Hawkins, R. P. Coulter, G. A. Rose, G. Sills, C. Rollins and S. Fox. Mr. G. H. Bleecker, County Superintendent, Mr. A. M. Chapman, County Clerk, Mr. B. Mallory, County Treasurer, Mr. H. Wright, Sidney Township road superintendent, Mr. A. Reed and Mr. H. Ketcheson, Councillors of Sidney, and Mr. L. E. Allen, of this city, were also in attendance. Those who accepted the hospitality of the Warden on Thursday evening gathered together and presented Mr. Ketcheson with a handsome gold headed cane. The presentation was made on behalf of the company by Mr. T. Montgomery, Reeve of Rawdon Township. The recipient replied appropriately to the presentation and the kind expressions for his welfare.

MADOC WILL HAVE TWO TEAMS IN THE O.A.L.A.

MADOC, March 26.—Madoc will be represented by two teams in the O.A.L.A. this summer. Such was the unanimous decision of the annual meeting of the local lacrosse club, when officers were lected and other business of importance discussed. William Cross, who was elected President, was Chairman of the meeting and in his address highly eulogized Canada's national game. It was decided that on May 24 the club should hold a celebration, having lacrosse, football games, races, etc. The Secretary was instructed to write Marmora, Tweed, Cooper and Stirling in regard to sending teams to take part in the celebration. Madoc's two lacross teams will be entered in the intermediate and juvenile series.

Following are the officers:—Honorary President, George West; President Wm. Cross; First Vice-President, C. B. Ross; Second Vice-President, Chas. Whytock; Secretary-Treasurer, E. E. Lancaster. Executive Committee, F. Naylor, P. Naylor, C. Moon, R. Lewis and R. Waring. Grounds Committee, Geo. Bassett, C. I. Ross and J. J. Rylott; Manager and Captain, Geo. Bassett; Manager and Captain of the juvenile team, H. Trotter; Secretary-Treasurer of juvenile team, K. Whytock.

Within The Military Circle

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

BELLEVILLE

The soldier boys of the 39th spent another merry concert evening in the Battalion Mess Room last night. The detachments which have been coming in from outside regiments during the past week, brought so much new musical talent with them that the programme was crowded with twelve excellent musical numbers. Col. Preston was again chairman; several of the other officers, including Col. Smart, the second in command were also present. Mr. Hess, Secretary of the local Y.M.C.A. spoke briefly to the men, inviting them to use the Association Building.

To the onlooker the most impressive feature of the gathering last night was the spirit of absolute loyalty and good-will which existed between the officers and the men. Too often the man of the ranks is apt to look with unfriendly regard on the ones he must obey. The 39th has nothing of this. No less than three times during the evening the shout was raised, "Three cheers for the Colonel," to be followed by cheers of the true British type, such as shook the "china" on the mess room shelves. Further cheers were given in general for the officers. The present spirit of the Battalion certainly augers well for its future.

During the course of the evening Col. Preston announced a meeting in Griffin's Theatre on Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. to be addressed by Bishop Brewing of Toronto. Also a song service for soldiers in the City Hall at 8.15.

KINGSTON

Major Hilliard, of Peterboro', has accepted a commission as Lieutenant in the 26th Battery under Major Hall. Major Hilliard, is a graduate of the R.M.C.

The turned-down military collar worn by officers has been discarded, because it enabled the Germans to more easily pick out the officers, and all officers are now using the upright coat collar.

Two recruits were received by the 14th this morning for the 39th Battalion. Recruits are coming in almost daily, and when found medically fit are turned over to the 39th.

Major Hall is drilling the 26th Battery every day on the cricket field. Foot drill is all the men can get until they have a place for their artillery equipment, which will not be ready ofr a couple of weeks.

The scouts of the 21st Battalion under Lieut. Cooper have taken up signalling with the single flag, and the men are rapidly acquiring proficiency in the Morse code. The scouts do a great deal of night practice work, and are taught to cook their own meals, and shift for themselves without depending on any other branch of the service.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

A splendid concert programme was pulled off at the Military Barracks last night.

A thousand booklets are being circulated amongst the men by the Y.M.C.A.

Postage License has been granted Y.M.C.A. workers with the soldiers.

A mass meeting of men will be addressed by Bishop Brewing of Toronto in the Opera House tomorrow at 4.15.

In the evening the Y.M.C.A. will conduct a song service in the City Hall at 8.15 for the 39th. Mr. Burrows will lead in the singing.

The Salvation Army Band will assist in the afternoon service.

There will be two games of basket ball played this evening. First game at 8 o'clock sharp. Admission 10c. The first game is to be between the Bridge St. Ever Readies and the Bankers'. The second game between the Belleville Hardware and the Grand Trunk.

Sunday School Basketball Games

It's a mighty encouraging thing to see our Sunday School boys indulging in good clean sport, such as the games in the Sunday School Basketball League are producing; indeed, if amateur sport would be kept clean and the players, who are to be our future representatives in the field of amateur sport be "on the square," the Sunday Schools can have, and no doubt are going to have a great chance in bringing about this most desirable condition.

The Bridge St.-Holloway game, was all that could be desired. At half time only a point or two favored the West Side team, while at full time, it was even. However, in 5 minutes overtime each way, Bridge St. pulled away and won by a comfortable lead of 29-18. The Bridge St. bunch had the weight on the Holloway lads, but had nothing on them in the science of the game.

In the Junior games, John St. won an easy victory, 27-7, over St. Andrews team.

Bridge St. Jrs. surprised St. Michael's by their reverse of form, and all but won out, the score being 14-11, in favor of St. Mikes.

BELLEVILLE DOCK TO PROGRESS

A telegram was received this morning by Mr. E. Guss Porter, K. C., M.P., from the Minister of Public Works, Ottawa, as follows:

"Specifications for reinforced concrete warehouse for Belleville dock are now ready. Tenders will be called for and work proceeded with as fast as possible."

It is expected the new docks and warehouse will be ready and in use for navigation this season.

Mr. Porter has been fearful that the new dock and warehouse would not be ready for navigation this season, and the telegram this morning is the outcome of frequent communications between Mr. Porter and the Minister of Public Works.

Obituary

MRS. MARY DINNAN

The funeral of the late Mrs. Mary Dinnan of Toronto, wife of Mr. W. Dinnan, took place this morning from the residence of her uncle, Mr. Kelleher, Dundas street, to St. Michael's church. Mass was said by the Rev. Father Corrigan. Interment took place at St. James cemetery. The bearers were brothers and nephews of the deceased. There were many mourners in attendance. Several mass cards and the number of floral tributes testified to the popularity of the deceased.

SIDNEY JOINS IN PATRIOTIC CAMPAIGN

Last night at the Old Stone Church in Sidney, which accommodates over 400 people a crowded audience listened to a varied programme of vocal and instrumental music and to stirring addresses by Colonel W. N. Ponton, Mr. H. F. Ketcheson, Mr. N. Vermilyea, (Ex-Warden of the County) and Reverend Mr. Sharpe, in connection with the Patriotic, Red Cross Funds, and Recruiting. Mr. John Elliott, occupied the chair and the meeting was fruitful in results, both as to the united spirit engendered, the money raised, and the encouragement given to recruiting for the 4th Contingent in our local regiments. The Sidney campaign promises to be a strong one.

The death of Sergeant Herman of the 49th Regiment, the first Sidney boy to fall in the trenches, was feelingly referred to by the speakers.

Fresh eggs, 20c. per dozen dressed chickens from $1.00 to $1.50 per pair, according to size and quality; ducks sold at $1.50 per pair. A few turkeys sold at from $2 to $3 each, according to size. Maple syrup was quite plentiful and sold readily at $1.50 per gallon. Potatoes sold at 60c. and 65c. per gallon.

AN ENJOYABLE GATHERING

Under the auspices of the Boys' Canadian Club in connection with Queen Victoria Public School in this city, an open meeting was held in the assembly room yesterday afternoon, presided over in a capable manner by Master Harold Coppin, President of the Club. The speaker upon the occasion was Col. Ponton, chairman of the Board of Education. The assembly room where the gathering was held was filled with scholars and others. Previous to the address the minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary, Windall Johnson. Several letters were read, one being from the East Belleville Playground Committee, signed by Mrs. Marshall. A reading was then given by Miss Jean McIntosh. Colonel Ponton next gave an excellent address. He showed the boys an old sundial dated 1667. It was one his grandfather owned, consequently it was very valuable to him. At the conclusion of the interesting address refreshments were served, during which Mrs. Wilkins rendered selections upon the piano. All present were served most acceptably by the girls of the school. Col. Ponton proposed three cheers for Queen Victoria School, which was heartily responded to. The meeting broke up with the singing of the National Anthem.

Presentation

At a meeting of friends at the home of Mr. Ormal Atkins recently, the following address and presentation of a wrist watch was one of the features of the occasion.

Dear Ormal,—

It is with mingled feelings of pleasure and pain, that we meet with you in your home on this occasion. We are glad that you go to prove yourself a worthy son of Canada; that you have the opportunity to show the spirit which should throb through every true Canadian, the spirit of loyalty, truth and bravery. But we are sorry for the situation which seems to call for the sacrifice of so many of the Empire's truest and noblest sons. We know full well that you may be called to face danger, and perhaps death, in the cause which lies so close to us all. And, while we would not withhold you from that which you have deemed your duty, it is with deep and heartfelt sorrow that we see you go.

You have grown from childhood to young manhood among us, ever a good companion and a warm friend. We have already missed you from our social circle and we shall continue to do so until you return to us. You have done your best, no one could do more, in whatever duties and offices were assigned you; for this we thank you, and we feel sure that your best will be your aim in the life which now faces you.

The daily prayers, of your many friends and fellow workers, for God's blessing upon you and for your safe return, will go with you all the way and back. To remind you of this we ask you to accept these slight tokens of our love and respect. Remember as you use them, that many here will follow you with all good wishes, and will royally welcome you, when, God willing, you return to us.

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

CURED BY TONING THE BLOOD AND STRENGTHENING THE NERVES.

It is the opinion of the best medical authorities, after long observation that nervous diseases are more common and more serious in the spring than at any other time of the year. Vital changes in the system, after long winter months, may cause much more trouble than the familiar spring weakness and weariness from which most people suffer as the result of indoor life, in poorly ventilated and often overheated buildings. Official records prove that in April and May neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy and other forms of nerve troubles are at their worst, and that then, more than any other time, a blood-making, nerve-restoring tonic is needed.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless for the system really needs strengthening, while purgatives only gallop through the bowels, leaving you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine, for they actually make the new, rich, red blood that feeds the starved nerves, and thus cure the many forms of nervous disorders. They cure also such other forms of spring troubles as headaches, poor appetite, weakness in the limbs, as well as remove unsightly pimples and eruptions. In fact they unfailingly bring new health and strength to weak, tired and depressed men, women and children.

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Woman as a Citizen

Mrs. Prenter Brings Out Some Forceful Thoughts on Rights and Privileges of the Gentler Sex

The lecture room at the Armouries was crowded last night to hear Mrs. Prenter speak on "Woman as a Citizen." Mr. F. E. O'Flynn acted as chairman for the evening, and opened the meeting by reading a letter of regret from Mrs. Prenter, stating that she would be delayed, and explaining how.

Miss Anna Ponton charmed her audience by the rendering of a recruiting song, sent from England by her brother, Lieut. R. Ponton.

Mr. W. H. Wrightmyer next gave "His Majesty the King," and then Mr. O'Flynn introduced the speaker of the evening.

A good many of the audience had come down disposed to laugh at the movement, but first Mrs. Prenter by her ready wit interested her hearers in herself, then to bring the attention of the audience to her subject was an easy matter.

"Solomon," Mrs. Prenter said, "in the last chapter of Proverbs told us our place; we kept it, and there was no need of suffrage. Woman was the miller, brewer, tailor and housewife. The husband was the natural protector; but now everything is changed, even to men interesting themselves in household duties. There has been a long era of masculine government, and anyone can see it has not been a success. I do not promise that if women get the vote that the bi-lingual question will pass, and many other things like that, but in matters of home I do promise improvement. Politics are all centered around money now, but in New Zealand where women have the vote they look after the human interests and life. Philanthropy will alleviate suffering, but will not cure it. If women had a hand in the government, do you think that child labor would be allowed? We cannot get pure food—that would be woman's lookout. Milk inspection was originated by women because they saw the cause of so much tuberculosis. That is why I say that keeping the municipal franchise from the class of women who need it—mothers—is a most outrageous thing. They say that the majority of women do not want to vote because of the responsibility—but we have the responsibility now. The movement began about one hundred years ago. In 1867 it made another big advance. Sir John A. Macdonald said: "Let us aid in the emancipation of women." That argument that we cannot bear arms will be no good after this war, because who have suffered more than the women and children?

"The government issues books on the care of hogs and cattle, but none are issued on the care of babies. The men let us dabble in charity because "it keeps us quite." They say we will lose our charms and womanliness if we have to worry about the government. The New Zealand women haven't, and they have voted for twenty years. Queen Victoria held the highest political power in the world, and could you find a sweeter woman anywhere?

"One man I was talking to said, 'Oh, but wouldn't it be an awful muss if a woman was elected President?' I referred him to Queen Victoria and remarked that she didn't make so much of a muss, and she reigned over a larger and more prosperous country than America. 'Oh, but,' he said, 'your Kings and Queens don't count for anything!' Everything is prejudice. Another thing that appeals to me is the great waste. Women have brains. Why not use them? In everything we want more public spirit—that would end graft. We also need to love our fellow creatures and country, and don't be so selfish. Your duty is not done if child labor is not abolished. We shouldn't keep our children at home so long, but prepare the world for them and them for the world. They should be taught to take an interest in the city business.

"The men wonder if the reform is wanted by the women. Never before in any movement have 50,000,000 people thought one way. What is wrong with this world is, that it needs its mother."

A question was asked why Mr. Harrison, the municipal reformer of Chicago was defeated in a campaign by another man who hadn't taken an interest in philanthropy. Mrs. Prenter replied that it was because he was such an anti-suffragist.

Mr. T. Blackburn moved a vote of thanks to the speaker, which was seconded by Mayor Panter. Mr. Milburn spoke a few suitable words, endorsing the movement.

The meeting closed by the singing of "God Save the King."

PREMIER'S SAD MISSION

OTTAWA, March 27.—(Special.)—Sir Robert Borden is leaving to-morrow morning by special train for Grand Pre, N.S., to see his aged mother probably for the last time. She is dying at the Premier's boyhood home, after a long illness. The Premier is leaving the capital and the many cares of State to answer a nearer and more heart-compelling call. He has the sympathy of every member in the House, and all party animosities are forgotten.

Letter From Gerald Spafford

In the Trenches, 6-3-'15.

My Dear Mother:—

Just a few lines to let you know that I am still in the land of the living, feeling fine, and although living in a dug-out, we are very well off. It is very muddy and wet, but we have become accustomed to such circumstances.

We have a small stove in our dugout and are quite cosy. We cook and have all kinds of concoctions made up of various things we get or can buy here.

We have been in action—the day after our arrival, and cleaned up some of the Huns' trenches, besides busting up a building from which German snipers were picking off our men. We are in the warmest corner of operations, and day and night the shells are screaming over our heads and from every point on the map. The Huns have not got any very near us yet; their shells burst either in front of us or over our rear. At night the Germans keep the sky lit up with rockets and search lights.

Pat Yeomans and his comrades on observation and telephone work had a close squeak. Their observation station was shelled. I was talking to him yesterday on his way up the line to fix a wire. He is looking well. I came up ahead of the battery with one of the boys and had to arrange for a 24-hour [illegible]. We missed the other party and had to find our way here alone, and found my French very handy. On the way we saw a dandy aeroplane fight, and it's certainly an exciting thing to witness. They shot about 50 bombs at each other. We were only a short distance away from them. There were four of ours, but could only make out one German. We think he came down, but could not be positive, as some hills hid him from view when he dropped. There seems to be some heavy fighting on one of our flanks this morning. I can hear the big guns booming and the rattle of rifle fire, and one or two of our own guns are going to beat the cars.

I saw Lieut. Dick Ponton the day I came ahead of the battery. He was ahead of his company on the way to the firing line. I called to him and he halted. I rode up and we exchanged greetings. Tell Mazie to call on Col. Ponton and tell him Dick is looking well and as fit as a fiddle. The Belleville boys all look well. I saw quite a number of my old friends of the 15th. They are in the trenches in front of our guns somewhere. I believe there have been a few casualties, but very small.

It is extremely amusing to see the matter-of-fact way we go about our work here. You would never think there was a German within a thousand miles of us. The morning we went into action the Lieutenant sent down word to me to stand by the guns and be ready to fire. This was shouted down the entrance to the dug-out where my gunners and I were eating breakfast. I said, "We have not yet finished breakfast, Sir." "Very well," said he, "as soon as you have finished we will fire." So we leisurely finished our meal, lit our cigarettes and proceeded to give the Huns a few souvenirs; and I guess by the way the infantry cheered us our shots swept the German barricades. We made it interesting for them. Every time one of our shots landed effectively they would shout across to the Germans, "There's some Canadians at you now," etc. We try to keep them busy building up their trenches at night. The Huns are sending a few shots over now. The trenches we cover are only 80 yards from our infantry.

In the vicinity are some houses which are completely demolished by the shell fire of the Germans and we go there for fire wood. Yesterday Young Bowen and Kiser of Belleville and a couple of our left section had a three-wheeled cart which the peasants use here for carting. It has no shafts like our carts; you simply hitch the horse to the whiffletree and drive with one rein like a Laplander. Well, our boys saddled a horse and put a breast collar on with traces. They had found an old silk plug hat and a little straw hat in the ruins which they put on. they tied to the rear of the cart. Bowen was mounted on the horse and the others sat in the back, and they were coming up the road like chain lightning, the pig squealing and they laughing like "sixty." I nearly died laughing myself. It looked like a part of Ringling Bros.' clown show escaped. The three-wheeled cart was cutting all kinds of circles up the road. A few hundred yards away one could hear the rattle of rifles and roar of guns, but you never would believe it to see those lads coming.

Chas. Sharpe just came into the trench. I told him, after an exchange of greeting, that some shells had just dropped over there—not stating where. He took one look, turned quickly in the direction of the road, and said: "I must go."

Tell Father that Frank Day is with me, and to tell Robt. Day that his son is well and fired the first shots we sent the Germans the other day.

Well, I must close for the present. Give my kind regards to all. Trusting this finds all well; with love to you. I am as ever, your soldier boy,

GERALD.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. R. Swales, Napanee, and Mrs. G. H. Knowles and two sons of Simcoe, have been spending a few days with Mrs. C. W. Moat, Reid Street.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

A meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. for the organization of a City Basketball League. The league will be made up of five teams, with an understanding that only one of the players on the Y.M.C.A. Senior and the High School teams be allowed to play for any team. This arrangement will tend to put the teams on a more or less even basis as regards players.

The first game will played this evening at the Y.M.C.A. at 8 o'clock.

Following is the result of the Hexathalon events, held in the gymnasium Thursday night.

ENLARGING THE SENATE

However populous Canada may become, a change in the size of the Senate can only be made by asking the Imperial Parliament to amend the British North America Act, says the Hamilton Spectator. An address to the Crown having such a procedure in view was introduced in the Dominion House of Commons last year, but the Senate, with its Liberal majority, added a proviso that it should not take effect till after the next general election. Since then the enlargement of the Senate was part of the general redistribution scheme following the decennial census, the Government considered this proviso unreasonable, and nothing further was done. As unfinished business the matter comes up again at the present session.

According to the British North America Act, commonly called the Act of Confederation, the Senate was to consist of 72 members—24 for the Province of Ontario, 24 for Quebec and 24 for the Maritime Provinces. The first increase in the membership of the Senate took place in 1871, when Manitoba and British Columbia, upon entering the Confederation, were awarded two and three seats respectively. In 1878 Prince Edward Island, upon entering Confederation, was given four members, the representation of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick being reduced by two Senators each. In 1882 Manitoba was given an additional member, and in 1892 another. In 1888 the Northwest Territories were given two Senators. In 1904 the representation of the Northwest Territories was increased to four. Upon the creation of the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905, each was alloted four seats in the Senate. So the Senate consists of 87 members, as follows: Ontario 24, Quebec 24, Nova Scotia 10, New Brunswick 10, Prince Edward Island 4, British Columbia 3, Manitoba 4, Saskatchewan 4, Alberta 4.

Premier Borden has now given notice of a resolution in the form of an address to the King, asking that the British North America Act be amended as follows: The number of Senators to be increased to 96. The distribution to be: Ontario 24, Quebec 24, Nova Scotia 10, New Brunswick 10, Prince Edward Island 4, Manitoba 6, Saskatchewan 6, Alberta 6, British Columbia 6. It will be seen that the older parts of Canada remain as before, Ontario and Quebec having 24 Senators each, and the Maritime Provinces between them. The increase is in the West, where the four sixes make another 24.

Politically, the Senate now stands—Liberals 49, Conservatives 29, vacancies 9. If the Senate were not enlarged, the filling of the vacancies would make the standing: Liberals 49, Conservatives 38, leaving a Liberal majority of 11. If there are to be 9 new Senators in the West, and these are appointed by the present Government, the standing will be: Liberals 49, Conservatives 47—a Liberal majority of 2.

There is a way provided in the Constitution wherein the Government of the day, when the adverse majority is so slight, can acquire a majority in the Senate without waiting for the death of antagonistic members. According to the British North America Act, the Government, whenever it deems the occasion suitable, may increase the number of Senators by either three or six—that is to say, either one or two for each of the three divisions of older Canada. If Canada is to consist, in respect to the Senate, of four divisions, because of the addition of the West, it naturally follows that the balance could only be maintained by increasing the number to the extent of either one or two for each of all four. Hence, it is now proposed that the clause of the British North America Act providing for an emergency addition of either three or six members be altered so as to make the addition either four or eight.

The object of the founders of Confederation in providing for this arbitrary increase on sufficient occasion was doubtless to give to the Government of the day, to a very limited extent, the power possessed by the British Ministry of flooding the House of Lords to procure a favorable majority on some crucial question, thus avoiding a deadlock. If there had been only a Liberal majority of two in the Senate when the Borden naval bill was blocked, it would have been quite possible and proper for the Government to appoint three or six new Senators, thus turning the scale. It is, of course, provided that whenever the Senate is increased beyond its normal size, no new appointments shall be made till death brings it down again to the regular number. Since Confederation the power lodged in the Government has never been invoked because there has never been a deadlock that could have been overcome by it. Possibly the Senate will now renew its obstructive tactics, and resist the natural and timely increase of its own membership.

CURRENT COMMENT

Russian culture may not be as advanced as the German article, but it has been equal to the task of improving the spelling of the captured Galician stronghold. Permysl is a decided improvement.

While Sir Edward Grey asserts that Germany's ambitions are doomed, the German professor Martin is urging the occupation of London. With such advice is the German war spirit nourished.

New York Tribune: "The whole German argument is simply an appeal to neutral nations to help her to overcome the military disadvantage under which she labors from the inability of her fleets to keep the seas."

Berlin states that all the warships lost so far have been replaced by new vessels. This appears altogether superfluous, seeing that they keep all they have bottled up.

Should the war last a year—that is, until the first of August—U. S. manufacturers will supply about a billion dollars' worth of war munitions. Well may the American eagle sit listlessly on its perch.

Sir Edward Grey would have had an immense task if he had ventured to touch the possibilities beyond the redemption and restoration of Belgium. Diplomatically, he must deal with them all sooner or later. Perhaps he is at them now.

Wall Street Journal: "Spring is coming, the allies are doing well, confidence is firm, sentiment is cheerful, loose money is easy, much money awaits investment, plans for more production are well under way, business is fair., there is a bond market, the general national position is being shaken into its proper place. Hold up the head and look forward."

Ottawa Journal: "Eric Billington, for several years the star half-back of the McGill University football team, and one of the finest players of his day, now a mining engineer in the west, wrote applying for a commission in the McGill company of the Thirty-eighth Battalion. A reply had to be sent that the officers were full up. Billington sends word that he is coming along to enlist as a private. That's the right spirit."

Perhaps the reason that they have to sell liquor at dances in Chicago is that the men won't dance the new ones until sufficiently lit up.

SAFETY FIRST

You need an effective, dependable liniment and germicide in your home. Safety demands that it shall be harmless. Absorbine Jr. is a germicide liniment that combines safety with efficacy—it is made of herbs, safe and harmless to use.

ENTICING AUSTRIANS TO SEND MONEY HOME

New York Steamship and Banking Firms Publishing a Scheme Whereby Canadian Officials May be Outwitted

TORONTO, March 26.—Various New York steamship and banking firms are circularising Austrians, Hungarians and Austrian Poles in Canada to send money through their agency to these countries now at war with the Empire, according to information supplied to the Register of Alien Enemies today.

Kiss Emil, banker of New York, has an advertisement in a Hungarian paper published in the United States, but widely read by Hungarians in Canada. A translation reads in gist:

"It is a pity that the Canadian Hungarians can not take advantage of the present low prices of sending kronen to Hungary, because Canada is our enemy, and they are trying to stop all money directed to Hungary. They specially know my name and they know that if you send any money or registered letter to me, it surely is money to be forwarded to Hungary. The Canadian Postmasters do even know my name at every post office, therefore send all money after this date to my cashier." (Address follows.)

The names of two other firms have been given by the Registrar by an interpreter.

JACK WELSH NAMED

As Referee For Willard-Johnson Fight at Havana

HAVANA, March 26.—Jack Welsh, of San Francisco, has been named as referee for the Johnson-Willard fight. He was selected at a meeting of the principals and promoters last night and the promoters sent a cablegram to him asking his acceptance.

Tom Jones was spokesman for Willard, Johnson acted for himself. Welsh was selected from a list of fourteen men. Harry Sharpe, of St. Louis, and Mike Donovan, of New York, were also favored, but Welsh won.

The proposal to name a substitute or an alternate was defeated until word should be received from Welsh. A physical examination by an American physician of Jack Johnson yesterday disclosed the fact that the heavyweight champion, who is to meet Jess Willard in the ring on April 4, is in fine condition; that he is enjoying perfect health and that all the organs are normal.

The physician declared that his condition was remarkable for a man 38 years of age. In addition, Johnson has been exhibiting an abundance of spirits and is looking forward with confidence to the coming fight. The usual routine marked the afternoon work of the two men.

Plans have been completed for stands at the Mariano Race Course to accommodate between 20,000 and 30,000 people.

The betting on the fight has not been very extensive, but the small bets so far laid make Johnson the favorite at from 2 to 2½ to 1.

"Oh, dear lady," the surgeon exclaimed, "I must not try your nerves."

But I had not yet heard enough to slake my thirst for the horrible; I would bear more, and I said, "No, no, continue: How was the next morning?" So he continued:

A battle-field by night is hideous enough, but under the glorious sun the fiendish work of man seems doubly fiendish. What the night made seem ghostly, the daylight revealed as absolutely hopeless. Then one first realizes the countless dead—in the streets, the fields.

There is no cannonading, no rattle of musketry, no drums or trumpet blasts, no flags, no regimentals; the only sound is the low moaning of the poor wretches who are dying without aid. The steaming earth is saturated with red puddle that shimmer, reeks, and clot in the sun. Everywhere lie scattered the abandoned sabres, bayonets, knapsacks, cloaks, broken carriages, wagons, and cannon, the half-dead horses staggering up and down and hideously bellowing out their dying shrieks. There is a little hollow into which the wounded had dragged themselves, but it is clear that a battery had driven over them the hoofs and wheels crushing them into a pulpy oozing mass while still alive—yes, hopelessly alive.

But even more hellish than all this is the certain appearance of that vile scum of humanity, the ghouls which creep in the wake of the battle, to plunder and spoil the dead. They slink among the corpses, mercilessly tearing off their valuables, mutilating and hacking even the living if they still have life enough to defend themselves, snatching out their eyes to make them unrecognizable.

And so they lie, day after day, these poor wretches, for the Sanitary Corps, though they work untiringly, cannot stop for the hopeless ones who beg that they be shot or stabbed in their helpless misery. From above the carrion crows are watching from the trees, preparing to descend for their dinner. Even the starved village dogs come and lick the open flesh.

Then comes the great interment. They dig long shallow trenches, and the bodies are thrown in helter-skelter, heads up and heads down. Also they heap the bodies into mounds and cover them with a few feet of dirt. Let the rain wash it away, who cares?

"Now, will you hear what happened the next day?"

"Oh, I can tell you that," I interrupted. "In the capital of the victorious country the reports have arrived. In the forenoon, while the hyenas of the battle-field work round the trenches, the people in the churches are singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and in the evening, wife and mother of those who have been buried—while yet breathing perhaps—put lighted candles on their window-sill, for the city has to be illuminated for a sign of joy."

"Yes," said the surgeon, "such comedy is marked in the cities—and yonder the tragedy continues. . ."

What a terrible journey it was! Long after the surgeon ceased to tell his story we caught glimpses from the window of the effects of the war. True, there were no scenes of devastation but everywhere families were hurrying with their belongings, leaving home to go they knew not where, for the cry, "The Prussians are coming," filled them with terror. We passed many trains carrying the wounded to the inland hospitals. The stations were crammed with men waiting to be carried farther. They had been brought by wagons and cots from the field, and were waiting to get either to the hospitals or cemeteries. At every halt the Sisters of Charity in our party immediately busied themselves, but I was useless. The uproar about the stations was like a bewildering dream; people were running about confusedly, the troops were taking the trains to go farther, the wounded and bleeding were swarming everywhere, and the screams of women added to the frightful conditions. Cannons and baggage wagons rumbled by; trains followed, carrying the reserves from Vienna. The soldiers were crammed in cattle-trucks and freight-cars—just as cattle are sent to the slaughter—and were they not, I could not help thinking, were they not being sent to the big political shambles where the official butchers seek their profits? They rushed by on the rattling wheels like the wind, and a howling war-song pealed from the cars. An armed host marching through the fields or roads on foot or horse, with flags flying, has a certain antique touch of the poetic, more of the movement of free will in it; that the railroad track, this symbol of modernism and civilization which brings the nations nearer together, should be used to thrust men into the battle to let barbarism loose is a hideous contradiction. And even the clicking telegraph, mastering the lightning to do man's will, to advance his interests, to relieve his anxieties, to bring his life into immediate and close touch with his fellows—to think that it should be used in the service of barbarity! Our boast before the barbarians is, "Behold our civilization, our railroads, our telegraph lines," and then we debase these things by using them to enforce and multiply our own savagery.

Such thoughts deepened and embittered my sorrow. Happy were they who were simply weeping and wringing their hands, whose souls did not rise up in wrath against the whole hideous comedy, who did not accuse nor arraign any one with the blame—not even that Lord of Armies whom they believed to be the loving author of all their misery!

Late in the evening I arrived at Koniginhof, my companions having left me at an earlier station. What if Dr. Bresser failed to meet me? My nerves were quite shattered by the night's experiences, and only my extreme anxiety about Frederick sustained me.

The station in Koniginhof was overflowing with wounded men; they were lying everywhere—in every nook and corner, in the ground, and on the stones. The night was very dark, there was no moon, and only a few lanterns lighted the station. I sank on to a bench, put my luggage on the ground before me, overcome with the desire for sleep. I began to realize the absurdity of my coming. What if Frederick were already at home, or perhaps dead and buried? Oh, to be able to sleep and forget it, and perhaps even never wake again to behold all this world of horror! At least, let me not live on and find Frederick among the "missing." Was perhaps my boy at home calling for me? What if I did not find Dr. Bresser? What should I do in that case? Luckily I had a little bag with money about my neck, and money always affords some help out of difficulties. And I involuntarily felt for the bag. The fastenings were torn off—it was gone. What a blow! Still, the floods of misfortune on all sides made my loss seem slight to me. I rose to look for the station-master, and suddenly caught sight of Dr. Bresser. In my excitement I fell about his neck.

"Baroness Tilling!" he exclaimed. "What on earth are you doing here?"

"I have come to assist. Is Frederick in one of your hospitals?"

His negative reply was a relief as well as a disappointment. But how could he know of all the wounded. I would search for myself. I asked for Frau Simon.

"She is here, and a splendid woman—quick, decisive, prudent. She has discovered that the need is the greatest in a near village. We are going there together."

"Let me go along with you, Doctor." He tried to dissuade me, but after some argument he introduced me to Frau Simon as an assistant, and in a few minutes we started on our journey in a hay wagon which had just brought some wounded men to the station. We sat upon the straw, possibly still wet from blood, and started on our long uncomfortable ride. The rickety wagon with its straw-covered boards was pure torture to me, accustomed to springs and cushions. I was sound and well, what must it have been to the mangled and shattered bodies which were carried over rough roads in this wagon? My eyes were heavy; the discomfort and excited nerves prevented sleep, but leaning on the Doctor's shoulder, half-dreaming, I heard bits of the conversation which my companions carried on half aloud.

They spoke of the lack of surgeons and instruments. Even bread was not to be had, and in many places the water had been so polluted that it could not be used. Every roof-covered space was crammed with wounded men dying and raving in their last agonies, and in their ravings they blasphemed God.

"Mr. Twining of London must have heard these curses," said the Doctor, "when he proposed to the Geneva Red Cross that, when the condition of the wounded is hopeless, they should be offered the consolations of religion and then be put out of their agony in the most humane manner, thus preventing them from dying with curses of God upon their lips."

"How unchristian," cried Frau Simon.

"Unchristian to give them such gracious relief?"

"No, but the idea that such curses are a sin. The christian God is not unjust, he takes the fallen soldiers to Himself."

"Mohammed promises paradise to every Turk who slays a christian," replied Dr. Bresser. "Believe me, dear madam, the gods that are represented as both inciting war and blessing murder are deaf both to curses and to prayers. Look up and see the planet Mars overhead. Every two years it shines there, and is unconscious of its consecration to the god of war. That same blood-red star shone down upon Marathon and Thermopylæ, the curses of the dying were heaped upon it, but it indifferently and peacefully kept its perfect circuit round the sun—even as to-day. Unlucky stars? There is no such thing—man is the only enemy of man—and his only friend."

But finally sleep overcame me, and it was a relief to get rid of the unendurable images that filled my brain. How long I slept I do not know, but I was suddenly roused as by a shock. But no, it was not a noise or vibration which woke me; it was a pestilential, stifling odor that filled the air. By the clear light of the moon, which had risen, we saw the cause of the intolerable stench; a church wall which had served as a breastwork was banked up with countless corpses, from which a black cloud of fluttering ravens rose as we approached, and fluttered back again upon their feast as we passed on.

The driver whipped up the horses, and we jolted madly out of the range of the frightful odor. Terror held my throat like a screw, or I should have shrieked.

As we arrived at our destination, Frau Simon complained that I should be more of a burden than a help, but I roused all my courage and begged to be allowed to assist. We found ourselves in the middle of the village at the gate of a chateau which had been deserted by its owners and filled from cellar to roof with wounded men. We got out, and I pulled myself together with all my force. We passed the gate of the chateau, meeting stifled sounds of woe on all sides. Everything was dark, and we had forgotten to bring along any means of lighting. Some matches from the Doctor's pocket served for a few seconds to give us a flash of the terrible picture. Our feet slipped in the bloody slime, and we could do nothing but add our despair to the multitudinous groaning and sighing about us.

Frau Simon and the Doctor hurried out to search for the village priest and left me alone in the dark among these wailing people, and in this stifling odor, shuddering to the bones. But the Doctor returned, saying, "No, you must come with us, you shall not stay in that purgatory." I waited in the open air in the wagon for half an hour, when the expedition came back quite unsuccessful. The pastor's house was in ruins and no light was to be found. We must wait for the daylight, and how many of these miserable creatures would perish after all the hope our coming had wakened in them?

Those three hours seemed endless, marked not by the ticking of the clock, but by the fitful groans and helpless cries of the wounded. At last the day broke. Now for duty. First the frightened, hiding villagers must be found and made to help. Some buried the dead, others cleared the choked wells, everything was collected that would furnish food and clothing. A Prussian surgeon with his staff arrived, and before long some of the general distress was relieved. First we visited the crowd of wounded in the castle—my husband was not among them; then I went with Dr. Bresser into the village church, where a hundred men, mangled and feverish lay on the stone floor. I almost fainted with terror as I looked for the one beloved face—it was not there. I sank beside the altar, filled with inexpressible horror. And this was the temple of the eternal God of Love! The niches were full of pious images—saints with folded hands and lifted faces which were crowned with circlets of gold. I heard a poor soldier cry "O Mother of God, Holy Mother, one drop of water, have mercy!" All eternity he might have called to that painted image. Ah, miserable men, your petitions to God will be in vain till you obey the law of love which He has stamped upon your own souls. So long as hate and murder are not subdued in your own hearts, you can hope for no compassion from Heaven.

Oh, the experiences of that dreadful day! At the sight of one scene, which my pen shrinks to describe, I heard Mrs. Simon exclaim:

"It is astonishing what human nature can endure."

What is most astonishing to me is that human beings will bring each other into such situations of agony; that men will not swear before God that war shall cease; that, if they are princes, they do not break their swords; and, if they have no other power, that they do not, in thought and words and deeds, devote themselves to the one passionate cry, "Disarm! Disarm!"

I remembered that in a barn, where we found a heap of wounded and dead who had been forgotten there for more than a week, my poor strength finally forsook me and I swooned away.

When my consciousness returned I found myself in a railway car, Dr. Bresser sitting beside me. He was bringing me home. I had not found my husband—thank God I had not found him among those terrible scenes—and a faint hope took possession of my heart that some news of him was awaiting me in Grumitz.

Whatever the future held for me in sorrow or joy, it would never be able to blot out the memory of the gigantic misery which I had witnessed, and I was resolved that I should cry it into the ears of my human brothers and sisters until they should no longer look upon war as a fatality, but as an unspeakable crime.

I slept nearly the entire way to Vienna; at the station my father met me, embraced me silently, and said to the Doctor:

"How can I thank you for taking this crazy young woman under your protection——"

"I must be off. Put the young woman to bed. Do not scold her, she has been terribly shaken. Give her orange-flower water and rest. Good-bye."

We picked our way through the long rows of ambulance wagons and carriages to our own conveyance. I had only one question on my lips, but had not the courage to ask it till we were started: "Any news from Frederick?"

"Not up to yesterday, when I came here in answer to the telegram to meet you," was the reply. "However, when we get home there may be news. How silly of you to give us such a fright! To go right into the midst of those savage enemies and needle-guns—the worst might have happened; but never mind, the doctor said I should not scold you."

"How is my boy, my Rudolf?"

"He is crying for you and hunting all over the place. But you seem strangely indifferent about the rest of us."

"How are they all? Has Conrad written?"

"The family is all well, and a letter came from Conrad yesterday. So Lilli is happy, and you, too, will see Tilling back safe and sound. There is nothing good to report from the political centre. Have you heard of the great calamity?"

"I have seen and heard nothing but calamity and misery."

"Oh, beautiful Venice has been given—handed over on a platter—to the intriguing Louis Napoleon, and in spite of winning the victory of Custozza. Venice as well as Lombardy lost! But that gives us peace in the south, and Napoleon on our side, and a chance to revenge ourselves yet on the Prussians. But you are not listening, so I will obey Bresser's orders, and see that you rest."

"Martha, Martha, he is here," shouted my sisters from the chateau garden as they rushed to meet us.

"Who?"

"Frederick."

It was true. He had arrived the evening before, having been transported with other wounded from Bohemia. A slight bullet wound in the leg was all, and he was never in danger.

But joy was hardest of all to bear. The terrors of the day before did not more completely rob me of my senses. I had to be lifted from the carriage to bed, and for several hours lay in delirious unconsciousness. When I found myself conscious in my own bed, I believed I had only wakened from a terrible dream, and had never been away. My aunt recalled me to realities:

"Quick, Martha, get up. Frederick is dying with impatience to see you."

"Frederick, Frederick." All these days I had called this name with pain, and now it was with a cry of joy. It was not a dream—I had been away, had come back, and would see my husband.

Alone I went to his room, and sank sobbing upon his breast:

"Frederick!"

"Martha!"

CHAPTER IV.

Thus for the second time my beloved husband was restored to me from the dangers of war.

Who was I, that this tide of woe should have passed over and left me safe and happy on the shore, when so many thousands had sunk beneath the flood of misery? Happy indeed were those who were simple-hearted enough to lift up their glance to heaven and express their deep gratitude to the Almighty Guide, and feel that for this special blessing a divine Providence had chosen them. Those who speak such gratitude think they are humble, but they do not realize how arrogant and self-important they really are. When I thought of the poor wretches and the broken hearts and the mourning mothers and wives, I could not be so immodest as to take all this as a favor sent from God to me. I remembered how our housekeeper swept one day from a closet a swarm of ants. Fate had in just such a way swept over the fields of Bohemia. The poor workers had been ruthlessly scattered, crushed, and killed—only a few were unhurt. In the case of the ants, would it seem reasonable and just to imagine those few remaining ones would send up prayers of gratitude to the housekeeper?

However great was our joy of reunion, I could not unload the burden of sorrow and suffering I had seen. Though I could not help and nurse and endure like those other courageous women, yet I felt a compassion toward my brother men that I could never drown in selfish contentment again. I would settle this account with the world some day.

Yet, though I could not feel triumphant and grateful, I could love with a hundredfold more tenderness than ever before. "Oh, Frederick, Frederick," I would repeat with tears and caresses, "have I found you at last?"

"Yes, and you rushed off to find me and nurse me—was that not heroic and foolish of you, Martha?"

"Foolish, I agree. I imagined I heard you call. But heroic, no! If you only could know how cowardly I was in the face of misery! If you had been lying there I could have been brave. Such horrors as I have seen I shall never forget. Oh, this world is so beautiful, and how can men make it so terrible! A world in which we two can find such happiness and fill with such unchanging love, how can any one spoil it by stirring up such flames of hate to bring death and agony?"

"I have seen horrible things too, Martha—one thing I shall never forget. Who do you suppose sprang at me during our cavalry engagement at Sadowa? Gottfried von Tessow."

"Aunt Cornelia's son?"

"Yes; he recognized me in time, and dropped his sword, which he held ready to sink into my skull."

"Where was his duty? How could he spare his King's and country's enemy? How dare he think first of friend or cousin?"

"The poor boy! His arm dropped, and suddenly a sabre swung from the officer next to me, who wished to defend my life——" and Frederick covered his face with his hands."

"Killed," I asked, shuddering. He nodded.

"Mamma, mamma," came from the next room, and Lilli appeared with my little Rudolf. I rushed to him, and eagerly pressed him to me. "Ah, poor, poor Aunt Cornelia."

It looked as though the war was practically over. The quarrel with France and Italy ceased when Austria abandoned Venice. Prussia offered liberal terms, and our emperor was anxious lest Vienna, his capital, should be besieged. Prussia's other German victories, and the entry into Frankfort, awoke a certain admiration which success always brings, and imbued the Austrians with the feeling that Prussia might be destined to perform a certain historical mission in her victories.

The words "truce" and "peace" became contagious, and one could almost count upon their coming true, in the same way as war threats gave rise to war. My father admitted that the needle-gun had exhausted our ranks. He did not wish to contemplate a march on Vienna, which meant the destruction of his estate in Grumitz. That would have been too much for even his bellicose spirit. His confidence in Austria's invincibility was sadly shaken, and in common with the rest of mortals he felt it was best to put a stop to the run of luck, for no doubt some day the tide would turn with an opportunity for vengeance. Vengeance follows vengeance! Every war leaves one side defeated with the belief that the next war will give them satisfaction! And so one struggle invites and demands the next—where will it end? How can justice ever be established if in punishing an old wrong another is committed? Can one obliterate ink-stains with ink, or oil-spots with oil? Yet they say nothing but blood can wash out blood.

At Grumitz a gloom settled over every one. The villagers prepared for the coming of the Prussians, hiding their possessions. Even our family silver was secreted. We read and talked of nothing but the war. Lilli had heard nothing from Conrad for days. My father's patriotism was deeply wounded, and though Frederick and I were blissfully happy in our reunion, yet the unhappiness of the rest affected us painfully. Over a letter from Aunt Cornelia we shed bitter tears for she had not yet learned of her only son's death.

As we sat all together in the evening there was no music or cheerful chatter, no jokes or games, only the repetition of stories of woe and death.

Any possibility of the prolongation of the war filled my brother Otto with enthusiasm, for in that event the seniors of the military academy had been promised to be called into the service. He longed for the privilege—straight from the military school into the battle-field. Just as a girl graduate longs for her first ball, for which she has been taught to dance, and the light and music, so the young cadet welcomes his first engagement in the great artillery dance for which he has been learning to shoot.

Frederick and I had decided that upon the declaration of Peace he would resign from the army and that under no circumstances would our son be educated at school where the whole education was bent upon awakening in boys the thirst for military glory. I questioned my brother Otto, and found that in the schools they taught that war was a necessary evil (at least acknowledging, in the spirit of the age, that it is an evil), at the same time the chief incentive to all the noblest manly virtues—courage, endurance, and self-sacrifice. Through war comes the highest glory to men and the greatest progress to civilization. Alexander, Cæsar, and Napoleon, conquerors and empire builders, were to be regarded as the supreme types of human exaltation. War's successes and benefits were described in high colors, but its wretched results were piously ignored. There was complete silence as to the barbarity, degeneration, and ruin which it brought.

I remembered my own girlish enthusiasm for war, and could hardly blame my brother that he looked upon a possible call to battle with impatience.

I offered one day to read the report of a retreat of our army, and Otto impatiently said, "I would rather not hear it. If it were the enemy retreating that would be different."

"Retreats are generally passed over in silence," remarked Frederick.

But my father hastily added, "A well-ordered retreat is not a flight. Why, in '49——"

But I knew the old story of '49, and headed it off by beginning to read:

About four o'clock our troops began to retreat. We surgeons were caring for several hundred wounded, when suddenly the cavalry broke in on us. A general rush brought on tremendous confusion of artillery, cavalry, infantry, and baggage, all joining in the flight. Men, horses and wagons were mingled together. We were swept from our work. They shouted to us, "Save yourselves!" as the shell burst overhead. We were carried forward by the surging mass, we knew not whither——"

"Enough! enough!" cried the two girls.

"The censor of the press should stop such stuff from appearing," exclaimed my father angrily. "It takes away all pride in the profession of war."

"Yes, if they should destroy all joy in war it would be such a pity," I said in an undertone.

"At least," continued my father, "those who take part in a flight ought to be quiet about it—it is no honor. The rascal who shouted 'Save yourselves!' ought to be shot. A coward raises a yell and thousands of brave men are demoralized and run with him."

"And in the same way," responded Frederick, "when some brave fellow shouts 'Forward!' a thousand cowards sweep after him, inspired with his courage. Men cannot be called either cowardly or brave, for every one has his moments of strength and weakness. When crowded together we move as a herd, dependent upon the mind of our fellows. One man rushes, shouting, 'Hurrah!' and the rest do the same. Another drops his gun and runs and the rest follow. In each case it is the same impulse, yet in the one case they are praised for courage and in the other blamed for cowardice. Bravery and fear are not fixed qualities, neither are joy and sorrow; they are merely different states of mind. In my first campaign I was drawn into such a wild confusion of flight. The official reports called it a well-ordered retreat, but it was, in fact, a complete riot. We rushed madly on, without orders, panting and shrieking with despair, the enemy goading us with bullets. This is one of the most horrible phases of war, when men are no longer gallant soldiers but beasts, and hunt each other as prey; the pursuer becomes a blood-drunken savage and the pursued is filled with the delirium of terror like a poor animal at bay. All the sentiments of patriotism, ambition, and noble deeds with which he has been educated for the battle are forgotten—he is merely possessed with the instinct for self-preservation and filled with the wildest paroxysms of terror."

Frederick's recovery progressed, even as the feverishness of the outer world lessened, and daily we heard more of peace. The Prussians advanced without obstacle, and surely and slowly approached Vienna, passing through the City of Brunn, where they had already been given the keys. But their march was more like a military promenade than an activity of war, and by July 26 the preliminaries of peace were announced.

Another political event of the day was that Austria had, at last, joined the Geneva Convention of the Red Cross.

"Does that satisfy you?" asked my father as he read the news aloud. "You call war barbarism, but you see it also progresses with civilization and becomes more humane. I am in favor of all these efforts to relieve the wounded. Even from the standpoint of statesmanship it is wiser, for it is well that the sick should be made fit for service again."

"You are right, papa. The important thing is that they be made useful material for future battles. But no Red Cross can alleviate the agonies I have witnessed. With multiplied men and means they could not conjure away the results of one battle——"

"Not conjure it away, but mitigate it—what we cannot prevent we should seek to mitigate."

"For what I have seen there is no mitigation. We should turn the rule about: what we cannot mitigate we ought to prevent."

That war must cease was daily becoming a fixed idea with me—and that every human being should work to this end. The scenes I had witnessed after the great battle haunted me, especially at night, when I would awake with the most terrible oppression of heart and pricking of conscience just as if I were being commanded to stop it. And only when fully awake would I realize my entire incapacity to stem such a tide—as well might I face the swelling waves of the sea, and command them to dry up.

Frederick and I had made very definite plans for the future. At the close of the war he was to resign, and we would retire to some small country place, and live with his pension and my allowance in a simple way.

Frederick intended to take up the study of international law and science apart from its sentimental and utopian aspect, and [illegible] himself capable of grasping the practical side of all these ideas. He felt that the world was coming into a new era of thought, and he desired to lead his life into these lines along with our domestic pleasures.

We had not communicated our thoughts to my father, who had quite other ambitions for our future.

"You will be a colonel at a very early age, Tilling," he said one day, "and in ten years you will certainly be a general. A fresh war will certainly give you the command of an entire corps, and you may even reach the rank of commander-in-chief, who knows. It may come to your lot to restore the glory of the arms of Austria, which is for the moment under a cloud. When once we adopt the needle-gun or some more effective weapon we shall soon have the best of these Prussian gentlemen."

"Who knows," I suggested, "we may even make it up with the Prussians and become their allies."

My father shrugged his shoulders. "If women would only keep out of politics! Our honor and our position as a Power of Europe demand that we should punish these insolent braggarts, and take back the states which they have annexed. What! friendship with these dastardly enemies! Never! unless they come and humbly beg for it."

"In that event," remarked Frederick, "we would set our feet upon their necks. Alliances are only sought with those whom we fear or need as a protection against a common foe. In statecraft egotism is the ruling motive."

"Yes, indeed," my father replied, "when that ego represents our own fatherland everything else is secondary."

"We can but wish," replied Frederick, "that communities may adopt the same rules of behavior as is demanded of individuals, which does away with the law of the fist and the vulgar self-seeking, and declares that our own interests are best advanced when we are in harmony with the interests of others."

"What's that?" asked my father, with his hand to his ear, but Frederick wisely dropped the discussion.

CONRAD

The delight with which this dispatch was received by Lilli can be imagined. No welcome is so loving and gracious as that given to him who returns from war. Naturally he would have preferred to return victoriously, to have aided in conquering for his emperor, but it was honor enough to have fought at all—and to be among the fallen was a specially glorious fate. Otto said that in the military academy every one who was left dead on the field was specially inscribed in the roll of honor, and the more ancestors one could boast as having fallen in battle, the prouder were the descendants, and the less value should they place upon their own lives. To show one's appreciation of such ancestors need one actively and passively rejoice in all kinds of bloodshed in war?

Perhaps it is better that so long as war exists there should be plenty that find pleasure and inspiration in it. Alas! this class is daily growing less, while the armies are daily increasing. Where will it finally lead?

But Conrad did not think so far ahead, and my brother Otto was his envious admirer—of the hussar uniform, the scar that decorated his chin, which he got in passing through a rain of bullets—all this surrounded him with a halo of glory.

"I will admit it was an unfortunate campaign, but I have brought back glorious memories of it."

"Oh, tell us, tell us!" Lilli and Otto cried.

"The details are gone, but the whole lies behind me like a dream, for powder gets into one's head in such a strange way. The moment the order comes to march, the intoxication and the fever begin, even at the very moment of suffering the pain of farewell from loved ones. But when surrounded by comrades, filled with the demand of patriotic duty, marching with the bands playing and the flag fluttering, I would not have turned back even to the arms of my sweetheart. Nor would I be worthy of her if I did. One never doubts one is marching to victory. The needle-guns you say? Ah, they alone were the cause of our defeat—their bullets fell upon us like hailstones. Also Benedek's generalship was poor. They should court-martial him. If I were ever general I should play a forward game, ever advancing on the enemy. However, since the Emperor did not put me in charge, the tactics were not my fault. We officers and soldiers were ordered to fight, and fight we did. And that was the glorious sensation of it. The anticipation, the suspense, waiting for the order to charge—the consciousness that in the next moment we should be creating history—the delight in one's own courage, with Death to the right and left—bidding this awful mystery defiance——"

"Just like poor Gottfried Tessow," murmured Frederick to me. "Of course it is all from the same teaching."

To Be Continued.

Shooting the Germans at Neuve Chapelle is compared to the cutting of grain. It can hardly be said of the enemy, however, that they are as good as the wheat.

Mrs. Wiseneighbour says:—

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "Eddy's" Washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday."

Mrs. Newlywed says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat, all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

ONE AGAINST MANY

What Happened When the Irish Policeman Thought Green Was Red.

By HAROLD CARTER.

To be put back on patrol duty after fourteen years of steady desk work, and when one is approaching forty and conscious of an increasing girth, is enough to distress any ordinarily constituted policeman. Dennis Flaherty was no exception to the rule. He told his wife the news at dinner.

"They haven't got a grudge against you, Dennis?" she asked, fearful as all women are at the thought that their husband's positions are insecure.

"No, it's Commissioner Everett, bad luck to him," said Dennis. "Nineteen of us, Nora, woman, turned out of our berths and set to pound the sidewalks. The only comfort is them reformers never lasts long. No, them reformers ain't what I'd call stayers," he continued, sipping his tea with melancholy satisfaction.

"But, Dennis, maybe you'll be set upon by them strikers," suggested Nora, remembering the days when she had lain awake at night with mental images of her husband being waylaid by criminals, and trembling at every ring of the door bell.

'It ain't them guys I'm scared of," retorted her husband. "It's me corns. Sidewalks is hard on corns—and a reformer in the street paving department, bad luck to the pair of 'em."

"But, Dennis," suggested his wife, hopefully, "didn't the doctor say your eyes wasn't fit for patrol duty and you'd have to do desk duty instead?"

"That was Doc Flanagan, as good a Cork man as ever breathed. The new doc's a Scotchman. I saw him yestidday. I says to him my eyes isn't what they used to be. 'All the more reason for you to give up desk work, Flaherty,' he answered. 'Your eyes is as sound as the ace of spades,' he says to me, after he'd put me through my paces. So I guess it's the sidewalks for me, Nora."

Ever since Patrolman Flaherty, in his earliest days, had walked into a dynamite explosion, averring that he had not seen the red danger flag, he had believed that his eyes were bad. True, they served him well enough at desk duty. But Doctor Flanagan had known Flaherty in the old country, and a word from him had brought about the transfer. Now Flaherty was condemned to pound the sidewalks, at the instance of the unsympathetic and reforming police commissioner, and there was no redress.

"Stop That!"

However, he minded less than Nora. In spite of his ample girth he considered himself well able to defend the majesty of the law against the strikers, who, with flags flying and bands playing, paraded the business section of the town daily. There were not enough police to preserve order. Citizens had been sworn in on special duty, and conflicts were frequent.

"If I can't do desk work I'll show 'em they've got the best cop in town down at the quay, Nora," he said to his wife at the end of the first day.

"They've never put you on post down there!" exclaimed his wife in horror.

The Quay was the name locally given to the bridge which crossed the river between two factory districts. The strikers had constantly endeavored to cross it in parade, but each time they had been repelled. However, on the morrow, as they had publicly advertised, they meant to march over the bridge in a grand procession to the city hall. And this the mayor had sworn they should not do.

"There'll be nigh on a hundred of us, Nora," answered Flaherty. "I guess I can take care of meself, woman."

He felt prouder than ever of his uniform on the next day when, standing in a platoon with his comrades, he watched the mob forming in the lower section of the town. There was the sound of distant music. Flaherty started and frowned. Why, this was sacrilege. The band was playing "The Wearing of the Green."

Flaherty gripped his club tighter. He looked at the lieutenant in charge. He had ordered the men to disperse to their own posts. Did he not know then, that an attack was imminent? This was Flaherty's post, here on the bridge. The platoon was dispersing. Discipline forbade Flaherty to ask questions. He was left alone. He gripped his club more tightly. If he was to be made the sacrifice on account of a foolish order he would show them what he could do. His feet were paining him furiously and the blood rushed to his head. He was quite alone now.

"I'll teach 'em, the dogs, playing that tune!" he muttered. The crowd had gathered into a well-organized detachment and started toward the bridge. In front of it marched two men, each carrying a huge red flag. Flaherty looked round. Was nobody going to stop them? All he could see was the lieutenant's coat disappearing round the corner of the block.

On they came, toward the center of the bridge, where Flaherty stood. The music sounded loudly, the flags waved, cheers and yells came from the throats of thousands. The sidewalks were lined with spectators. A faintness overcame Dennis. Had the mayor actually forbidden this procession or was he dreaming? But a good cop never pauses to examine his metaphysical condition. He strode forward with uplifted club.

"Stop that!" he yelled. "Stop right there, boys. The first man that sets his foot forward, I'll bate his brains out."

The old Irish accent had come back in full force with his excitement. Dennis saw the men with the flags halt irresolutely. The crowd surged backward and forward, and then, at a word of command from its leaders, advanced again. The men with the flags smiled coolly and contemptuously. Dennis felt his wrath overcome his reason. He sprang forward and began clubbing right and left. He seized the nearest flag. The mob beat against him like an invading sea. A thousand voices clamored for his blood. The flag was wrenched out of his hand. He seized the staff again, struck right and left, was beaten to his knees, staggered under the terrific blows that were showered upon him; then the mob surged forward over his prostrate body.

"Flaherty the Cap's waiting to see you," said the man who was bathing his forehead.

Dennis opened his eyes. The swimming room was the district police quarters. Then this battered, aching man on the cot must be himself, Dennis Flaherty. But he had done his duty. He rose to his feet and staggered into the captain's room—to confront not the captain alone, but the police commissioner.

"Drunk and ran amuck right into the midst of them, commissioner," he heard the captain saying.

"You are accused of attacking the parade of Loyal American Hibernians, Flaherty," said his captain. "Also of attempting to purloin one flag, the property of the organization. What have you to say?"

"'Twas the strikers wid their red flags I fought, and alone," cried Flaherty.

"Red flag!" snorted the commissioner. "Since when has the red flag been the symbol of Ireland's glory, my man? That flag was as green as the emerald grass of Ireland."

"'Twas as red as—as that!" cried Dennis, pointing to a tattered emblem in a corner of the room.

'Begorra, that's the very flag!' yelled the captain. "He's drunk still Commissioner."

"I think this is a case for Dr. McDermott," said the commissioner smiling. "It's all right, my man," he added. "You can go home on sick leave now. I think, Captain, if McDermott agrees with my diagnosis, I may revoke my order concerning desk duty in this special instance."

"You see, Nora," explained her husband afterward, "with every Irishman in town hungering for me blood—why, they thought a whole cop at the typewriter was better than twinty pieces of one making work for the street paving commissioner."

War on Typhoid Fever.

Once more the relation of typhoid fever to the water supply has been demonstrated. During the flood of some weeks ago the Hudson river at Albany, N. Y., rose a foot above the city filtration beds, and the people received the untreated water of the river, containing the sewage of places upstream. An outbreak of typhoid followed, and it was found that 75 per cent. of the cases were in families where the warning to boil the water for drinking had not been heeded. The main reservoir was then sterilized chemically, and the typhoid ceased. Modern medicine has done great things in making preventable what in other days were reckoned to be the visitations of God. Our grandfathers wondered at the prevalence of typhoid after floods, but we know that the trouble comes from the contamination of water supplies, and so lives are saved where once human beings were doomed. Year by year the science of sanitation is reducing the peril from typhoid.

The Horse on the Farm

Every farm should have at least one trusty horse that the women can harness and drive whenever they wish.

Every farm team should be matched with care as to temperament and size. Good work can never be done where one horse is quick and nervous, and the other slow and lagging.

A horse which is worked hard every day should be fed with a view to producing muscle rather than fat. When idle, a horse's ration should be reduced considerably.

SOME TESTED RECIPES

Gingergead

Cream ½ cup of butter with ½ cup of brown sugar, add pinch of salt, ¼ teaspoon of ginger. Sift 2½ cups of flour. Put 2 even teaspoons of soda into 1 cup of boiling water. Add 1-3 of the hot water to the sugar mixture, stirring in half the flour, beat hard, add another third of water and the rest of the flour. Beat hard. Add rest of water and 3 eggs well beaten. Grease long baking pan, turn in batter, bake in the slowest possible oven.

Marshmallow Gingerbread

When cake is done cut off one-third while cake is hot. Split open quickly making two layers; cover bottom layer with marshmallows, put on top layer, dot top with marshmallow, return to oven until marshmallows are slightly melted.

Savory Cheese.

Rub one-quarter pound of Roquefort cheese to smooth paste. Add two tablespoons of sweet cream, fifteen drops of onion juice, add one cream cheese (costs 10 cents), mix all together with silver fork. Add one tablespoon of minced parsley and one of minced green sweet pepper. Salt to taste. Mold and set in cool place. Serve with toasted crackers.

Frozen Marmalade

Make boiled custard of 2 cups of milk with the yolks of 3 eggs and a tablespoon of sugar. Mix egg and sugar until creamy. Add to warm milk and boil until consistency of cream. Do not cook until it curdles. If it should strain through fine wire sieve. To 1 cup of orange marmalade add the juice of 2 oranges, mix well, and add slowly to the pint of cool boiled custard. Freeze and allow to stand three hours before serving.

Codfish Balls

Pick one cup salt cod fish in small pieces; wash but do not allow to soak.

Peel, dice and wash two cups of raw potato. Put in saucepan with fish, cover with boiling water and cook until potatoes are soft. Drain thoroughly and return fish and potato to saucepan and mash and beat thoroughly, being very careful no lumps are left in potato. Add one-half tablespoon of butter, and a dash of pepper. Beat one egg very light and add to fish mixture. Drop from spoon into hot deep fat. Do not try to fry more than four at each time or they will be broken in shape. Drain on brown paper and serve hot.

These balls may be prepared in the morning and allowed to stand until evening in cool place. Then dip in egg and fry.

Buttermilk Biscuits

Sift one quart of flour with a level teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda and a half teaspoonful of salt; rub into it a tablespoonful of shortening. Grease a shallow baking pan and see that the oven is hot. Add to the flour mixture one pint of thick sour milk or buttermilk; knead quickly, using sufficient flour to prevent sticking. Roll it out, cut it into biscuits, put it in a baking pan, and bake twenty minutes.

PREPARING SALT FOR DOMESTIC USE

Most of the Product is Taken From Underground—In Both Rock and Brine Form

There are three principal sources from which salt is obtained, that is, salt lakes, the sea, and salt mines. The great Salt Lake in Utah, provides a very good quality of salt, but it has to be purified before it is suitable for the table. The world depends for its chief supply on the beds of salt rock underground. The biggest salt mines are in Poland and Austria-Hungary, some of which have been worked for hundreds of years, and contain dining rooms, ball rooms, and chapels hewn out of the solid rock salt.

Within the last generation a new method has been found of mining salt. Instead of, as formerly, making shafts down which the men are swung, and up which the salt is raised after being hewn or blasted, the following method is adopted. Holes are bored in the ground, sometimes from 500 feet to 1,200 feet in depth, until the salt beds are reached. Tubes are then inserted from 9 inches to 12 inches in diameter, and water is sent down to the bottom, where it dissolves the salt rock, forming strong brine. This eventually rises up the tube, whence it is pumped to the surface. If quite saturated it then contains 26 per cent. of salt, the remainder being water generally colored with clay or other impurity. The brine is then run into salt pans for evaporation.

For 200 years at least, until quite recently, only one method was employed for this evaporation. The iron salt pans are from 60 feet to 80 feet long, 30 feet broad, and 2½ feet deep. Huge fires are lighted at one end of the pans, and flues brought underneath. The brine is boiled, and the water evaporated until the salt falls down to the bottom of the pan. It is then raked out and laid in heaps to drain, and is then, for many purposes, ready for the market.

The temperature at which the brine is evaporated determines the quality of the salt crystals. When fine table salt is wanted the boiling is conducted more rapidly, and this makes a finer crystal.

A second type of evaporation pan is what is known as the vacuum pan. The brine, instead of being poured into pans, is run through pipes into large closed boxes, from which the air is, in a great measure, removed by pumps. By this means the water is removed much more cheaply.

ALCOHOL AND INSURANCE

Total Abstainers Have More Favorable Expectations of Life

The value of abstinence from alcohol as a life-preserver was exemplified in one aspect of an address which Dr. Eugene L. Fisk of New York, delivered to the members of the Insurance Institute of Toronto. Quoting the experience of the United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution, he stated that the general class in that company showed a very low mortality, but the abstaining class, about equal numbers and homogeneous to the general class in all respects, except for the non-use of liquor showed a mortality of 27 per cent. below that of the general class over a period of 44 years.

Applying the mortality rate of the abstainers to a company where the average age is 35, the distribution of policy forms normal, and the mortality 9 points below the British experience, a reduction in the net premium required of $3.02 would result.

A Proposal of Peace

A Carleton County farmer offered his services to the Dominion Government as peace envoy, and laid down some remarkable rules for the holding of the peace conference. It must be held, he said, in Jerusalem, the throne of David being occupied temporarily by him during the proceedings. The latter must open at dawn in order to conclude at mid-day. The man who made these proposals saw some of the Ministers, and wrote to the Prime Minister. Freak offers reach the Government at the rate of about two a week.

BELGIANS LOVE TOBACCO

Heaviest Smokers in the World, the Pipe Most Popular

That the Belgians, in their times of happy peace and prosperity, consumed more tobacco per head than any other country in the world will probably come as a surprise to many people. Their army of smokers, however, formed no less than one-third of the entire population of the country, their annual consumption of tobacco being 6¼ pounds per head—more than three times the amount consumed in the United Kingdom, and six times as much as in Italy.

And it was his love for a good pipe which led the Belgian to inaugurate smoking competitions, when enthusiastic devotees of "My Lady Nicotine" competed for various prizes. Nearly every village, no matter how small, could boast its "Rookersmaatschappij," which almost unpronounceable word is equivalent for what we term "smokers' Club." At these competitions it was the custom to compete for money prizes, the winners being decorated with some floral adornment pinned on their breasts, as visible proof of the honor achieved.

The premier smoking club of Belgium was the Bruges Smoking Club, which held its meetings at a café in the Grande Place. The room in which the members met was decorated with a gorgeous banner, while on the walls was to be seen an assortment of curious pipes, representing all corners of the globe. In fact, the place was a veritable museum of pipes.

Members were only permitted to enter the Bruges Smoking Club after reaching the age of eighteen. Cigars and cigarettes were tabooed, the pipe being looked upon as the only justifiable means of satisfying that craving which makes smokers slaves to the weed.

The chief object of the club was not to break records in regard to the amount of tobacco consumed, but to teach its members the use of tobacco by organizing competitions and offering prizes to those who could make a pipeful of tobacco last the longest. Exactly what the record time is it is difficult to say, but it appears that one of the best performances was that of a competitor who kept his pipe alight for one hour and twenty-one minutes thirty-three seconds.

Beware the Turk

The Turkish Sultan's remark that his country's relations with the powers which have not participated in the general war, and especially with Bulgaria, are sincerely friendly, will probably cause all of them to make another look to make sure that their swords are sharp and their powder dry.—Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

[illegible]

The five-year-old daughter of a well known humorous writer appeared one morning at the breakfast table with suggestions of a cold beginning to manifest itself.

Boasting.

"My boy, whatever you do, never brag."

"No, father."

"At least, not until after you have done it."

"And then?"

"Then if you were clever enough to have done it well you will be clever enough to know that it's not worth bragging about."—Detroit Free Press.

Great Women Composers.

Walter Damrosch asks but finds it difficult to answer the question, "Why are there no great women composers?" His conclusion is: "Great music springs from the emotions, and is crystallized into form through a controlling intellect. When women achieve this combination they will be able to join the noble company of Bach, Beethoven and Wagner."—New York Telegram.

The Law of Compensation.

"I had no mother's voice to lull me to sleep when I was a boy," sobbed the first man.

"And I had no father's voice to call me in the morning," chuckled the second.

Thus we see nature's wonderful law of compensation applied to the human equation.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Date of Buddha.

On the authority of the available inscriptions and the tradition as recorded in the Ceylonese chronicles the date of the nirvana of Buddha is found by the latest writer on the subject to be 487 B. C., and as tradition assigns eighty years as the period of his life he must be considered to have been born in the year 567 B. C.

Knew Arithmetic Anyhow.

A teacher of music desired to impress the pupils with the meaning of the signs "f" and "ff" in a song they were about to sing. After explaining that "f" meant forte he said, "Now, children, if 'f' means forte, what does 'ff' mean?"

Silence reigned for a moment, and then he was astonished to hear a bright little fellow shout, "Eighty!"

Heartless Hoax.

"My wife gave a reception yesterday."

"Did you attend?"

"Yes. I played a practical joke on her. I got in line where she was receiving, and before she knew it she was smiling and saying she was glad to see me—for the first time in three years."—Washington Star.

Too Well Done.

"Yes, dear," continued the newly made husband as he gazed despondingly at the steak that was broiled almost to a crisp, "you are very charming, and you do several things uncommonly well, but you don't know how to cook a steak."

"And yet, my love," answered the culprit with a becoming penitent air, "you said yourself that it was very well done."

It is scarcely necessary to add that the cyclone was averted.

Sensitive Plants.

There are plants so sensitive that if when standing by them you should suddenly put up your umbrella or sunshade it would be quite sufficient to cause them instantly to close together their leaflets and turn down their leaf stalks, just as if they were startled and alarmed by the movement. Indeed, on a sunny day when the temperature is sufficiently high you need not make even so decided a movement; merely your shadow coming in contact with their leaves will often cause them to fall slightly.—Strand Magazine.

REPAIRING WARSHIPS

Huge Dreadnoughts Can be Taken Clear Out of Water

Among the greatest engineering marvels of to-day are the gigantic floating docks owned by the British Admiralty and utilized for the repair of naval vessels. The biggest type of these docks has a minimum lifting capacity of 32,000 tons, and is capable of lifting a battleship like H.M.S. Lion, which displaces over 30,000 tons, high and dry out of the water to a height of 36 feet in three hours and ten minutes, thus permitting every part of the vessel's hull to be accessible.

Some idea of the labor involved in the construction of one of these huge docks may be gathered from the fact that whereas a first class warship takes about two and a half years to build, it takes two or three times as long to construct a floating dock of a size sufficient to receive the vessel.

A floating dock may be likened to a box with neither ends nor lid. It is built of steel throughout, the largest type having a length of 680 feet and a width of 144 feet, while the walls are 60 feet in height.

The dock is first submerged by admitting water into the ballast tanks or pontoons forming the base of the structure. When it has been sunk to a sufficient depth to receive the vessel the latter is warped into its correct position on the keel blocks of the dock, and is then made fast. Powerful pumps are set to work to eject water from the pontoons, causing the structure to rise gradually with its burden. To lift a battleship the size of the Lion 46,000 tons of water has to be pumped out of the pontoons. So perfectly, however, are these huge floating docks constructed that one man can control every movement from what is known as the valve house, which is at the end of the side walls.

TRAINING A GIRL AT THE CLUMSY AGE

Mothers Should Teach Their Daughters to Confide In Them and so Imbibe Sane Notions

There is a period in many mothers' lives where they tend to get slack. It is just about the time when their daughters reach the ages of twelve or thirteen.

The girls are no longer very interesting. They are at an awkward, loose age, when there's not much pleasure in dressing them; and they've got right away from the "snuggly" time of their lives. They're coldly aloof, living in worlds of their own, with all their interests in the school room. To speak truly, mother is rather afraid of them, and inclined to leave them alone to get on as best they can.

And yet never was she more needed, if she but knew it. Girls of twelve and thirteen and over stand at the threshold of life. They are eager to go on, yet half afraid. They hear all sorts things at school—stories of the great world, some of them true, some of them distorted. Don't you often see groups of girls whispering together? It isn't that they are pernicious; it's simply that they want to know.

Most of them would like to talk to mother about it all. But she feels so far away, it seems mother is the last person one could discuss everything with. A girl feels her mother is not so interested as she used to be about all that happens to her.

And she is right. Mother isn't so interested. She has a hazy notion—or probably no notion at all!—that the girls will worry through all right like all other girls, and so she can take a rest. And if you told her that they would like to discuss life with her, she would get quite alarmed. Why? Because she is getting slack, a little lazy. She doesn't want to be bothered.

Of course, it would take some little time to answer questions, and to put things as straightforwardly as possible. It would take thought, also, and thought is terribly fatiguing.

But the best kind of mother, the real, earnest mother, will pull herself up and face facts. She will have her reward in knowing that her girls are free of silly, senseless notions, seeing life with their mother's sane view, and in the love and trust that will be between her daughters and herself.

Red Cape Over Party Dress

A red riding hood cape is a charming conceit to be worn by the young girl over her dancing frock.

It is made of tango red crepe de chene and if Little Miss is dark with sparkling eyes she certainly will be fair to look upon as she peeps out of the capacious red hood.

Why Your Home Needs Zam-Buk.

Hardly a day goes by but what some member of your family sustains some slight injury. You may think the injury too trivial for attention, but remember whenever the skin is broken there is danger of blood poison!

Zam-Buk, the great herbal healer, does away with all risk. A stronger antiseptic than carbolic, yet causing no pain when applied, no germs can live where Zam-Buk is used. More than this, Zam-Buk quickly relieves the pain of sores and wounds, and the rich herbal essences it contains so stimulate the tissues that new healthy skin is formed and the wound or sore healed in a short time. This is why your home needs Zam-Buk.

It only takes a moment to apply Zam-Buk, and think of the hours, and perhaps years, of suffering it may save! Get the habit—tell your children where the box is, they'll do the rest; because Zam-Buk stops the pain.

Zam-Buk is unlike ordinary ointments in that it is purely herbal. It does not contain harsh minerals, poisonous coloring matter, or coarse animal fats. Zam-Buk is Healing, Soothing, and Antiseptic,—a cure for cuts, burns, bruises, piles, eczema, ulcers, pimples, cold sores, and all skin diseases and injuries. Refuse substitutes,—see name "Zam-Buk" on box when buying. 50c. box, all druggists and stores, or postpaid from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

CENSORING LETTERS

Even Sign Language of Love Sometimes is Objectionable

For rigid, and, in some cases, stupid censorship, the present great European war is certainly peculiar.

It is not, however, without its humorous aspect, as one censored letter received from the front testifies. From this everything but the "Yours truly, John Smith," had been rigorously deleted.

In another case nothing but the envelope was received; but, written on the inside it was discovered in a strange handwriting, the curt but significant message. "Dear Madam, your husband is far too communicative."

During the Boer war a certain censor exercised his ingenuity on love letters that passed through his hands. When the number of crosses signifying kisses already shown did not in his judgment correspond with the warmth of affection otherwise expressed, he added more! But he did not use his blue pencil to do this.

Another censor was a deadly enemy of the mystic crosses. He would not tolerate them in large or small numbers, and any letter containing them had the portion on which they were inscribed cut out. Most valuable information, he was wont to remark, might be conveyed in those innocent marks of affection.

Peter Thompson went to visit his son in Montreal. It was his first visit to the city and the young man showed him all the sights, concluding with an ascent of Mount Royal. In a burst of enthusiasm young Thompson said: "See, father, isn't it wonderful down there!"

"Well," said his father, "if it's so wonderful down there, what did you drag me up here for?"—Everybody's Magazine.

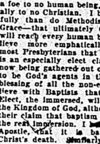
CATHOLIC CHURCH ST. PETER'S KEYS

Pastor Russell Claims to be a True Catholic.

The Catholic Church—Its Divine Foundation—Apostolic Authority—St. Peter's Keys—How He Used Them—How Keys of Kingdom—What Power and Authority Given Apostles—May Sins Be Absolved; If So, by Whom?—Pastor Says He Is Nobody's Foe.



PASTOR RUSSELL

Atlanta, Ga., March 21.—Of Pastor Russell's two discourses here to-day we report the one on Matthew 16:18, 19, "Upon this rock will I build My Church; and the gates of Hell (Hades, the grave) shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven." The Pastor said in part:

For some unaccountable reason numerous Catholics have gotten the thought that I am their foe, just as Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, Baptists, etc., have gotten the impression that I am their foe. I am a foe to no human being, and especially to no Christian. I believe more fully than do Methodists in Free Grace—that ultimately God's grace will reach every human being. I believe more emphatically than do most Presbyterians that the Church is an especially elect class, and is now being gathered out of the world to be God's agents in the ultimate blessing of all the non-elect. I believe with Baptists that only the Elect, the immersed, will constitute the Kingdom of God, although I deny their claim that baptism in water is the real immersion. I hold, with the Apostle, that it is baptism into Christ's death. Similarly I hold to the great Catholic doctrine that there is only one true Church, founded by the Lord Jesus Christ through His Apostles, nearly nineteen centuries ago.

I am aware that several churches claim to be Catholic—the Anglican Catholic, the Syrian Catholic, the Greek Catholic, and the Roman Catholic. Each claims to be the true Church and reprobates the others as heretical. But I take the still broader, catholic ground. I hold that the word catholic means general; and that any limitation, such as Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic, etc., to that extent denies their catholicity. Perhaps, therefore, I am really saying that I am more catholic than any of these brethren.

I must prove my point or be misunderstood. I hold, and few, if any, will dispute it, that the one catholic or universal or general Church of Christ is the one mentioned in the Bible—"the Church of the Firstborns, written in Heaven." If this be admitted, my next proposition is that the Lord in Heaven records as members of His true Church all the saintly—whether Roman Catholics, Anglican Catholics, Greek Catholics, Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc.—and none others.

Have we not here the one Church, the Catholic Church, the universal, the only Church which the Bible recognizes? In the past we have been too narrow and have supposed that God was as narrow as ourselves. It was on this account that in the past Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Anglicans, Baptists and Methodists persecuted and were persecuted, because each thought itself the true Church. Are we not all getting broader conceptions of our God and of His Church? Do we not see that a part of our mistake was in calling the outward organization the Church of Christ, instead of remembering that the Lord alone writes the names of the Church, that He alone reads the hearts, that He alone is the Judge, and that He alone has the right to blot out the names of those who become reprobates?

St. Paul wrote against the spirit of sectarianism, already manifest in his day—some saying, "I am of Paul"; others, "I am of Peter"; etc. The Apostle asks, "Is Christ divided?" (1 Corinthians 1:10-13.) So to-day, if with us, he would ask, Why Romanists, Anglicans, Baptists, Methodists, etc.? Is not the name of Christ enough? He explains that these different names of old signified a sectarian spirit, the spirit of division, that failed to recognize the true Head of the Church, His true representatives and His true members. The trouble is the same to-day. The entire foundation of divided Christianity would disappear and all the true Church of Christ—all real saints—would be speedily manifest, if true catholicity were acknowledged.

The one great obstacle to unity is the erroneous doctrine respecting the eternal torture of all not members of the Church. We must open our eyes wider and see that many of our theories were not taught by Jesus and the Apostles. We must see that the Church is a comparatively small company of saintly footstep followers of Jesus, irrespective of sectarian lines; that the Bible teaches not that these are to look over the battlements of Heaven to all eternity and see all others in torment, but that they are to demonstrate their loyalty unto death and in due time be associated with Messiah in His great Millennial Kingdom, which will bring knowledge and opportunity to all the families of the earth—the living and the dead.

St. Paul declared that the saints of God, the true catholic Church, "are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the Chief Corner Stone." (Ephesians 2:20.) The Twelve Apostles are here referred to in their double office—Apostles especially commissioned by the Lord as His representatives, and Prophets, mouthpieces, for the proclamation of the Message to the Church. Jesus, referring to these same foundation stones, pictures the Church of Glory as the New Jerusalem, and its twelve foundations as twelve precious stones, in which are the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb—no more, no less—St. Paul being God's choice to take the place of Judas, the betrayer.

To think of St. Peter as the only foundation for the Church would be to deny Christ's teaching and St. Peter's own statement—that the entire Church is symbolically represented as living stones built together by the Lord through the Holy Spirit. (1 Peter 2:4-6.) It was a costly mistake when our forefathers, overlooking this well-established point of Scripture, thought of the bishops of the Church as Apostolic Bishops, and took their decisions in councils assembled as the voice of God to and through the Church. The voice of God to and through the Church came only through "the twelve Apostles of the Lamb." All others so claiming are denounced by Jesus Himself as pseudo-Apostles—false Apostles.—Revelation 2:2.

God's true saints of all denominations should ignore all human creeds and return to the Bible and its declaration of "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." (Ephesians 4:5, 6.) Are we more loyal to human organizations than to God, His Truth, His Church—all saints and one people, imbued with one spirit, the world around—the catholic Church?

As St. Peter was only one of the twelve foundation stones of the Church, so, likewise, he was only one of The Twelve to whom the Lord declared, "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in Heaven" (Matthew 18:18—the same statement exactly that on another occasion He made to St. Peter only. But He gave the keys to St. Peter alone.

Would it seem reasonable that Jesus should tell the twelve Apostles that God would do anything that they bade Him do—taking to Heaven whom they pleased and excluding whom they chose? Would it be wise or safe to entrust to poor humanity such dictatorial powers respecting the eternal interest of even one individual? Assuredly not! When we remember that these Apostles declared that they were men of like passions with others, that St. Peter himself dissembled on one occasion and on another denied his Master, we are the more convinced that Jesus did not mean that God would abdicate His authority and wisdom in favor of any twelve men.

What, then, does the passage mean? We answer, it implies that the Lord would so overrule the utterances and writings of His twelve Apostles as to make them safe guides for His Church. To these Apostles would be given through the Holy Spirit at Pentecost wisdom enabling them to understand which things of the Jewish Law were binding upon the Church and which not binding. Their decision would be absolutely right, and the entire Church might have confidence that what the Apostles bound or loosed on earth was equally bound or loosed in Heaven. As an illustration of this binding and loosing, see Acts 15:28, 29.

To get back into proper relationship with each other and rid of all sectarian systems, God's people must recognize that only the words of the New Testament Apostles and Prophets are authoritative; properly representing the Divine mind. Other things men have bound and loosed on earth, without recognition in Heaven. The things necessary to the Church are found only in the Bible, as St. Paul declares.—2 Timothy 3:16, 17.

"Other Foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, Jesus Christ." (1 Corinthians 3:11.) In the Divine arrangement Jesus Christ is the Foundation, the Rock, upon which is built the entire superstructure of His Church—the one Catholic, world-wide Church. On this Rock, Christ Jesus, as St. Peter declares, all the Church is being built as a Temple of God. (1 Peter 2:4-10.) The New Jerusalem, the Church in glory, had twelve foundation stones, built upon the one Foundation Rock, the Lord Jesus Christ. It would manifestly be erroneous, therefore, to suppose that our Lord abdicated His own place in the Church in favor of St. Peter, much as He loved him.

What, then, did Jesus mean when He called St. Peter a stone, spoke of building His Church upon "this rock," and declared that the gates of Hell (Hades, the grave) would not prevail against it? We reply, Jesus went down into the prison-house of death, Sheol, Hades, the tomb; but on the third day the gates of Sheol, Hades, were opened, and He came forth. These gates will not prevail against the Church, as they did not prevail against her Lord. This is an assurance of the resurrection of the dead.

To understand St. Peter's connection with the Rock Foundation of the Church, we should read the preceding context. The disciples had told Jesus the common talk respecting Himself. He then asked them, "Who say ye that I am?" St. Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." This was the first public declaration of Jesus' Messiahship. Even the disciples had only now come to recognize their Teacher as the long-promised Messiah. Jesus answered, "Blessed art thou, Simon, son of Jonas; for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but My Father in Heaven. Thou art Peter (a stone, ready for the spiritual Temple, the first one to publicly acknowledged Jesus), and upon this rock (the Truth just declared, that I am Messiah) I will build My Church."

In the Greek the word Peter signifies a stone of moderate size, while the word here rendered rock signifies a mass of stone—a foundation. Our Lord Jesus Christ evidently meant that St. Peter's statement was a recognition of Himself as the great Foundation of the Divine Plan—Messiah. Upon that foundation truth, that Jesus is Christ, the Church would be built; and St. Peter was the first living stone to build himself upon that foundation by believing and confessing Christ. St. Peter himself, gives us the same thought—that he and all others of the Church are living stones, being builded together as a holy Temple of God. This entire Gospel Age has been devoted to the building of these stones upon that great Foundation Rock, Christ Jesus. As soon as the great Temple of God shall be completed, this Gospel Age will end and the New Dispensation be inaugurated.

To St. Peter our Lord said, "I will give thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven." What did He mean? We shall not suppose that any who hear my voice or are sufficiently intelligent to read this discourse in the newspapers are stupid enough to think Jesus meant that Heaven is locked up, and that nobody could get in except as St. Peter would open the door or gate. True, some have voiced such fantastic notions. But we refuse to believe that intelligent people could be in earnest in any such view.

What the Lord meant is very simple, very beautiful; and we see exactly how it was fulfilled. He indicated that St. Peter, the first to confess Him, was to have a special honor in connection with the inauguration of the Church on earth. By the expression, "Kingdom of Heaven," is meant the Church, a class being called out of the world to become with Christ the ruling power of the world during the Millennium, through the great resurrection "change." See 1 Corinthians 15:42, 54.

Jesus meant that St. Peter would be honored in being permitted to do an opening work in connection with the Church. The Bible shows us two different opening works and two different keys. The key is a symbol of power or authority or an initiative. St. Peter used his first key of privilege on the day of Pentecost. When the Holy Spirit came upon the early waiting Church, it was St. Peter that used this key. Standing up with the eleven, he lifted up his voice, explained the situation and opened the door to the Church of Christ for the Jews, admonishing them of their opportunity to enter. He told of the merit of Christ's death and how He had risen and had ascended on High, and how forgiveness of sins was, therefore, preached in His name.—Acts 2:14-36.

The second key to the Kingdom of Heaven—the Church, the embryo Kingdom preparing for glory—St. Peter used three and a half years later. Then the seventieth week of Divine favor prophetically appointed to the Jews expired, and the time came that "the Gentiles might be fellow-heirs with the Jews of the same Promise." The opening work was with the household of Cornelius, to whom St. Peter preached Christ. The Lord blessed the preaching and granted the Holy Spirit to Cornelius and his family. Thus the Gentile door into the Kingdom was thrown wide open.—Acts 10.

"That repentance and remission of sins might be preached in His name to all people" (Luke 24:47). God never gave power to bishops, priests or ministers of any denomination to forgive sins. "Who can forgive sins but God alone?" Nor did Jesus give authority to His Apostles to forgive sins. They might preach repentance and forgiveness, but only in His name. Any child of God is Scripturally authorized to declare that Christ died for human sin, and has thus made arrangement by which all repentant sinners may be forgiven. It is an honor to be the bearer of such a Message from God to men; and every child of God is fully commissioned to tell the Divine Message to all who will hear.

In proportion as God's people throw away their sectarian spectacles they can read God's Message in the words of Jesus and the Apostles. Let us hold fast the precious Word which Jesus exhorted us to search and which is sufficient that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished. Let us remember that there is only one true Church, each member of which is a saint, related to God and the Lord Jesus Christ through faith, repentance and remission of sin and the begetting of the Holy Spirit; that it is the only Church that is catholic, universal; and that a member of the Body of Christ is a member of that Body anywhere. "Now are ye the Body of Christ, and members in particular."—1 Corinthians 12:27.

OLD PLUM PUDDING BEST

A Recipe That Has Given Satisfaction For Many Years

As every good housekeeper knows, plum pudding must have time to "ripen" before it is served at the holiday dinner, or at the wedding feast, or whatever the "grand occasion" may be that calls for this festive dish.

An English recipe that has stood the test of years is as follows:

Wash one pound each, of seeded raisins and currants. Drain and dry perfectly dry, chop 1 pound of suet and rub with 4 tablespoons of flour.

Blanch and chop one-half pound almonds, one-quarter pound citron (shaved in fine pieces), 3 teaspoons (each) of candied lemon and orange peel (cut fine). Mix all these with the suet and flour. Add the raisins and currants and 1 tablespoon of salt. Stir into this mixture 1 wine glass of cider, add 1 pound of dry fine breadcrumbs, mix and set away, covered with tight cover, for 36 hours.

When ready to boil the pudding add 8 eggs (well beaten), one-half cup of lemon juice and one-half pound of flour. Knead all together and fill well-buttered cans two-thirds full. Cover and boil or steam for 8 hours.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM

Hundreds of People Have Found "Fruit-a-tives" Their Only Help

READ THIS LETTER

Superintendent of Sunday School in Toronto Tells How He Cured Himself of Chronic Rheumatism After Suffering for Years.

55 DOVERCOURT ROAD, Oct., 1st. 1913.

"For a long time, I have thought of writing you regarding what I term a most remarkable cure effected by your remedy "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I have spent a lot of money without any good results. I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" for 18 months now, and am pleased to tell you that I am cured. All the enlargement has not left my hands and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 35 pounds in 18 months".

R. A. WAUGH

Rheumatism is no longer the dreaded disease it once was. Rheumatism is no longer one of the "incurable diseases". "Fruit-a-tives" has proved its marvellous powers over Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago—in fact, over all such diseases which arise from some derangement of stomach, bowels, kidneys or skin.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

If you would add years and happiness to the life of your wife and family surround the vegetable and flower plantation this spring with a high and close woven wire fence.

In October last potatoes by the car load imported from the State of Dakota were sold in Saskatchewan where there was an alarming shortage for $1.10 per bushel. Perhaps if this country were to build a few more transcontinental railways and present them to the Big Interests, some of the thousands of bushels of potatoes going to waste in Eastern Canada might be carried to the West where the people are hungry for them.

War Will Keep Money at Home

Railwaymen Estimate $500,000,000 Will be Kept from Europe

MONTREAL, March 26.—"This European war will mean a vast amount of business for Canada and the whole North American continent during the coming summer", said Mr. Neil Mooney, general agent of the New York Central lines, on his return yesterday from New York, where he had been attending a meeting of passenger men to lay out plans for the coming season.

"According to the information of the men who had been sent out to look into the situation", said Mr. Mooney, "about $500,000,000 will be spent on this continent this year which is usually spent in Europe. This is based on the fact that in an ordinary year about 500,000 people go from the United States and Canada on holiday trips to Europe. Figuring on a conservative basis, these people spend about $1,000 apiece, which would mean $500,000,000.

"All this enormous business is now stopped, owing to the war", said Mr. Mooney, "and the result will be that a large proportion of this money will be spent at home. Canada ought to get much of this business, since Americans who otherwise would have gone to Europe will naturally come to Canada this year and find out something of their neighboring country. This should mean a great increase in business for the lake resorts of Northern Quebec and Ontario, the Algonquin Park and Muskoka districts, and if the railways look out for the traffic they will get it."

Mr. Mooney stated that the figures presented at the New York meeting had been carefully prepared by expert passenger men from all over the country, and showed that there was a great opportunity during the coming summer to get people into the habit of travelling on this continent instead of going to Europe.

Ship Dock Sentry Shoots An Intruder

Fired on Advancing Man After a Third Challenge Had Been Ignored

MONTREAL, March 26.—Paying no attention to the challenge of a sentry stationed at the ship dock of the Canadian Vickers Company, in Maisonneuve, Rosel Lapointe, aged 24 years, of 2508 Chateaubriand avenue, was fired upon by the sentry and brought down with a bullet in the left knee.

The shooting occurred shortly before midnight, when Lapointe attempted to approach the dock at some distance from the sentry. The sentry challenged him, but the intruder kept walking toward the dock. Again the sentry challenged, with the same result, and when a third challenge on the part of the sentry met with no answer, the soldier fired.

The man fell to the ground with a yell, and when the guard turned out he was found to have been wounded in the leg. Lapointe would give no explanation as to what business brought him to the dack. An ambulance was summoned from the General Hospital and the wounded man was removed to that institution.

While apparently not being under the influence of liquor, Lapointe's condition indicated that his mind was in an abnormal condition presumably from the influence of some narcotic drug.

The doctors found the wound to be a serious one, the bone having been broken by the sentry's bullet, but the exact extent of the injury could not be ascertained this morning.

HOMESEEKERS AND SETTLERS EXCURSIONS TO WESTERN CANADA

The Grand Trunk Railway System issue round trip Homeseekers' tickets at very low fares from stations in Canada to points in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, and are in effect each TUESDAY until October 26th, 1915 inclusive, via Chicago, St. Paul or Duluth and will also be on sale on certain dates via Sarnia and Northern Navigation Company. Homeseekers tickets are valid returning two months from date of issue.

SETTLERS one-way second-class tickets are on sale each TUESDAY during March and April from stations in Ontario, Kingston, Renfrew and west to points in Alberta and Saskatchewan at low fares.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is the shortest and quickest route between Winnipeg, Saskatchewan and Edmonton, with smooth roadbed, through the newest, most picturesque and most rapidly developing section of Western Canada. Through tickets sold and reservations made by all Grand Trunk ticket agents.

Before deciding on your trip ask G. T. R. Agents for further particulars, or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto.

SENATE INCREASE PLANS MAY MEAN A LONGER SESSION

OTTAWA, March 26.—The increase in Senatorial representation provided for in a resolution of which Sir Robert Borden has given notice is of a character calculated to protract the session. It now looks as though prorogation will not occur by Easter.

The proposed measure is along the lines of what was introduced last year in connection with the Redistribution Bill. At that time it ran foul of the Liberal Senate, which tacked on an amendment providing that the measure should not come into force until after the next general election. This not being satisfactory to the Government, the resolution was dropped. At the time there was considerable embittered feeling, and charges of breach of faith were made.

Significant Just Now

The re-introduction of the resolution at this stage is rather significant, as it was not in the list of subjects mentioned a few days ago by Sir Robert Borden as likely to be brought down. If the Senate again tampers with it, and repeats its action of last year, an interesting situation may develop. While there is no official authority for the surmise, it is just possible that, in the event of an election, the right of the Upper House to block the will of the House of Commons might be an issue. In the Senate today very little could be gleamed by way of forecast of probable action.

The standing of the parties in the Senate now is forty-nine Liberals to twenty-nine Conservatives. There are nine vacanies which, when filled, will make the standing forty-nine to thirty-eight, or a Liberal majority of eleven. The creation of nine new Senatorships in the West will reduce this lead to two, nominally, but in fact will give the Government a majority, inasmuch as several of the Liberal Senators now rarely attend. If the authority be secured to create eight extra Senators, the Conservatives would have a clear lead of six.

The power now sought to be extended beyond what is provided by clause 26 of the British North America Act, has never been exercised nor does the Act make it clear why it is provided. The assumption, however, is that that which enables the Home Government to increase the House of Lords. If eight such appointments were made, and there subsequently occurred deaths, the vacancies would not be filled until they exceeded the number of eight. In this way the constitutional limit of the Senators would be maintained.

Would Not be Relished

The prospective wiping out of the Liberal lead naturally would not be relished by the Opposition, and its action on the proposed measure will be awaited with no small interest. The subject has the appearance of being contentious, and, taken in conjunction with the pending committee inquiries, makes improbable prorogation by Easter.

Everything considered, things seem again to be shaping for a general election this year, and the program of Government legislation is rather con ductive to that belief, even though this deduction does not necessarily follow from its action.

It is anticipated that the Senate resolution will cause much discussion Whether it will pass as it stands or only, as last year, with a clause deferring its operation till after the general election, cannot be learned.

In the Senate lobbies today it was intimated that a Liberal caucus will be held to determine what to do about it. Obviously, the loss of party control is not viewed with much enthusiasm.

Canadian Girls Among Refugees

Party Crossing to England in the Search of Friends and Homes

LONDON, March 26.—The Daily News correspondent at Rotterdam says that among the English women and girls whom the Germans have allowed to leave Brussels are three Canadian girls whose friends cannot be traced. They are destitute and are crossing to England to find a home, adds the correspondent, who, however, omits any clue as to their identification. A message to The Express says two nuns who are from the Ursuline Convent at Mellesbrook, east of Brussels are bringing three motherless Canadian children to London, the mother superior being unable to keep them any longer. The father is said to be in Canada.

Like the well-known election and horse-race, one never can tell what Italy will do.

CLEARS THE HEAD, OPENS THE NOSTRILS STOPS SNEEZING, CURES CATARRH

You get Instant Relief by Inhaling the Soothing vapor "Catarrhozone"

Catarrh is bound to come with this weather. Slight colds become more offensive and sickening every day. The inflammation extends further into the head. Soon the ears begin to buzz and ring. The head aches, the eyes pain dreadfully, the nose gets plugged up and this forces the patient to breathe through the mouth. Vile filthy secretions are forced back into the throat, requiring a great deal of coughing to keep the air passages free. Finally, this foul matter finds its way into the stomach, causing Dyspepsia and general ill-health. By this time the patient has SYSTEMATIC CATARRH, which saps strength, depletes the vital energies till consumption is the undoing to cure this condition with tablets, snuff or spray. Such treatments are wholly inadequate. You must employ Catarrhozone the only remedy that possesses power to kill the germs of Catarrh. The healing vapor of Catarrhozone is carried by the air you breathe to the most minute cells of the nose, throat, bronchial tubes and lungs. Its antiseptic medication goes everywhere that air can go. No case is too chronic, no person too old—everybody that has catarrh of any kind can be cured by this grand treatment which is endorsed by thousands of physicians throughout America, who say: "The only way to permanently get rid of Catarrh is to use Catarrhozone."

SIR RICHARD'S VISIT STIRS OTTAWA FOLK

His Conferences With Premier Borden and Other Influential Men Create Gossip

OTTAWA, March 26.—The arrival of Sir Richard McBride last night has caused a flutter in the political dovecotes of the capital. The British Columbia Prime Minister had interviews last night with Sir Robert Borden, Hon. Robert Rogers and other Cabinet Ministers, while he was in conference with several British Columbia members.

Sir Richard stated to the press that he was in Ottawa on his annual visit to the capital on various Provincial matters, and that his visit had no political significance. It is presumed that he is in the east in connection with the proposed further aid to the Pacific and Great Eastern Line, which is being built from Vancouver northeast through the heart of the Province to Fort George, and thence into the Peace River country. The fact that Mr. John Stewart, of the big contracting firm which has been building the line, is also in Ottawa, lends credence to the belief that this is one of the missions of Sir Richard in the east. Sir Richard recently asked for an investigation into the purchase of two submarines for Pacific coast, and this may be held before the Pacific Accounts Committee before he leaves.

Sir Richard left this morning for Montreal, but is expected back in Ottawa in the course of a few days.

STAYED WITH MEN AND WAS KILLED

Could Have Been Alive Now Had He Wished to Shirk His Duty

TORONTO, March 26.—A very interesting incident in connection with the death of the late Lieut. William N. Gallaugher, of Chatham, has come to light, which illustrates in a very striking manner the noble nature of the man and his unselfish devotion to duty. It is told by Capt. Coltart, who was Lieut. Gallaugher's superior office in the 24th Regiment.

When the First Canadian Contingent was stationed at Salisbury Plain, Lieut. Gallaugher's ability was soon recognized by his superior officers. His intelligence and aptness for the military life brought him almost instant promotion, and he was selected as Paymaster for the Divisional Headquarters. Indeed, he acted for a short time in this capacity. When it came time for the contingent to go to the front, Lieut. Gallaugher conferred with Capt. Geo. Smith and Lieut. Douglas, to decide whether he would remain in his advanced position or return to the boys of his company.

The result was that the brave Lieutenant gave up his position to which he had been promoted and chose to return to the boys of his company.

"If he had remained as Paymaster, he would have served miles away from the firing line, and he would have been alive to-day. He knew this when he relinquished the position, but he felt that it was his duty to remain with the boys in the trenches, and he did his duty as he saw it."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

FIGURES A JITNEY COSTS $9.23 A DAY

SAN FRANCISCO, March 26.—It costs $9.23 a day on an average to run a jitney bus, according to figures of Pierrepont V. Marshall, principal of the Y. M. C. A. automobile school here. He estimated that the cost of operating for 300 days a year, 12½ hours a day, a jitney bus costing not more than $600 when it was new, will be as follows:

	Per Year
6 per cent. interest on ½ of $600 investment	$ 18
Insurance	193
Depreciation	300
Storage	120
Driver's wages ($100 per month)	1 200
Licenses	28
Jitney Association dues	12
Total yearly fixed charges	$1 870
Average for 300 days per year	$6 23
Oil, gasoline, grease, etc.	1 50
Tires (180 miles at ½c.)	75
Mechanical upkeep, repairs, etc.	75
Total daily cost	$9 23

"If you start with a new bus car," says Marshall, "one which costs approximately $600, you must take in $9.23 a day or subtract the difference from your wages, $10 a month. This is little enough for driving a jitney 150 miles a day. If your car is second hand, or cost more than $600 when new, or is heavier than a $600 car you must, of course, estimate higher daily cost figures."

WHAT MOTHERS SAY OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Once a mother has used Baby's Own Tablets for her little ones she will use no other medicine. She quickly realizes the Tablets are an absolutely safe remedy and one that will give sure results. Concerning them Mrs. R. L. Wright, Pennabit, Sask., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my three babies and think so much of them that I always keep them in the house." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BERLIN FORBIDS USE OF YEAST TO BAKERS

BERLIN, March 26.—Additional restrictions have been placed by the authorities upon bakers and housewives in Berlin who now have been forbidden to bake cakes which require the use of yeast or similar preparations. The baking in homes of any cakes whatever between March 25 and April 12 also has been forbidden. The latter order is designed to check the consumption of flour for Easter cakes.

The former regulation limiting to ten per cent. of the total weight the amount of flour which may be used in cakes not under the official ban remains in force.

New Orchid Bring's $1,000

Moore's "Queen of the Belgians" Sold at Auction to New York Man

NEW YORK, March 26.—A New York man, whose name was not revealed, paid $1,000 by certified check for a new orchid exhibited by Clement Moore at the International Flower Show, which closed at the Grand Central Palace on Tuesday. The flower was known as "the $500 orchid," that being the lowest estimate of its value, and it was one of the features of the show. It was sold at auction yesterday at the shop of G. E. M. Stump, florist, 761 Fifth Avenue.

The orchid is a new hybrid of the variety of Cattleya Schroederae. It was grown by Mr. Moore, and is the only one of its kind. It has been kept under glass, securely locked, after the English fashion, in order that no one could get its pollen. The proceeds of its sale go to the Belgian Relief Fund of the Red Cross. The orchid was named for the Queen of the Belgians.

KING WATCHES MINE SWEEPERS WORK

His Majesty Visits Naval Station at Harwich and Inspects New Submarine

HARWICH, England, March 26.—King George yesterday paid an informal visit to the Harwich naval station. Wearing the undress uniform of an Admiral of the Fleet, the King arrived on a special train in a down-pour of rain. On alighting the King shook hands with a few naval and military officers on the platform of the station. He then noticed that the white-duck clad sailors in the guard of honor drawn up along the platform were without overcoats, and ordered them to withdraw immediately to shelter.

Later King George crossed to Felixstowe, where he saw the minesweepers and witnessed a seaplane flight.

NEW SPRING HATS IN SOME OF THE NEW STRAWS.

The new barnyard straws are especially striking and the basket weaves are so much favored that even worsteds are thus worked. Trimmings are more remarkable for chic than quantity. The narrow, trim, Scotch bonnets are a fad at the expense of the popularity of the broader brimmed types, which are called sailors, from a Derby shape to a picture hat. Milliners are using a new ocean blue and an army gray with success. Tiny posies are among the liked adornings for the various hats. These wee flowers are arranged in clusters or in quaint little wreaths,

COMPULSORY EDUCATION

A Campbellford man was last week charged with not sending his children to school. The magistrate imposed a fine with the costs amounted to $8.35. This should prove a warning to others who are not observing the law in regard to compulsory education.—Herald.

OUT ON PARADE

A magnificent body of several hundred men marched from the mobilization quarters up Front street to Bridge street, and thence over West Bridge up Murney Hill toward the Fair Grounds. Their tread was firm and regular, and a huskier body of troops would be hard to find.

A VICIOUS DOG

Yesterday afternoon the police were called upon to investigate a case of a collie dog attacking a young lady and tearing her dress. The affair took place in front of the residence of the owner of the canine. As a result of the investigation the owner promised to get rid of the dog, which on previous occasions had exhibited a tendency to be somewhat vicious.

STIRLING HELPS SOLDIERS

The patriotic ladies of Stirling recently despatched a consignment of socks, wristlets, scarfs, mittens, Balaclava caps, day shirts, hospital shirts, sheets, pillow cases and pillows, in adition to $300 in cash, in aid of the wounded soldiers. The society, which was one of the first to contribute clothing and foodstuffs to the Belgians, have also responded to Lady Jellicoe's call to assist the sailors.

AN EXCELLENT AUCTIONEER

Mr. Arthur Jones, the popular manager of the Molson's Bank in this city, has by the unanimous opinion of many missed his calling. He should have been an auctioneer and would no doubt have proved a great success. A lad named Percy Gill, desired to contribute something towards the patriotic fund, but he could not do so by ready cash. He, however, was the possessor of some pigeons, which he prized highly, and he gave four pairs. These were last night auctioned off at the committee room on Bridge street, and Mr. Jones was selected as auctioneer. His persuasive manner and persistent appeal for liberal bids upon the pigeons were such that the sum of $30.50 was secured for the birds and the contributors were allowed to take them home with them. dding was brisk during the sale, sulting in one pair being sold for 1.25. It is needless to state the la was more than gratified as the ult of his contribution.

(With which is now amalgamated the Belleville Patriotic Association.)

The treasurer begs to acknowledge with thanks the following payments which were received from some of the regular contributors after the 20th of March, and before the opening of the special campaign which is now being so successfully completed.

It is hoped that an alphabetical list of all the subscriptions to the Canadian Patriotic Fund will be ready for publication next week.

The same management will continue to carry on the work of the Fund which is unchanged in any way, though the beneficiaries now have a stronger protection than was the case when the association was exclusively local in its nature and consequently limited in its number of supporters.

Weekly acknowledgments will afterwards be published after payments come in, as has been the custom heretofore.

Rifle Competition

The second rifle competition of the winter season, between ladies and gentlemen of this city, was held yesterday at the indoor range of the Armouries, the conditions being ten a side, distance, 25 yards, half inch invisible bull's eye, 22 rifle, prone position, highest possible score, 100. The result of the match was a win for the men by the narrow margin of 13 points. The shooting by the ladies, as shown by the scores below is really remarkable, considering the short time the Club has been in formation. The men's team was the very best they could muster, no less than six of them having, during the present season, reached the highest possible score of 100. Mr. G. B. Smith must be congratulated for making the magnificent score of 100. The ladies would no doubt have made an even better showing had they had the assistance of Miss M. B. Falkiner, their best shot, who was unavoidably absent. The following is the result:

We Offer Bonds in Small or Large Amounts.

The investor can buy as little as $100, or as much more as he pleases. He can have the bonds to mature in almost any year he desires.

He may buy bonds which pay interest only until the principal matures at the end of a term, or he may buy bonds which repay instalments of principal annually along with his interest.

The bonds are either guaranteed as to legality by the Province interested, or we will furnish a legal opinion of a well known solicitor certifying as to legality.

In all cases provision has been made to retire the principal payments either through the establishment of a sinking fund or through the repayment of principal instalments annually.

TO REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT EASILY AND QUICKLY

If you are overstout the cause of your over-stoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation of food. Too little is being made into the harder tissue of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the mal-assimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this go to any good druggist and get oil of orilene, only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight in reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orilene in capsule form is remarkably as a weight reducer and it is perfectly safe—E. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00 Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

Indian Held on Murder Charge

QUEBEC, March 26.—John Sahayanez, an Indian who less than a year ago was charged with attempted murder for firing on the local superintendant of the Quebec Bridge, but who was only found guilty of common assault and given a month in jail, is again in the hands of the police on a charge of having murdered an Italian, Dominico Cola in a brawl in the Indian's home, Henderson street, here, last night.

Sahayanez's wife, a woman named Rose Smith and three Italians who were present at the shooting are held as witnesses. The first mentioned is thought to have been stabbed in the face by one of the Italians who was in turn shot by her husband.

The coroner's inquest will be held to-morrow.

MUST OPERATE N. T. R. FROM WINNIPEG EAST

OTTAWA, March 26—Notice will be given in a day or two by the Minister of Railways of a resolution providing for the operation of the National Transcontinental Railway by the Government. This follows upon the refusal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to operate the line as provided in the contract which the Laurier Government forced through Parliament in 1903 and 1904. This refusal takes the form of objections the nature of which will probably be made known to the House when the Minister of Railways makes his statement.

They are not based upon the alleged degrading of the line, a matter which affords no room for dispute, and which, in any event, could be easily adjusted. Apparently the company is unwilling to take over the line at all, owing to the enormous cost of construction and the consequent heavy increase in the rental beyond what would have been paid on the basis of cost as given by the late Government in 1903 and 1904. As stated already, there is no adequate means in the Laurier contract for compelling the Grand Trunk Pacific to carry the agreement into effect.

The Government has been for some time, through the Intercolonial operating the end in New Brunswick, providing bi-weekly service from Levis to Moncton. Another bi-weekly service is being provided over 270 miles of road in Northern Ontario and Quebec, between Hearst and Amos. This is being done by contractors and is costing the Government no less a sum than $12,000 a month, the best terms that could be made, in order to give the settlers in the country some means of communication with the outside world.

The Government, it is understood, must now undertake the operation of the whole of the line from Winnipeg east, and must do it at once in order to provide for the maintenance of the line upon which two hundred millions of public money have been spent.

CZAR'S FORCES NOW OCCUPY CZERNOWITZ

Muscovites Sweeping All Before Them in the Carpathians—Austrians Evacuate Capisal of Bokowiua—German Retreat From Suwalki

LONDON, March 27.—(Special)—Latest despatches from the eastern arena report the continued success of Russian arms in the Carpathians. The capture of the Lupkow Pass opens the road to the Hungarian capital. In Bukowina the Austrians are reported to have evacuated Czernowitz, the capital.

WITHDRAW FROM THE PASS.

Frederick Rennett, the correspondent at Petrograd of the London Daily News, says: Air reconnaissances have established the fact that the Austrians have withdrawn altogether from the Lupkow Pass, in the Carpathians. The Russians are now in unopposed occupation there, and there are signs also that Austro-German armies are availing themselves of the drenched mountain roads to draw back into Hungary with a strong column containing the main German force. This is slowly changing the position south of the Beskids and Koziome.

It is expected, in accordance with a Budapest-Berlin compact, that the Magyars and Germans will now prepare a stubborn defensive campaign for the plains of Hungary. Large calibre guns have been brought to the Austro-German position at Yaz, where the cannonade is intensifying, with occasional fierce infantry fighting. The strong Russian threat inside the border of East Prussia in the direction of Tilsit had the desired effect, hastening Eichhorn's retreat from Suwalki. The shooting of the new German infantry is utterly inadequate. Young prisoners admit they had no musketry training until they entered the first battle. The expedition to Nemel destroyed the depot of contraband through which necessaries have been taken into Germany. Documents were seized disclosing organization.

MASTERS OF KEY.

The Petrograd correspondent of The Daily Chronicle states: By the capture of the main Austrian position in the part of the Carpathians known as the Beskid—that is, the portion lying west of Stryj—the Russians have made themselves masters of the top flight of steps leading down to the Budapest railway, which crosses the ridge here, and which is the shortest route from Galicia to the Hungarian capital. In this engagement an entire Austrian regiment of 4,000 men surrendered. Decisive operations are expected in the Carpathians. Apparently the Dual Monarchy will stake all on the results of the impending struggle. The fight will be long and stubborn. The enemy has many naturally strong positions to which it can cling. These have been elaborately fortified.

All Belgians must submit to have a certain number of pigs billeted upon them. But after seven months of Germans, probably the Belgians won't mind much.

H. G. Wells, England's famous author, predicts that the naval war of the future will be a battle of submarines. That may be. It is hard to discount the future. In the present conflict, however, they would cut but a sorry figure in reducing the fortifications of the Dardanelles.

FRENCH VICTORY IN THE VOSGES FOOTHILLS

"Blue Devils" or Alpine Chasseurs, Capture Hartmansweiler Kopf, Near Muelhaxsen After Brilliant Charge—Germans Use Burning Liquid to Stay Onrush

LONDON. March 29.—(Special)—Owing to the great length of the front and the dominating interest of the military situation on the extreme left, it is likely that the importance of the victory obtained during the last few days in Haute, Alsace, will be overlooked in Britain. The capture of the height of Hartmanns-Weiler Kopf, which was definitely established yesterday, is extremely valuable. For many months this stretegical position has been the scene of desperate fighting. Commanding the whole district of Thann, Cernay and Steinbach, the French and German troops have struggled repeatedly for its possession, and the tide of battle has ebbed and flowed upon its spurs and crests, leaving in its wake awful tolls of dead and wounded. It is here that many of the most heroic exploits of the French soldiers have been achieved, for the character of the fighting has allowed more scope for individual gallantry and personal craft of war than in the siege work of entrenched positions.

It is to the Alpine Chasseurs, "the Blue Devils of France," as they are called, because of their blue bonnets and hunter's dress, that the success of the final attack is due.

Last Tuesday after a tremendous artillery fire they assaulted and took the first line of the enemy's position in a splendid rush, regardless of their own losses. On the following day they secured the second line and climbed higher towards the summit, in spite of the stubborn defence of the enemy, who fought with great courage and swept the hillside with a devastating rifle fire. Hand-to-hand fighting took place for several hours, but the "Blue Devils" had the best of it and made many prisoners. The first assault, however, was still to come on the crest of Hartmanns-Weiler Kopf, 1,125 metres above the plain.

A great body of German troops belonging to the famous Fifteenth Corps held the ground with a formidable number of guns, and every method of German warfare was used to thrust back those blue bonnets surging up the ridges. Hand grenades were hurled down from the heights and burning liquid came in streams from trenches dug in the hillside. Many chasseurs were badly burned, though they continued to fight with their scarred clothes. The order had been given to them to take the hill at all costs, and they behaved during these last three days with splendid devotion, which I am told will be fully recognized in official despatches narrating one of the most heroic chapters of the war.

The French tricolor now floats on the summit of Hartmanns-Weiler Kopf and yesterday the Alpines swarmed forward to the flank of the hill on the northeast and southeast, dislodging the enemy from the last grip on the stronghold, which is a natural keep of the broad plain below. It is a victory which gives the French army a secure position in this part of the front, and proves the spirit of the French offensive, which soon will be revealed all along the line.

Russians Sink Enemy's Boats

In Bombardment of Forts on Bosphorous Turkish Fleet Tries Engagement

PETROGRAD, March 29.—Special—An official statement issued last night by the General Staff says:—

"The Black Sea fleet on Sunday bombarded the outside forts and batteries on the Bosphorous on both sides of the straits. (The Bosphorus, called also the Strait of Constantinople, is a narrow passage which connects the Black Sea with the Sea of Marmora. Constantinople stands on its west side at its outlet and partly on the Sea of Marmora. The strait is 18 miles long.)

"According to observations made from ships and hydro-aeroplanes our shells fell with exactitude. Russian aviators flying above the Bosphorus batteries carried out reconnaissances and dropped bombs with success. A heavy artillery fire was directed at the aviators without success.

"The enemy's torpedo boats, which tried to come out, were driven back into the strait by the fire of our guns.

"A large hostile ship which was trying to get into the Bosphorus from seaward was bombarded by us. She finally heeled over and blew up."

SCARCITY OF FOOD INCREASING IN AUSTRIA

(Canadian Press Special)

VENICE, March 29.—Scarcity and dearness of food in the Austrian capital is increasing. The Vienna Arbeiter Zeitung says: "The grim earnestness of the war now begins to be felt. High prices have extended to every necessity. The poor must now limit themselves to the bare nourishment of the body and stilling the pangs of hunger." The paper complains that the government measures affect the poor, but that the iron grip of the law relaxes when it comes to touching the comforts and luxuries of the rich.

Get a Big Order for Shells

British War Office Places Order for Ten Thousand With T. McAvity & Co. of St. John, N. B.

The British War Office has placed an order for ten thousand 4.5 high explosive shells with T. McAvity and Sons, St. John, N. B. This is a larger size shell than has been turned out in Canada so far, the largest heretofore being 13 and 18 pound ammunition, which is about 3½ inches in diameter.

DIED OF SHOCK AS HOUSE IS BURNED

Mr. Wm. Maginn, of Wexford saw His Home Destroyed

TORONTO, March 27.—The sight of the destruction of his home by fire proved too unnerving to Mr. William Maginn, an aged and respected farmer, residing near Wexford, York County, at an early hour to-day, and the old man dropped dead from shock during the blaze, the cause of which is unknown. The fire broke out about five o'clock and Mr. Maginn was able to escape from the house quite easily, but the attending excitement brought on his death.

GETTING AUTHORITY TO OPERATE N. T. RAILWAY

Permanent Government Arrangements Foreshadowed—Power Sought to Lease or Purchase G.T.P. Branch Line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William, Including the Terminal Facilities

OTTAWA, March 29.—(Special.)—Hon. Frank Cochrane has given notice of a resolution in the Commons which foreshadows the continued operation by the Government of the National Transcontinental from Moncton to Winnipeg as a part of the Government's system of railways. The resolution declares that it is expedient to amend the National Transcontinental Railway act so as to provide for the leasing or purchasing of the G.T.P. branch line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William, including the terminal facilities, rolling stock and equipment. The Minister of Railways is to be empowered with the approval of the Governor in Council, to carry out such an agreement, lease or purchase.

The branch line in question was built by the G.T.P. in order to give the road connection between Fort William and the main line of the National Transcontinental at Lake Superior Junction. If the company is not to take over the operation of the National Transcontinental, then, of course, the Government in operating the road will require also the company's present branch line to Fort William, thus giving the outlet to the lake ports for the grain-moving season.

Extensive Cement Company Planned

To be Capitalized at $25,000,000. —E. M. Hager, Formerly of the Universal, the Promoter

CHICAGO, March 27.—Plans for the organization of a $25,000,000 cement manufacturing corporation are being formulated by Chicago interests and definite announcement may be made within the next few weeks. E. M. Hager, who resigned early this year as president of the Universal Portland Cement Company, is the prime mover in the project.

For years the cement business has been hampered and demoralized as a result of freight rates. Manufacturers have been unable to handle business successfully in territory beyond a radius of 150 to 200 miles of their plants.

The present plan is understood to involve what may be called a "coast to coast" cement company with plants located at advantageous points throughout the country.

Air Raid Danger Still a Possibility

LONDON, March 27.—The authorities have resolved to maintain the present street lighting regulations until June. These regulations are now more enforced than ever.

The action of the authorities, however, is supported by all experts. The real danger of a German air attack comes during April and May when the weather conditions for long flights are suitable. Every arrangement is complete here, not merely for resisting such a raid, but for aiding London should such a raid succeed.

Thus London doctors are formed into emergency corps, each section liable to be called to duty at certain specified hours when a raid threatens.

Seventh Battalion—Death. Private Robert G. Carter, Elora, Ont., meningitis.

Princess Pats:—Wounded. Pte. Geo. Todmorden, Toronto.

Thirteenth Battalion - Wounded. Pte. Delbert Hart Terris, Springhill, N.S., gunshot wound in nose.

Sixteenth Battalion—Killed in action. Pte. Turnbull, Hampshire Mills, Ont.

BRITISH NAVY HAS GERMAN SUBMARINE

The U-21, Sunk off Fleetwood, Has Been Raised and Taken into Barrow—A Raid on Cuxhaven by Her Was Planned

LONDON, March 29.—It now transpires that the famous submarine U-21, the officers of which were personally decorated with Iron Crosses by the Kaiser, has become part of the British navy.

Sunk off the west coast somewhere near Fleetwood, about the middle of February, the U-21 was raised and taken to Barrow-in-Furness.

She was very slightly damaged, although the cause of disablement cannot be ascertained. In fact, the whole affair is shrouded in mystery, and has been one of the most closely guarded of naval secrets.

Slight repairs were made, and in a very short time the U-21 was again at sea, headed for home waters, but manned by a British crew. Little credence was given to the stories circulated regarding her fate, but in absence of all news regarding her whereabouts she just dropped from notice and her exploits were forgotten.

Had it been possible to effect the repairs before her loss could be learned by the German authorities a harebrained venture was actually contemplated by some junior British officers. It was nothing less than a plan to sail the U-21 straight into Cuxhaven or some equally important German base, and before being discovered as an enemy craft to torpedo every German war vessel within range.

The time elapsing between her last report to the German Admiralty and her readiness for departure after being raised and repaired made this plan impracticable, and the German authorities are now preparing to admit her loss.

A recent Berlin telegram to the effect that a submarine (supposed to be the U-21) was fired upon by a yacht in St. George's Channel on Feb. 21 seems to prepare the way for a final acknowledgment that this valuable unit is no longer part of the German navy.

LEFT FOR DRY DOCK

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 29.—A special despatch from Athens says the battleships Suffren and Gaulois have left for drydock at Toulon.

Million Dollar Fish Transaction

Toronto Capitalists Acquire Big Property of the Pacific

TORONTO, March 29.—(Special)—The extremely valuable fish industry and the immense supply thereto of the Pacific coast of Canada has just received another impetus through the purchase by Joseph F. Swift, of Toronto, and local capitalists, of the entire assets and plant, including steam trawlers, tugs and schooners of the Standard Fisheries, Limited, with premises owned and situated at Vancouver, Calgary, Barnard Cove, Pacon and Jedway, Queen Charlotte Islands.

It is understood this transaction involves an expenditure of over $1,000,000, and is recognized of great importance to the Pacific coast fisheries.

AMERICA PROTECTS "EITEL" FROM ALLIES

WASHINGTON March 27—Although no word had come from the commander of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich as to whether he intended to take his vessel to sea, naval officers here were confident that the next two or three days would see the ship interned. The time allowed the Eitel to make repairs has been kept strict official secret, but the general understanding today was that it expires within the next two or three days.

No explanation was given at the Navy Department for the appearance of destroyers off Hampton Roads, but it is known President Wilson and Secretary Daniels are anxious to prevent any hitch in the enforcement of the neutrality regulations.

When the time limit for the making of repairs on the Eitel expires the customs collector at Newport News will report to the Treasury Department, and an order for internment will be given if the Eitel does not depart within 24 hours thereafter.

Should Captain Thierichens, commander of the Eitel, choose, however, to put to sea in the face of Allied ships off the Virginia Capes, the presence of British merchant ships at Newport News might necessitate further extension of time to the German war vessel to remain.

OTTAWA CONCERN LETS MUNITION CONTRACTS

The Allison Supply Co., of Ottawa, announced that they have let contracts with United States manufacturers for 55,000,000 additional rounds of ammunition.

GENERAL VON-KLUCK SLIGHTLY WOUNDED INSPECTING TROOPS

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 29.—Official announcement: On the west front yesterday passed quietly, only in the Argonne and in Lorraine, where there were minor engagements, and these were successful for the Germans. General Von-Kluck was slightly wounded by shrapnel, while inspecting advanced positions of his army. His condition is satisfactory.

German troops have stormed Taurogen, across the Russian frontier, north east of Tilsit, and taken 300 Russian prisoners.

A Russian attack on the railroad from Wirballen to Kovno at a point near Pilwiszki was broke down.

The Russians suffered heavy losses in the Kraznopol district, and had more than one thousand taken prisoners

FIERCE FIGHTING CONTINUES GERMANS STUBBORNLY RESISTING

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 29.—Despatches from Paris report that fierce fighting continues in Alsace. The Germans are stubbornly resisting the French drive beyond Hartmann's Weilerkopt. They have been forced to abandon several minor positions.

An Amsterdam despatch reports 28 regiments of Italian Alpine troops and 36 batteries of mountain artillery have left Rome. Their destination is not known.

A Copenhagen despatch says reports received there state that a large German fleet has gathered at Gothland Islands in the Baltic. An attack on Russian ports is expected.

Petrograd reports all Austrian positions on the heights in the Carpathians have been taken.

SINKING OF BRITISH STEAMER BY SUBMARINE IS CONFIRMED

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 29.—The sinking of the British steamer Falaba, of three thousand net tons, off Milford Haven, Wales, by a German submarine, is confirmed. The loss among the crew is supposed to be large.

The Falaba, from Liverpool, with a crew of 129 and 110 passengers, was bound for the west coast of Africa. When the German submarine appeared it whistled thrice as a signal for the steamer to prepare her life boats, but before this could be done a torpedo struck the ship near the engine room.

Three of the lifeboats were swamped. Many persons aboard the vessel were thrown into the sea, where they struggled while the submarine circled about, offering, according to the Falaba's survivors, no assistance. A fishing boat appeared on the scene and saved 140 of the passengers and crew. Captain Davis of the liner, was picked up dead. Eight other bodies were recovered. The survivors were landed at Milford Haven.

GALLIPOLI PENINSULA SHELLED BY ALLIES

Dardanelles Operations are Vigorously Resumed—Weather is Perfect—Eight More Ships Join the Attacking Fleet

LONDON, March 29.—(Special)—Hugh Martin, correspondent of The Daily News, in a despatch from Tenedos says:

Operations have been recommenced in the Dardanells by the allied fleets, and heavy firing is now proceeding in the straits. Judging by the firing heard this morning, Gallipoli Peninsula is being heavily bombarded. The weather is perfect. British seaplanes have been making daily reconnaisances when the ships have not been engaged, and occasionally German aeroplanes are also seen.

The big gun bombardment both indirectly over the peninsula and from a station one mile outside the entrance of the straits, was continued throughout the day with short intervals.

From Mount Elias, the highest point on Tenedos, I saw shells bursting upon the hills near Fort Chanak and Kilid Bahr. Clouds of smoke rose from the land and columns of water from the surface of the sea, making a striking picture in the brilliant sunshine.

Additional transports are arriving with allied troops.

Eight additional warships have joined the allied fleet for a grand assault upon the Dardanells forts in co-operation with the British and French land forces, according to an Athens despatch. Three British warships, four French and one Russian cruiser comprise the reinforcements.

The Daily Chronicle has the following despatch from Martin H. Donohoe at Constanza, and dated Friday:

A special courier arrived here today bringing the news from Constantinople up to Wednesday afternoon. The city is calm and expectant and resigned to the inevitable. The Government is preparing the inhabitants for the arrival of the allied fleet. With this end in view proclamations are posted in various parts of Para and in the mosques of Stamboul announcing that the warships of France and Britain may shortly arrive in the Bosphorus.

The proclamation continues: "It is simply a question of opening up the Dardanells and the Bosphorus to free passage of foreign warships, which the Sultan had hitherto refused, and it has no national political significance."

The Turks' fleet is practically immobilized and is in want of coal. The Breslau, however, is active, and returned to the Bosphorus on Saturday night after a cruise in the Black Sea.

FREIGHT STEAMER RAMS AND SINKS GERMAN SUBMARINE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 29.—The captain of the freight steamer Lizzie which has arrived here declares that he rammed and sunk the German submarine which torpedoed and sunk the British steamer Delmira in the Channel on Thursday.

A Paris official announcement reports the capture of 500 metres of trenches at Marcheville. At Eparges late yesterday the enemy were beaten and pursued by the French and forced to evacuate some trenches.

Constantinople reports state that at a council of the Elder Turks yesterday the Sultan was strongly urged to open negotiations for peace at once.

Vienna despatches claim that the Russian advance in the Carpathians has miscarried and that the movement has been checked by the Austrian forces.

FRENCH MORE THAN HOLD THEIR OWN

(Canadian Press Special.)

PARIS, Mar. 29.—The French War Office today gave out a report on the fighting of yesterday as follows: In the region of Ypres, the German observation post was blown up by the French with a mine. At Eparges the Germans attempted to regain trenches lost by them on March 27. After a violent struggle the French gains were on whole maintained in their entirety. The Germans obtained a footing in a few sections of their old trenches, but on the other hand the French made progress at other points.

RUSSIAN FLEET IS DEVELOPING ACTIVITY

(Canadian Press Special)

PETROGRAD, March 29.—A semi-official review of naval operations in the Baltic since the beginning of the war, made public last night, says the Russian fleet has developed intense activity along the enemy's coast. German submarines have suffered considerably and a number of the enemy's transports loaded with stores have been destroyed.

A war tax of one cent has been imposed on each letter and postcard mailed in Canada for delivery in Canada, the United States or Mexico, and on each letter mailed in Canada for delivery in the United Kingdom and British possessions generally, and wherever the two cent rates applies, to become effective on and from the 15th of April, 1915.

This War Tax is to be prepaid by the senders by means of a War Stamp for sale by Postmasters and other postage stamp vendors.

Wherever possible, stamps on which the word "War Tax" have been printed should be used for prepayment of the war Tax, but should ordinary postage stamps be used for this purpose they will be accepted.

This War Stamp or additional stamp for war purposes should be affixed to the upper right hand portion of the address side of the enevelope or post card, close to the regular postage so that it may be readily cancelled at the same time as the postage.

In the event of a failure on the part of the sender through over-sight or negligence to prepay the war tax on each letter or postcard above specified such a letter or postcard will be sent immediately to the nearest Branch Dead Letter Office.

It is essential that postage on all classes of mail matter should be prepaid by means of ordinary postage stamps. The War Tax stamp will not be accepted in any case for the prepayment of postage.

CENSORSHIP ESTABLISHED BY ROYAL DECREE

ROME, March 29.—A rigid censorship upon the publication of military news from March 30th to July 1st has been established by a royal decree, following a decision reached by a council of Ministers on Saturday.

FOR AUTOISTS ENTERING NEW YORK.

OGDENSBURG, N.Y., March 27.—Mayor Julius Frank, of Ogdensburg, announced yesterday that he had made arrangements with the secretary of State's office whereby automobile license plates may be issued to Canadian tourists entering New York State at this point. Heretofore it was necessary to await the return of plates from Albany.

KINGSTON

Private Kerrison, who was formerly assistant chef at the Hotel Randolph, and who enlisted in the 21st Battalion, has been appointed acting-sergt. while employed as officers' mess caterer.

Mrs. (Dr.) Kidd has volunteered her services as a nurse with the Kingston stationary hospital corps. Mrs. Kidd is a graduate nurse and anxious to go to the front with her husband.

Fifty men of "C" Battery will be given passes for Easter. They will be permitted to leave on Thursday night and will return for reveille on Tuesday.

Sixty-five applications have been received from nurses who are very anxious to serve in the stationary hospital of Queen's College corps. Only thirty-five are needed. Major Etherington is selecting those best fitted for the work.

There is much interest in the garrison assault-at-arms, which will be held in Ontario Hall on Monday night. Corporal Hawkey is training for the wrestling contest, and every man who thinks he can fight, wrestle or use the sword among the local military, is using every spare hour for practice.

GREY'S SPEECH PUT AN END TO PEACE TALK

President Wilson's Emissary Was in Berlin at the Time—The British Declaration Knocked His Plans Galleywest

BERLIN via The Hague, March 27.—President Wilson's newest effort to bring about a cessation of hostilities in Europe has met with failure. Colonel E. M. House, of New York, the president's personal emissary, will leave Berlin for Switzerland to-morrow, convinced that peace negotiations at the present time are out of the question.

Despite denials from Washington, Col. House came to Europe on a mission of peace. I learn from authoritative sources that he was sent by President Wilson to sound the governments at war and learn through informal interviews whether there was any possibility of a truce and a peace conference before the spring campaigns caused more blood to flow on the battlefields of Europe.

Col. House conferred with Sir Edward Grey, Britain's Foreign Secretary, with the French Prime Minister, Rene Viviani, and finally with Herr Von Jagow, secretary of German foreign affairs.

With all possible courtesy and appreciation of President Wilson's kindly interest, Col. House has been told that there is no possibility of a peace compromise at this time.

While Col. House was engaged with German officals, Sir Edward Grey delivered a strong attack upon Germany in a public lecture in London, assuring his hearers, according to reports published here, that the allies were determined to crush Germany at any cost.

Grey's speech knocked any lingering chances of peace into a cocked hat.

The date for closing the subscriptions to the new war loan has been extended until April 10th, enabling soldiers a-field to subscribe.

Havana Holiday Will See the Big Fight

Postponement to Monday Will Boost Attendance—Fighters Train

HAVANA, March 29.—(Special.)—Great satisfaction was expressed with the announcement that the date for the 45-round prize fight had unanimously been changed to Monday.

Following the amicable adjustment of the date by the promoters, Minister of the Interior Montalbo declared April 5 a half-holiday for all government employees, and it is expected that the Havana officials and merchants will follow suit. This arrangements was more than pleasing to Jack Curley, promoter of the affair, who predicts that at least 5000 more local residents will be attracted to the fight on Monday than would have attended on the sacred Sabbath.

H. D. (Curly) Brown, manager of the race track, when he learned of the half-holiday, immediately conferred with the fight promoters, and it was announced that the Menocal Handicap for the President's Cup, worth $1,000 in plate, and a like amount in cash, would be put on immediately after the fight as an added attraction. As the fight is to be started at noon, this will give the race track officials ample time to hold several brushes on the same afternoon, if they so desire.

Both Johnson and Willard are quite happy at the turn of events, and declare that the slight change in the arrangements will not adversely affect their condition. Willard has become hardened to postponements, but for all that, steadfastly refuses to lose his temper. Daily he goes along with his training with a quiet confidence. Jess is not given to bombast, but he believes the fates have again conspired to keep from his clutches just so much longer the world's heavyweight pugilistic championship.

The big cowboy is now down to 242 pounds. This he considers a fair weight for him, and in consequence he has decided to lessen the training schedule after Sunday. The same physician who examined Johnson on Thursday reports after a careful examination that Willard is also in excellent shape.

Johnson has set next Tuesday as the date for beginning the process of drying-out. He is now within ten pounds of his ring weight, and is fearful that, owing to the climatic conditions, he will be too finely drawn if he keeps up his present routine. From the precautions that he is taking, it is quite apparent to observers that the champion expects to have to extend himself.

The Cuban Government itself will police the Havana race track during the 45-round battle. Through the influence of Col. Jose d'Estrampes, chairman of the citizens' committee, two hundred of the crack rurale guards will surround the field and act under the directions of their commanding officers in maintaining order, and incidentally seeing that all those who witness the fight first pay a visit to the box office.

MAIL BOAT SINKS GERMAN SUBMARINE

LONDON, March 29.—(Special.)—The railway packet, City of Brussels, encountered a German submarine yesterday. The captain of the steamer immediately took the aggressive and fired on the submarine, which taken by surprise, started to submerge. The captain turned his steamer quickly in an effort to ram the submarine, and he believes he succeeded in sinking it. His vessel was going at sixteen knots at the time.

LENNOX CONSERVATIVES ELECT NEW OFFICERS

Liberals Meet in a Week to Pick an Opponent for W. J. Gaul, M.P.P.

NAPANEE, March 29.—Special.)—A large and representative annual meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Association for the local riding of Lennox was held in the Town Hall here today. The following officers were elected:—Uriah Wilson, ex-M.P., honorary president; Arthur W. Fraser, J.P., president; G. F. Ruttan, K.C., secretary; Lieut. C. M. Stratton, M.D., assistant secretary; A. C. Parks, J.P., treasurer.

Resolutions were passed approving of the Conservative Government in Ontario, and commending the services rendered by T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., as the representative at Toronto, and also endorsing the administration of Sir Robert L. Borden and his Cabinet, and approving of the course pursued in the Dominion House by W. J. Paul, M.P., the representative for the County of Lennox and Addington.

Mr. T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., addressed the convention and explained the work being carried on at the present session of the Ontario House.

Mr. G. F. Ruttan, secretary gave a short address, urging active organization. He referred to the fact that the Reformers have called their convention for Easter Monday in Napanee to nominate a candidate to oppose Mr. W. J. Paul, the Conservative member, and candidate at the next Dominion elections.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. J. E. Ryan of Port Arthur, spent the week end in the city.

Mrs. Thos. Clare, Albert street, left on the flyer to-day to visit friends in Edmonton.

John Newton Alford of the Motor Battery, Toronto, spent yesterday in the city. He says they expect to leave Toronto at any time with the Second Contingent.

Hon. H. Corby, accompanied by Mrs. Corby and Miss Corby, leave on Wednesday for the Virginia Hot Springs, where they will spend the Easter vacation.

HOCKEY.

THE GIRLS VS. BANKERS

Tomorrow evening, at the Arena, on account of the late season another hockey match is abled to be staged between the Bankers of the city, who are to play with one hand, and the Y.M.C.A. girls. The two teams have met twice before, and have provided interesting hockey, the ladies playing a tie game the first one, and being defeated in the second. The teams have decided to give the entire proceeds to the Patriotic Fund, and they expect a good crowd. The puck will be faced at 8.15.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

In the report of the results of the Hexatalon events, held in the gymnasium on Thursday night, which appeared in Saturday's paper, the name of R. Moen was unavoidably left out. He obtained 225½ points, which gives him second place, and puts the total at 1488¾ points.

CURED BY A JOKE

TRENTON, N.J., March 27.—Although doctors had failed in their efforts to restore his voice, Charles Kateza of Allentown, can talk to-day as the result of a humorous story told to him by City Engineer Abram Swan.

Kateza, an iron molder by trade, was injured about a year ago in a Brooklyn plant. He temporarily lost his sight and hearing, and then became unable to talk. Some time ago he was brought to Mercer Hospital here for treatment. City Engineer Swan has also been a patient there, and the other night they were sitting together, Swan doing the talking and Kateza the listening. Swan told a funny story and Kateza smiled.

A little later Kateza went to bed, and other patients, including County Detective George Freudenmacher, were awakened by hearing him laugh. It appears that he dreamed of the joke and, upon being awakened, found he could talk.

WAR TAX STAMP ON ALL LETTERS

Mr. A. Gillen, Postmaster of this city, has received a circular from the Post Office Department in reference to the war tax stamp on letters, postal notes and money orders. A synopsis of the regulations are as follows:

On and after April 15th, 1 cent will be added to letters and post cards mailed in Canada for delivery in Canada, United States and Mexico, and on each letter to the United Kingdom and British possessions, where a two cent stamp applies.

An additional one cent stamp is added to postal notes and on all money orders 2c. is necessary.

Ordinary postage stamps are good for payment of the war tax, but war tax stamps are not good for payment of ordinary postage.

LETTER FROM GENE COULTER

The following very interesting letter from Eugene Coulter, now at the front with the 34th, was received by Mr. Richard Snell, of this city:—

March 5th, 1915.

Dear old friend Dear:

Here I am many miles away from my old mate, and will never be satisfied until I can put a few more fires in the old mill for you. Hope it won't be long. Some say the war will last a long time, and others say it won't, so I guess there aren't many, if any that know for sure. We have been in action for five days and doing good work; haven't lost a man in our battery so far, but can't tell how soon. When the coal boxes or Jack Johnsons are playing music around a fellow's ears he must keep his head out of sight or there will be something doing. I have heard the music, and don't seem to mind it at all now. At first it made me feel shaky. We have been in action five days now; haven't even lost a horse. I am a driver and we are just behind the firing line—horses and drivers—waiting for orders to advance at any moment—may not move for some time, and again, might not have time to finish this letter—just like waiting for a call on the railroad. When we go into action we think no more of it than going out to do a half day's work, but if one of those coal boxes bursts near a fellow's lid he might be in—for breakfast. It is funny, and you would hardly believe it, but you can see the biggest ones coming through the air like a big dart of some kind.

Say, Dick. I'm some Frenchman now—can talk the language to beat the D——. I get a little English in it sometimes, so have to start all over again. The coins here are something like our own money. In the old country across the "bubbles" we had a deuce of a time for a while trying to count change, but soon got used to it. Well, Dick, I have seen many graves and spoils of war. They certainly are cruel and they seem to make churches their first aiming point—something another nation wouldn't do. You people can read the papers and see how the work is going on; but war is war and there is no doubt about it. No one knows until they are targets themselves. We don't have it as bad here as we did on Salisbury Plain. There was more rain there than here. Say Dick, can you send me a couple of Belleville papers so I can imagine I'm in the old town for a while? If I get out of this safe back there I will come and start all over again. If you have an extra plug of tobacco, just send it along, too, for tobacco is scarce here. We get some French "shag" once in a while, but that isn't tobacco. Would like to say more and tell you where I am, but can't do that. Will wait until some other time. The people here can't do enough for the Canadians. Send my best to Bill Craig, Potsy Davis, Jack Hall, George Cromlish and wife, and all the rest of the people, especially you and your family. Will have more to write about the next time, so be good and I'll try and be the same.

As ever, your old mate.
GENE COULTER.

P.S.—Seen Parkie Thomas yesterday—told him I was going to write to you. He sends his best. G. C.

Niobe in Wait For the Eitel

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Whenever the Prinz Eitel Friedrich's commander decides to risk running the gauntlet, it is declared, there will be nothing to interfere with him leaving Newport News. Officials are beginning to believe that after all the German cruiser may intend to attempt an escape. That she could successfully win through the Capes, and on out to the open sea is doubted here.

At least four allied warships are waiting for her, including the Canadian cruiser Niobe.

Farmers and speculators have been enjoying an unprecedented era of prosperity, but the consumer, as usual pays the freight.

Treat Every Child's Cold Externally Rub on "Nerviline"—A Safe Cure

A MIRACLE OF HEALING POWER IN EVERY BOTTLE

Little children can't be expected to romp, day in and day out, without sometime coming to grief. Some of their games and rough and tumble, cause undue fatigue, and not infrequently the kiddies are bruised, have strains, swellings and aches just like their elders.

When children come in tired and sore, see they are well rubbed with Nerviline. It does wonders in breaking up a cold—has an amazing effect on any sort of muscular pain.

The wise mother always keep trusty old Nerviline on hand. It has a wonderful list of uses, and a bottle handy on the bedroom shelf often saves calling in the doctor.

Young and old alike can safely use Nerviline—there's no harm in it—just a heap of curative power when you rub it on.

Whenever there is a pain or sickness Nerviline should be close by. It is a true specific for rheumatism, lumbago sciatica or neuralgia.

As for earache, toothache, sore back sprains or strains, nothing else will cure so fast as good old Nerviline. In use about fifty years—sold by dealers everywhere. The large 50c family size bottle is the most economical; trial size 25c, all dealers, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

CONFIRMATION SERVICES AT EMMANUEL CHURCH

Rev. Bishop Brewing in Attendance and Delivers an Inspiring Address—Eleven Candidates Were Confirmed

At Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church yesterday morning confirmation services were conducted by Rev. Bishop Willard Brewing, who also preached. Eleven candidates were confirmed. The Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, assisted in the service. The following are extracts from the discourse of the Bishop, whose subject was "The Efficiency of Jesus."

"Jesus was a sublime egotist, with a supreme assurance. He said 'I am the supreme teacher of truth; no one can supersede me. You cannot aim higher than myself. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master and the servant as his lord.' And through all these centuries millions of people have acknowledged his claim, and have agreed that in these 1900 years no one has outshone this great heavenly visitor who swung into the orbit of the earth's consciousness, and flooded it with light.

We are writing on our letter-heads these days, "1915, A.D.—Anno Domini, the year of our Lord." It is no small thing for any man to write his name on the brow of the centuries. Some mad monarch may dip his sword in blood and write his own name on a few generations. Mohamet did it. The Mohammedan calendar is reckoned from his Hegvia from Mecca, when he began his bloody work. At the time of the French Revolution the new parliament, drunk with democracy, decided to start a new era, with the day Sept. 22, 1793, as the day 1, year 1; but it soon petered out. How did Jesus get his place on our calendar? Why is this called the "year of our Lord?" The great Roman Empire, with all its list of Caesars, placed the name of this humble Jew at the fountain head of time, acknowledging that all things before led up to him, and all things since flow down from him.

There are men who write about the "limitations of Paul" and "the limitations of Jesus," men who, having been raised to a high pinnacle of civilization, forget the agencies which worked together for their advancement; men who are the sons of immigrants to a free land, who stigmatize their fellows who are now in a similar position to their fathers, and close the gates against these men, who, being themselves the product of foreign missionary effort, refuse to support foreign missions. As though a man living in a fine, elevated, richly furnished house, should laugh at the rugged foundation that upholds it.

But someone protests that we are living in an age of progress—the 12-year old boy knows more than his grandfather ever knew. In the glare of the modern arc light the old oil wick is not an object of admiration. Beside the newest model motor car the old phaeton does not excit our fancy very much. Why, then, should we cling to a book centuries old for our religion? Why should we pin our faith to a man who lived 1900 years ago. There are some things that never grow old. The sun does not grow old—though they tell us he is cooling and is developing spots; it is not appreciable to us. He rose as bright and warm over us this morning as when we were children, or as he did over the world's first children. A multitude of lights have been invented to substitute for him or to compete with him; but they all pale into insignificance when he rises. Jesus is our Sun.

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of Thee,
And Thou, O Lord, art more than they."

True beauty never grows old. "A thing of beauty is a joy forever. Its loveliness increases. It will never sink into nothingness."

Love never grows old. Through all the literature of the ages there is one sweetly monotonous note—the note of love. Get together, if you will, a number of ancient and modern works of fiction, and read them all. Architecture varies, customs change, styles of clothing displace each other; but the love of a mother for her child, and of sweethearts for each other, is sweetly similar in all times and in all places. That is what makes the New Testament a universal and eternal book. The light of Christ's truth, the beauty of his holiness, the abandonment of his love, are unsurpassable and undying. This book appeals to us with the authority of a sane appeal to the universal consciousness.

Inspiring Day At Tabernacle Church

Second Opening Sunday and Dedication of Sunday School Annex of Interesting Character

Yesterday was a day of interest to all who attended the concluding dedicatory services at the Tabernacle church. In the morning an excellent sermon was delivered by Rev. S. T. Bartlett, of Toronto, General Secretary of the Young Peoples' Work of the Methodist Church, while at 2.30 o'clock the Sunday School rooms were packed by old and young to witness the dedicatory exercises of the new annex, for which every preparation had been made by Superintendent J. E. Walmsley and his assistants. Here Mr. Bartlett excelled in an informal talk to the young people, taking up the threads of influence for good or bad according so the tendencies of the human mind. Many striking illustrations were given that will not soon be forgotten. He was followed by Rev. W. G. Clarke, pastor of the church, who in an inspiring address suggested the naming of the new rotunda after the Rev. Amos Campbell, who has been so instrumental in the erection of the original church structure, while the new annex will be known as "Gardner Hall," in honor of Mr. S. A. Gardner, the veteran teacher and former superintendent of the school.

Mr. Walmsley introduced the speakers in his usual affable manner, and the spirit of the session as a whole, including the augmented orchestra, was good to feel.

The evening service was largely attended, the membership of Holloway street church, and many from elsewhere, being in attendance, Rev. A. R. Sanderson assisting in the services. A second brilliant sermon by Rev. Mr. Bartlett concluded the day's services. To Mrs. Grant, chorister; Mrs. M. P. Duff, organist, and the splendid singers of the choir, too much cannot be said in praise of the day's work, this portion being an inspiration to all who were present. Especially pleasing were the anthems, a solo by Mrs. Grant, a trio by Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Nicholson and Mrs. Duff, and a solo by Mr. Bruce Martin. The new gowns, now complete for both ladies and gentlemen, with coquettish little caps for the former, were pronounced in exquisite taste, lending an added charm to the beautifully rendered selections.

Congratulations have been freely extended by visitors upon the improvements, particularly the removal of the tiresome front steps, the church now being one of the most commodious in the city. The membership of the Tabernacle has now passed the five hundred mark, and is progressive in every department.

Rev. Mr. Clarke who, it is to be regretted, concludes his pastorate this year, has done valiant work during his four years here, the work accomplished being of the most substantial nature.

JOHN STREET CHURCH

The Rev. David McLaren of Toronto, gave a very interesting missionary address at the service in John Street Church last evening, as also at the Sunday School in the afternoon. Mr. MacLaren was listened to with great interest, and partly because as a boy he belonged to John Street church, and because he has become an expert in missionary work at home and abroad. This was evidenced in the splendid array of missionary data and variety of incidents with which his address was illuminated.

Mr. Currie's sermon in the morning was on "The Reality of The Invisible". He also made feeling reference to the benign Christian influence and devotion of the late Mrs. Forin, who for 60 years had been connected with John Street Church. She was always cheerful and unvarying in her Christian testimony, and the "dead yet speaketh."

ST. ANDREWS BY-THE-SEA

Few of the visitors to St. Andrews realize that the district has a historic association

Champlain landed near the present site of St. Andrews in 1604, when he came from France with a Patent Royal of all the territory in America between the 40 and 46 degrees of latitude.

When the independence of the United States was established, the U.E.L. came across the border and settled at St. Andrews, and there are still houses standing in the town which were brought by them from Maine.

There is quite a contrast between the latter and the spacious new Algonquin which has just been rebuilt by the C.P.R.

The fellow who knows it all is the same chap who asks questions about things he does not know.

Let your spring motto be "Boom Belleville."

It is easy enough to tell how to run a war when one is not on the ground doing it.

Not many years ago a battle in the air would have been pure fiction. Now it is a common-place fact.

District Meeting In Belleville

To Organize for Hydro Radial Undertaking

After the deputation in the interests of Hydro Radials made their appeal before the Premier on Friday, a meeting was held of all the representatives of this district. Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of this district, occupied the chair. In all there were 100 representatives present and addresses were made by Adam Beck, T. W. Owen, ex-M.P. of Campbellford, and several others. Each town represented put in a strong claim for the meeting of the district. Campbellford and Belleville put up a very strong fight but Belleville was successful. The date will be announced by the chairman, Mr. T. F. Matthews.

The representatives from Peterborough were His Worship Mayor Buller, Mr. T. F. Matthews, Ald. Green, Duffus, Stratton, McIntyre, Edgar, Evans, and Weir, also City Clerk S. R. Armstrong and B. D. Hall, President of the Board of Trade.

During the day Mayor Buller, accompanied by Ald. Green, Duffus and McIntyre looked over the sections of roads and secured information which will come in handy when the paving of the roads in Peterborough will come up. The quartette also attended the Good Roads Convention and learned more of roadbeds, etc.

BELGIAN AVIATORS MADE DARING RAID

PARIS, March 29.—(Special.)—Belgian aviators, Saturday, raided the German aviation camp at Ghistelles, seven miles southwest of Bruges, and inflicted considerable damage.

East of the heights of the Meuse, near Marcheville, the French army of the Meuse captured about 350 yards of trenches. Part of these were lost in a third German counter-attack. The Germans made two counter-attacks to regain the lost ground, and were driven back with losses, before they were able to gain a footing in their old positions again. Fighting here is proceeding.

About 160 yards of trenches were captured from the Germans at Les Eparges.

A German aeroplane which was engaged in bomb throwing operations and succeeded in throwing one bomb near Radonvillers, was brought down by French artillery fire and the pilot and observer were captured.

The French troops holding Hartmanns-Weilerkopf, which they captured from the Germans last Friday have succeeded in fortifying their newly won ground. In their attacks which made them masters of the summit of this important mountain, the French soldiers captured six officers, 34 noncommissioned officers, and 3353 men of the German army, all of whom are unwounded. In addition they made many wounded men captive.

THE PROSPECTIVE END

It would be well night impossible to discover the basis of the very general impression that the European war will soon be over. Yet that impression is widely prevalent, it seems to be growing. Under interrogation one might say that the fall of Przemysl, opening the way for the Russian advance into Hungary and possibly into Germany, made an early end of the fighting seem more probable; another might adduce in evidence the determined assault of the Allies upon the defenses of Constantinople; others still might have in mind Italy's unmistakable preparations for war, the growing distress of Austria, or the many indications that Germany herself is within measurable distance of economic exhaustion. Kitchener's new million and the strengthening of the artillery arm of the French and English might be referred to.

More important and encouraging than any lay inferences from observed incidents, however, are the confident expressions attributed to Field Marshal Sir John French, in command of the British forces in France and Belgium. He is reported by the correspondent of the Havas Agency at British Headquarters to have said:

> I don't believe it will be a long war. Spring promises well for the Allies. We are convinced, I and all those here, that a decisive and definite victory awaits us at the end of all these hard months of war.

This is not very definite. It is significant, however, that the British commander should have permitted himself so near an approach to prophecy. His tone is confident, that is unmistakable. He said that economic conditions in Germany "are daily becoming more serious," and that the Germans, though far from famine, "are hampered in obtaining a food supply, and that is a great deal." He has had a feeling, moreover, that for some time the Germans "were being sparing of their shells," indicating a shortage of ammunition supply.

It is interesting to note Sir John's opinion that the French soldiers, who were under obvious disadvantages in the beginning, are "man for man better than the Germans today," that they have improved since the war began, "while the German Army has deteriorated." He instances the driving of the enemy out of their fortified position at Neuve Chapelle, where "their attacks lacked the former vigor and spirit." To the correspondent's inquiry whether the Germans "have consistently broken the rules of civilized warfare," General French replied that "in many instances their conduct has been bad, very bad. I know that it has been. But it has varied. It has seemed to depend upon the commanders. If a commander approves of outrages they occur." That is very important testimony in corroboration of some of the reports from which credence has been withheld, partly because it was hard to believe them, and in part because it is difficult to trace them to an authentic source. It has been quite impossible to believe that the soldiers of the German Army as a whole were given to the perpetration of "atrocities." The truth is probably to be found in General French's remark that it depends upon the commanders.

The world eagerly grasps at every indication that the end of the war is not far off. It may come through the collapse of Austria. Germany would then find it exceedingly difficult to say what she was fighting for. It does not seem possible that she can now gain advantage which would be worth the enormous cost in human lives and in treasure. She could make better terms of peace now, better terms for herself, than would be accorded to her at the end of a Summer's fighting.

FEARING AN ELECTION

The Globe says that excuses for a general election simply disgrace Canada in the eyes of intelligent men throughout the Empire. The Daily News does not know when the Government intends going to the country. It does not want an election upon any Imperial issue. Much may depend upon the conduct of the Opposition and of the Liberal Senators. The unrepresentative Upper House cannot forever overrule the popular chamber as it has repeatedly done in the last three years, and as the House of Lords has not been allowed to do in Great Britain. With much lesser issues than this at stake general elections have been held in both Australia and New Zealand since the war commenced. If the Government were to poll the electors this year or next, it is certain that no one in either of the sister Dominions would be greatly shocked.—Toronto News.

CURRENT COMMENT

The end-of-the-war prophets are pretty well agreed on August for the close of hostilities. That will make one year of the bloodiest period in the world's history.

Sir Edward Grey has sounded the note of a soon-to-be allied victory; so has Sir John French, likewise General Joffre. Kitchener is yet to be heard from in that sense. He is on record as saying that now is the time the real war will commence.

Toronto News: "The suggestion that the Provincial Government should make a grant to any school which does not observe the Regulations is a new theory of government which certain members of the Oppositon in the Legislature seem to advocate."

The appointment of General Sir John Robertson as Lord Kitchener's chief of staff goes far to refute the charge that the British army offers no career to the lowly born. General Robertson enlisted as a private, and before he enlisted he was a footman.

By the action and invitation of the Chicago Association of Commerce, the words "Stop the war" are stamped on Chicago letters. It is hard to see how the practice can do any harm, and if it pleases the Chicagoans it must be doing a little good.

New York Press: "The sudden destruction of three great ships of steel in the attack on the Dardanelles is more of a dramatic than a votal loss to the Allies. There is no reason to think that the result will be anything but a more grim and determined assault on the historic straits. The chances for success are practically unchanged."

Montreal News: "A cataclysm such as the present war, that shakes the earth to its very foundations, and may yet prove to be the most epochial and far-reaching event that has ever happened to mankind, has a great many minor effects: minor only by comparison with the tremendous forces that are stirred in these days."

London Daily Express: "Among the savages of Central Africa war is waged according to certain rules and conventions. Germany entirely declines to be hampered by any such restrictions. During the last seven months she has broken every tradition of warfare, and as she realizes that she is fighting for a losing cause her savagery becomes the more blatant.

Hamilton Herald: "We shouldn't wonder if those thirty Austrians who were caught drilling with wooden guns in the basement of a Toronto church were more than willing to be interned. It's a snap for the average foreigner in Canada to be interned as an enemy alien in a concentration camp where there is good shelter, plenty to eat, tobacco provided, and not much to do."

Montreal Star: "American sympathy is overwhelmingly with the Allies. This is and has been a very valuable asset of our side. It has given us confidence that — whatever awkward questions might arise over shipping or contraband or blockade operations—there was not the smallest danger of the United States stumbling into the war against us. The Germans can have no such confidence. If they blundered into a serious misunderstanding with the American Government that Government would be doing the most popular thing at home in taking a stiff tone—even at the risk of war."

FAMOUS WAR PHRASES

Each big war accounts for a number of famous phrases. Probably the first coined in the present war was that which related to the treaty that Germany contemptuously tore up when it outraged the neutrality of Belgium. This was "A scrap of paper," a term which for many years will no doubt be used in connection with any breach of contract.

"The thin red line" is an immortal phrase which has never been forgotten by Britishers since the origin at the time of the Battle of Inkermann. It referred to the heroic stand of the Highlanders, who withstood for hours the charges of the Russians without flinching, although they were greatly outnumbered.

"The Girl I Left Behind Me" was a phrase which came into being at the time of the Seven Years' War, when the "Tommies" sang the melody as lustily as they do "Tipperary" today. "An army goes on its belly," said the Kaiser's grandfather at the time of the Franco-German War, and since then the phrase has been a popular one amongst military experts. William III. was another monarch who was responsible for a military saying which lived, when he stated that "Every bullet has its billet." "Up, Guards, and at 'em!" was an expression used by the Duke of Wellington on the battlefield of Waterloo, when he encouraged the British troops on to victory.

TIMELY HEALTH HINTS

Consumption, pneumonia, and colds are often due to bad housing, that is, to the bad ventilation of the houses we live in.

Besides these specific diseases there are the vague ill feelings, the lack of vigor and strength due to sleeping in ill ventilated rooms and living in overheated houses.

Keep the living rooms and sleeping rooms well aired, let in the sunshine and the breeze and you'll safeguard your health and add a great deal to the joy of living.

Don't use drugs for sleeplessness. Drugs lead to drug habits.

Insomnia is usually the result of worry.

Do not go to bed with mind tense or agitated. Do not worry or fret about anything, especially do not worry about not sleeping. If sleep does not come promptly it will when you are sufficiently exhausted, therefore be calm.

If you can sleep it is all right; if you cannot sleep it is all right. The people who get desperate from sleeplessness get desperate not because of the sleeplessness, but because of worry about their sleeplessness. When you get this established in your mind you will sleep.

Here are six simple health rules which a noted physician says will prevent nine-tenths of the minor ailments, thereby increasing our efficiency 100 per cent.:

1. Sleeping and living in cool, well ventilated rooms.
2. Eating moderately.
3. Keeping the secretory organs working properly.
4. Building up resistance by cold baths, air and water, and exposures within reason.
5. Keeping the mouth and nose clean.
6. Keeping away from infectious people, sick and well.

After Measles Whooping Cough or Scarlet Fever

the extreme weakness often results in impaired hearing, weakened eyesight, bronchitis and other troubles, but if Scott's Emulsion is given promptly, it carries strength to the organs and creates rich blood to build up the depleted forces.

Children thrive on Scott's Emulsion.

Mrs. Naybor—Your house is? Mercy! I certainly shan't let Fido go in there again!—Boston Transcript.

An aged Paris woman was frightened to death by an exploding bomb, during the visit of the Zeppelins to the French capital, Sunday. Another German victory.

Why Eyes Sparkle.

Merriment causes a frequent movement of the eyelids up and down, and as it is the function of the eyelid to release a tear each time it comes down the repetition has the effect of covering the eye with considerable moisture. The light shining on this moisture gives the sparkling effect. Inasmuch as the merry appearance of the eye is caused by tears, we are apt to shed them from laughing as well as from crying. Tears are intimately associated with our merry and our sad moods.

Criminality of Waste.

If I wanted to train a child to be thrifty I should teach him to abhor waste. I do not mean waste of money—that cures itself, because very soon there is no money to waste—but waste of material, waste of something that is useful, but that you cannot represent in money value to the waster. There is waste of water, waste of gas and things of that kind. If you would wish your children to be thrifty I would beg to impress upon them the criminality of waste.—Lord Rosebery.

Barnum's Ready Retort.

Barnum once appeared at Oxford to lecture on "Humbug." The rowdy students would not give him a hearing. At length, in a momentary lull, he shouted, "Then you don't want to hear anything about humbug?"

"We don't!" was the answer in a roar.

"Well," retorted Barnum, "I've got your money, and there's no humbug about that!"

The disturbance came to a sudden finish, and Barnum proceeded in peace.

Like Father, Like Son.

Rev. Dr. Somers was in the habit of addressing Sarah, his wife, in polysyllables when he wished the children to leave the room. He never dreamed that they understood until nine-year-old Jack, recovering from measles, was one day enjoying the dear privilege of hearing his mother read aloud.

The doctor ventured in and began softly, "Sarah"—

Dogs and Infection.

Dogs can carry infection along with them, as was clearly proved at Constantinople in 1865, when a single animal, entering the city from an infected district, started a cholera epidemic that killed more than 50,000. The dog, a valuable chow, was taken into his house by a dragoman, and a few hours later he and all his family were stricken down with the complaint, which spread thence to all parts of the city, even the sultan's palace being invaded. —Exchange.

Almost a Death Struggle.

A large crowd had gradually formed around the two fashionably dressed and oblivious young girls, and at one time it seemed necessary to separate them.

"What can it mean?" said the stranger who had just come up.

"It took me," said the man addressed, "some time to learn; but, as I understand it now, one girl has been six months in Europe, and while she was gone the other one has learned to play golf, and they are trying to tell each other about it."—Life.

Pickled Tea as Relish.

Pickled tea, "letpetso," is a rare delicacy in Burma and Siam. The leaves are thrown into boiling water and there remain until they become soft, when they are rolled by hand on mats and allowed to cool. They are then rammed down tight into the internode of a bamboo, a stopper is made of guava leaves, and the bamboo is suspended two days, with stopper down, to drain off the water, and then buried in the ground till the letpet has matured, when it is ready for sale and use. If not buried the letpet becomes black and spoiled instead of yellowish, as it should be. The letpet is rarely made into a drink, but is eaten, generally with oil and garlic.

Animals With Pockets.

Did you ever think what a curious thing it is that some animals have pockets—great, roomy, fur lined vest pockets, big enough to carry a family of little ones about in? Many of the animals native to Australia and Tasmania have these convenient pockets, and so has the possum, a common animal in our southern states. The kangaroo is the largest of this species. Full grown kangaroos go sixteen feet at a jump, and so when going on a long journey or running from hunters think what a comfort it must be to Mother Kangaroo to know that her babies are snug and safe in her pocket!—Exchange.

FRIENDSHIPS.

There are three friendships from which you can derive good and three friendships which are injurious. Friendship with the upright, friendship with the sincere and friendship with the man of observation—these are advantageous. Friendship with the man of specious airs, friendship with the insinuatingly soft and friendship with the glib tongued—these are injurious. —Confucius.

The British naval experts have developed a new type of floating mine. We'll guarantee that that familiar stamp "Made in Germany" does not appear on it.

Progressing.

The five-year-old daughter of a well known humorous writer appeared one morning at the breakfast table with suggestions of a cold beginning to manifest itself.

"Why, Kathleen," said her father, "you are a little hoarse."

"Am I?" said Kathleen, resentfully. "Your said I was a little pig yesterday!"—London Telegraph.

Preparing a Substitute.

"We are to have company for dinner, and I don't believe there is a grapefruit to be had in town! What in the world shall I do?"

"Got any oranges?"

"Plenty of them."

"All right. You be splitting the oranges, and I'll run down to the drug store and get a pound of quinine to dust them with."—Houston Post.

Boasting.

"My boy, whatever you do, never brag."

"No, father."

"At least, not until after you have done it."

"And then?"

"Then if you were clever enough to have done it well you will be clever enough to know that it's not worth bragging about."—Detroit Free Press.

Great Women Composers.

Walter Damrosch asks but finds it difficult to answer the question, "Why are there no great women composers?" His conclusion is: "Great music springs from the emotions, and is crystallized into form through a controlling intellect. When women achieve this combination they will be able to join the noble company of Bach, Beethoven and Wagner."—New York Telegram.

The Law of Compensation.

"I had no mother's voice to lull me to sleep when I was a boy," sobbed the first man.

"And I had no father's voice to call me in the morning," chuckled the second.

Thus we see nature's wonderful law of compensation applied to the human equation.—Philadelphia Ledger.

What Interested Her.

"The overture is about to begin. We might as well go in."

"Did you get your wife a book of the opera?"

"No. She doesn't care for the opera. I would pay well, however, for a catalogue or price list of the jewels being worn in the boxes."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Date of Buddha.

On the authority of the available inscriptions and the tradition as recorded in the Ceylonese chronicles the date of the nirvana of Buddha is found by the latest writer on the subject to be 487 B. C., and as tradition assigns eighty years as the period of his life he must be considered to have been born in the year 567 B. C.

Knew Arithmetic Anyhow.

A teacher of music desired to impress the pupils with the meaning of the signs "f" and "ff" in a song they were about to sing. After explaining that "f" meant forte he said, "Now, children, if 'f' means forte, what does 'ff' mean?"

Silence reigned for a moment, and then he was astonished to hear a bright little fellow shout, "Eighty!"

Heartless Hoax.

"My wife gave a reception yesterday."

"Did you attend?"

"Yes. I played a practical joke on her. I got in line where she was receiving, and before she knew it she was smiling and saying she was glad to see me —for the first time in three years."— Washington Star.

Too Well Done.

"Yes, dear," continued the newly made husband as he gazed despondingly at the steak that was broiled almost to a crisp, "you are very charming, and you do several things uncommonly well, but you don't know how to cook a steak."

"And yet, my love," answered the culprit with a becoming penitent air, "you said yourself that it was very well done."

It is scarcely necessary to add that the cyclone was averted.

Sensitive Plants.

There are plants so sensitive that if when standing by them you should suddenly put up your umbrella or sunshade it would be quite sufficient to cause them instantly to close together their leaflets and turn down their leaf stalks, just as if they were startled, and alarmed by the movement. Indeed, on a sunny day when the temperature is sufficiently high you need not make even so decided a movement; merely your shadow coming in contact with their leaves will often cause them to fall slightly.—Strand Magazine.

THE LITTLE THINGS.

The little things in life I love—
A song, a word, a smile,
An hour of happy blue above,
'Neath which I walk the while.
For at the best, tho' be our state
The peasant's or the king's,
This life is a mosaic great,
But made from little things.

Vast Increase In Agriculture

Within the next few weeks the farmers in Canada will be engaged upon the work of seeding the greatest acreage which has even been given over to the production of grain in the history of the Dominion. While statistics portraying the actual increase in area will not be given until the federal authorities at Ottawa compile in the late spring the reports from their correspondents on work done, the findings of investigations which have already been completed point clearly to the conclusion that the additions throughout the Western provinces, at least, will be very considerable in extent. Officials of the Canadian Northern recently finished a survey of fall plowing along the lines of the company in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The figures which were sent in, of course, deal with the C.N.R. only, but they may be taken as an indication of the manner in which the farmers west of the Great Lakes have responded to the call for a greater production of foodstuffs in Canada. Five hundred and thirty-nine agents contributed to the report in order that it would be thoroughly representative of the territory served.

Altogether, along the Canadian Northern lines in the prairie provinces the increase may be averaged at forty per cent. The figures give a total acreage plowed last fall of 6,181,376 acres. This is an increase of 1,766,108 acres over the preceding year. Figured at 21.38 bushels to the acre—the flat average of the yield in western provinces in 1914 for wheat, oats and barley—the grain yield from fall-plowed lands along the Canadian Northern in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta would be 132,157,818.88 bushels. On the yield basis of last year the increased acreage would produce 37,759,389.04 bushels. But 1914 was an off year for grain production in the west, and that average will probably be exceeded in 1915.

The largest acreage for any one station was reported from Star City, in the black loam district in Northern Saskatchewan. It was given as 110,660 and the increase over last year as 40 per cent. Naisberry, close to Star City, reported 75,000 acres. Melfort, nearby on the same line, claimed an increase of 100 per cent. Rosthern reported an increase of 300 per cent over last year. Duck Lake's 50,000 acres is an increase of 76 per cent. To the north, Hafford, on the new line connecting the cities of Prince Albert and North Battleford, reported 72,000 acres an area, 95 per cent greater than in 1913. To the south, in Saskatchewan, Delisle, on the Saskatoon-Calgary line, reported 88,000 acres, which is an increase of 30 per cent. Marshall, on the main line toward the Alberta boundary returned 50,000 acres. In Alberta the town of Hanna reported 40,000 acres, an increase of 20 per cent. Stettler in the central portion of the province, gave 30,000 an increase of 20 per cent. Craigmyle, close to Calgary reported 40,000 acres, and Delia, the next station 47,000, which is an increase of 200 per cent. Two towns on the same line, closer to the Saskatchewan Alberta line—Cereal and Chinook—report 15,000 acres each. In the former the increase is given at 1400 per cent, while at the latter place there was no fall plowing done in 1913.

Even in the older-settled parts of the West, there are gratifying increases. At Morris, in Manitoba, the acreage is given at 30,000 and the increase 35 per cent. At Gladstone, there are 20,000 acres, which represent a 25 per cent increase. At Spirling in the Carman subdivision, the agent reports 40,000 which is an increase of 15 per cent. At Dunrea in the Hartney District the figures jump to 70,000 which represents an increase of 70 per cent. Kipling reports 75,000, an increase of 90 per cent. As these are the conspicuous returns only, it is apparent that Canada is doing her allotted part of the task which is at present confronting the Empire.

VIRGINIA GIRL GAINED 15 POUNDS

Was So Weak and Thin, Thought She Was Going Into Decline. Tells How Vinol Helped Her.

Norfolk, Va.—"My health was very poor. I suffered from nervousness, had no appetite and was so thin, I thought I was going into a decline, and nothing I took seemed to help me until one day a friend came into my office and told me if I would take Vinol it would do me lots of good.

"I have now taken six bottles and have gained fifteen pounds: have a good appetite and can eat anything. It is wonderful what Vinol has done for me in building up my health. My own friends hardly know me and when anyone comes into my office the first thing I begin to talk about is Vinol."—MATTIE DENNING, Norfolk, Va.

The testimonial letters which we are continually publishing prove the value of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, and what it did for Miss Denning it will do for any thin, tired, nervous, run-down, worn-out man or woman.

If we can induce you to try a bottle of Vinol as a body-builder and strength-creator, and you do not find it is all we claim, we will return your money on demand.

"WAR"

• • •

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER the Authoress.

Conrad continued eagerly: "One's heart beats higher, one's pulse quickens, there awakes—that is the peculiar ecstasy of it all—there wakes the mad delight in battle, the ferocious hatred of the foe, the blazing passion for one's menaced fatherland—and on we rush, and hewing down becomes a mad revelry. One feels as if transported to another world. Ordinary feelings have changed to their opposites. Life itself is our prey; to slay is the law. The only motives that do not disappear in the conflict are magnificent heroism and self-sacrifice. To this add powder, smoke, and battle-cries. It is a sensation unparalleled—there is nothing like it—except perhaps a lion or tiger hunt, when one stands face to face with maddened beasts."

"Yes," Frederick added, "while man was still subject to attack from two or four-legged savages, to protect his life by killing the latter was a delight. The hereditary thirst for blood has not completely died out of civilized man, and since in Europe we have no longer beast nor barbarism to fight, we create an artificial enemy for ourselves, and the hunt goes thus: You here have red coats, and over there blue coats. Three claps, and presto, the red coats are changed into tigers and the blue coats become wild beasts to them. Again attention! Trumpets blow, one, two, three; drums beat; now begin; eat each other up. And if 100,000 such beasts eat each other up at X——, history records the famous X—— battle. Then the men who clapped their hands assemble about a green table in X——, lay down their maps, rearrange the frontier lines, haggle over who shall pay the bills, sign a paper which figures in history as the Peace of X——. The magicians clap again three times, and order the red coats and the blue coats: 'Now, dear children, embrace each other again as men and brethren.'"

CHAPTER V.

The Prussian troops were quartered everywhere about Grumitz, and the villagers were possessed with terror of the hated enemy, whose name became the synonym of every evil, and when the quartermaster approached to arrange quarters for his men they trembled as if the wolves were upon them. An occasional patriot sent a rifle bullet from some place of hiding after the foe, and his quick execution forced the villagers to suppress their hatred. Much to the surprise of the villagers, when they quartered the soldiers, they found the "enemy" was usually a very good-natured friendly lot, who punctually paid their bills.

I was sitting one morning near a big window in the library, which gave a wide view over the surrounding country. A troop of horsemen suddenly came in sight. "Prussians coming for quarters," I thought. Seizing the glass, I saw a group of possibly ten surrounding what appeared to be a hunter. If the prisoner had fired upon them there was little hope for him. I ran to the library and called my aunt and father.

"The Prussians, the Prussians!" I exclaimed breathlessly.

"The devil take them," my father exclaimed, while Aunt Marie rushed to make final preparations for the enemy, whom for several days she had expected.

"Where is Otto?" I asked. "We must warn him from speaking out his hatred of Prussia."

"Otto went out early to hunt birds. And how fine the youngster did look in his new hunting-suit. How proud I was of him."

The house was suddenly all in an uproar of loud voices and hasty steps. Franz the footman, pale with terror, flew into the room, and as though he were shouting "Fire!" called out "The Prussians, the Prussians, and, your Excellency, they have a prisoner—your son—who is said to have fired on them."

My father, with an exclamation of alarm, hurried down the steps. His heart stood still. The situation before us was terrible; I dared not think of the conclusion. But it was soon all over, for father returned with Otto with the explanation that in crossing the field he had stumbled and accidentally discharged his rifle. They had seized him, but learning who he was, had brought him to the house, and had accepted his explanation.

"It would be impossible for an honorable soldier, and the son of a soldier, to act as an assassin," they said, as they released him.

Later, I asked Otto if he was really innocent.

He answered, "I hope in the future to have plenty of opportunities to shoot a few of them, but never would I be guilty without offering my own breast to their bullets."

"Bravo, my boy," cried my father. But I did not share the enthusiasm. Words which tossed about and cheapened human life so boastfully had a most repellent sound to me.

We had as our self-invited guests two colonels and six subordinate officers, and with the cellar full of provisions, and comfortable beds, they were treated with every courtesy given to friends.

The Prussians bore distinguished names, and among them was a Prince Henry of the house of Ruess. Our enemies seemed to be very courtly gentlemen, with the most approved conventional manners of the best society. It is true that in these days we do not war with Huns and Vandals, but it is slightly hard to realize that the other side can possibly stand for the same civilization as our own.

"O God, thou who protectest those who trust in Thee, hear us as we pray for Thy gracious mercy. Protect us from the rage of our enemies, that we may praise Thee to all eternity."

The priest in Grumitz prayed thus daily. Certainly these elegant, gentlemanly fellows could hardly be considered as raging enemies as they took th ladies in to dinner. Perhaps God had this time listened to the prayers of the other side, and had protected them from our "rage"—or perhaps it was the needle-guns which had done it. At any rate it was a queer pious jumble to me. As we chatted with the stately colonel and the tall lieutenant, mention of war was shunned with the greatest caution on both sides. The strangers were treated as though they were guests travelling for pleasure and the real state of things was never hinted at—that they were chartered with us as conquerors.

The gentlemen enjoyed the soft summer moonlight on the terraces—the same moonlight which so lately had lighted up the mouldering corpses against the churchyard wall. And under this soft light the Prussian Prince Henry lost his heart to our beautiful Rosa; and to our astonishment my father made no objection, so the engagement was announced to the family.

I had believed that my father's hatred of the Prussians would make it impossible for him to accept one as a son-in-law, but he separated altogether the individual from the nation. We often hear people protest: "I hate them as a nation, not as individuals." This is quite as sensible as if one were to say: "I hate wine as a drink, but the drops I swallow with pleasure." But popular sayings are not expected to be rational.

Perhaps the possibility of an alliance for his daughter with a princely house flattered my father, at any rate he said yes with apparent pleasure.

But Otto rebelled at the idea: "How would it be should war break out again, and I were obliged to chase my brother-in-law out of the country?" However, he was soon converted to the famous theory of the difference between nations and individuals. I confess I never could understand it.

How quickly happy surroundings swallow up misery, and how soon are catastrophes forgotten! Gradually the pictures of terrors which I had experienced in the few previous weeks faded from my thought. I realized this and my conscience pricked me at times when the laments of the villagers reached us. Many had lost their worldly goods, others their friends; reports came of financial troubles, and it was even rumored that the cholera had shown itself among the Prussian troops. One case had also occurred in our village, but we comforted ourselves that it was of no consequence.

"Do you realize, Martha," Rosa said to me one day, "what a blessed thing this war has been to me—though I know it is something terrible. I should never have been so happy and met Henry, and he—where would he have found such a love as mine?"

"I wish I might think it with you, Rosa, and believe that your two happy hearts might outweigh the many thousands of broken ones."

"Oh, we must not think of the individual losses when the war brings such great gain to the conquerors and the whole nation. You should listen to Henry. He says the Prussians have won a grand result, and the entire army is enthusiastic for its generals. This victory has done so much for German civilization and commerce. He says the prosperity of Germany—I forget the word—its historical mission—but you should hear him talk about it."

"I should think he would have other matters than politics to talk with you."

"Oh, he does talk about everything, and I sympathize with it all and am so proud and happy that he has played such a glorious part in this war for his King and country."

"And carries you off as his booty," I replied.

The future son-in-law quite suited my father, and certainly he was a fine young fellow. He gave him his blessing with all manner of protests.

"My dear Roess, you suit me exactly as a man, as a soldier, and as a prince"—this he repeated in manifold expressions—"but as a Prussian officer, I maintain the right—family matters aside—to wish that Austria may fully revenge herself for this victory which you have snatched from her. Separating politics from personal questions, I hope I may live to see my son take the field against Prussia. Old as I am I would be willing to accept a command to fight William I and humble the arrogant Bismarck. I acknowledge the military readiness of the Prussian army and its strategic leaders, and would think it quite a matter of course if in the next campaign your own battalion were compelled to storm our capital city, and even burn down your father-in-law's house, in short——"

I interrupted: "In short, your confusion of sentiments is frightful—your inconsistencies are as intermingled as are the infusoria in a drop of putrid water. You fill one with repugnance through your paradoxical conceptions—to hate the whole and love its parts; to think one ways as a citizen and the opposite as a man. No, let us have it the one way or the other. I prefer the savage Indian's way. He never thought of anybody as an individual, but wanted the scalp of every member of the other tribe."

"Martha, my daughter, do not give vent to such savage sentiments, they are quite unsuitable to the times, which have grown so refined and humane."

"Rather say that our boasted civilization is a lie upon our inherited barbarisms. What right have we to claim to be humane until we cast off the savage custom of making war? Do you call your speech to Prince Henry sensible where you assure him that you love him as a son-in-law and hate him as a Prussian; value him highly as a man and detest him as a lieutenant-colonel; that you bless him as a father and in the same breath grant he has the right to fire upon you if necessary? Forgive me, father, but can you talk thus and call it common sense?"

"What did you say? I did not catch a word." The convenient deafness had come on again at the right moment.

After a few days the guests departed, and all was quiet again at Grumitz.

The marriage of my two sisters had been postponed until October. Prince Henry planned to quit the service, having earned sufficient honors in the glorious campaign. He would retire on his laurels and on his estates.

The two pairs of lovers parted painfully but joyfully, content in the certainty of their future happiness.

Certain happiness? There is in reality no such thing, least of all in times of war, for then misfortunes swarm thick as gnats, and the chance that one may be standing on the spot which may be spared the descending scourge is at best a small one.

True, the war was over and peace concluded. A word had been enough to let loose all the terrors of hostility, and a word should also suffice to relieve us from the results. Hostilities were suspended, but what can suspend the persistent consequences? The seed of future war had been sown, and the fruit of the war just closed ripened still further into want, demoralization, and plague. To stop and think about it was now useless, for the cholera was raging throughout the country.

One morning the Vienna paper, opened at breakfast, brought the following item:

The cholera death-rate increases. The military and civil hospitals report many cases of genuine Asiatic cholera. Every measure is taken to stop its spread.

I was about to read these lines aloud, when Aunt Marie exclaimed, as she read a letter from a friend in the neighborhood:

"Dreadful! Betty writes that in their house two persons have died of the cholera, and that her husband is ill."

"Your Excellence, the schoolmaster wishes to speak to you."

"Count Althaus, I must report that the school is closed, for yesterday two children were taken ill and to-day they are dead."

"The cholera!" we cried out.

"There is no doubt. There is great terror in the village, and the doctors who have come from the town say that the horrible disease has taken hold of the entire population."

We looked round in dismay, pale and speechless. Here, again, was the frightful enemy, Death; and each in turn saw his bony hand stretched over the head of some loved one.

"We must go away!" said Aunt Marie.

"Where?" replied the schoolmaster, "for the disease is spreading everywhere."

"Across the frontier."

"Across the frontier——"

"But quarantine will be set up, and you will not be allowed to pass."

"Oh, how terrible! will they prevent people leaving a region of pestilence?"

"Certainly. Healthy neighborhoods must protect themselves against infection."

"Then we will remain and await God's will," answered my father with deep emotion. "You, Marie, who believe so strongly in destiny, I cannot understand why you should wish to run away. You say the fate of every one will overtake him. Yet I would rather have you and the children go away. Otto, you must eat no more fruit."

"I will write to Bresser," said Frederick, "and have him send us disinfectants."

What happened immediately after this I cannot tell in detail, for this breakfast scene was the last I found in the red book. I must depend upon my memory for the next few day's happenings.

Terror possessed us all. The sword of Damocles hung over each head, and is it not a horrible thought to feel that one's friends and even oneself should be so helplessly and uselessly destroyed? In such a case to stop thinking is the better part of valor.

Flee? The idea possessed me on account of the safety of Rudolf. My father insisted upon the family taking flight, and the following day was decided upon. He meant to remain and face the danger with the villagers. Frederick declared he would remain, and I would not leave his side.

The two girls, Otto, and Rudolf, were to go with Aunt Marie—but whither? That was not settled at once. At first to Hungary—and then farther. The young people busily flew to their preparations and packing. To die just as life was beginning to unfold its happiness to them would be a tenfold death.

There will aso be several articles of value for disposition, among which will be one thoroughbred Holstein calf and a fine parrot with cage. This parrot is said to talk in a lively manner so come and hear him express his views on the live question of the day.

MEN'S MASS MEETING

The Mass Meeting of Men, at the Griffin Opera House, yesterday afternoon at, 4.15, which was addressed by Bishop Brewing of Toronto, drew out quite a number of citizens, and soldiers of the 39th Battalion. Mr. W. B. Riggs acted as chairman, and opened the meeting with a song service, after which the chairman in a few words introduced the speaker of the afternoon. The Bishop took for his subject "Courage" and delivered an excellent address, his remarks being mostly directed to the soldiers. At the conclusion the National Anthem was sung, and the Benediction was pronounced by the Rev. A. M. Hubly.

AN INQUEST OPENED

On Saturday afternoon at Tickell & Sons undertaking establishment, an inquest was opened upon the remains of Mr. Matthew Swelzer, the aged man who died at the House of Refuge. An inquest was necessary because the man died suddenly at a public institution. Dr. Yeomans, coroner, presided over the investigation. The jurymen selected were Messrs. R. Greatrix, E. T. Cherry, A. Langfield, J. B. Archibald, R. King, Jas. Thompson, Wm. Day, A. F. Lazier, J. Colden and P. Harrison. Mr. R. Greatrix was chosen foreman. After being sworn in the jury viewed the remains, and an adjournment for the taking of evidence was made until Wednesday evening. The body was then prepared for burial and shipped to the northern part of the county for interment.

FLAG DEDICATED

A SERIOUS CHARGE

Two young men who reside in the country, were on Saturday afternoon arrested here on a rather serious charge, which was preferred on behalf of a young girl. The accused were to-day liberated on bail which was fixed at $3,000, namely $1,000 in themselves, and $2,000 in other securities. The preliminary trial was fixed for Tuesday next, April 6th.

CASE DISPOSED OF

Beartice Godfrey and Nellie Bradley, who were placed under arrest a week ago on the charge of vagrancy and being common street walkers, and pleaded guilty to the charge, were this morning before the magistrate for sentence. The Godfrey girl was sent to the Reformatory, and the Bradley girl was given in charge of the Salvation Army officials, who promised to look after her.

A FINE PARADE

On Sunday morning the members of the 39th Battalion, which is quartered in this city, attended divine service in several of the churches of the city. The parade, which was headed by the Fifteenth Regimental Band, was certainly most creditable. The men, looking neat and soldierly, marched with precision, presenting a fine appearance. They attended services at St. Michael's, St. Thomas', St. Andrew's and Bridge street churches.

G. T. R. ENGINEER DEAD

Mr. William Marks, a former well known resident of this city, who for some years was a capable and trusty engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, died at Toronto on Friday last, as the result of cancers. Deceased was 65 years of age. Mr. Marks was well and favorably known in this city, where he resided for many years. Of late years the deceased had been engineer on the local G. T. R. train which arrives here at 5.50 p. m. An aged widow and family survives. A member of the family is Mr. John Marks, the noted hockeyist. The remains have been interred in Toronto.

DIED IN MONTREAL

Mr. George Holmes, a comparatively young person who was well and most favorably known in this city, where he was born, died at an early hour on Saturday morning from an attack of pneumonia. Deceased, who was 29 years of age, was a son of the late Mr. Joseph Holmes. George was for some time connected with the Hotel Quinte and later conducted a hotel at Shannonville. Of late he had been a clerk in a hotel at Montreal. He was ill but a short time. A wife but no family survives. The remains, accompanied by his brother, Mr. Harry Holmes, arrived here, and were taken to the home of Mr. F. Rutherford, Alexander street, an uncle of the deceased, where Mrs. Holmes is residing.

MANY ATTENDED FUNERAL

Many citizens on Saturday afternoon attended the obsequies of the late Mrs. John Forin. At the residence services were conducted by Rev. E. C. Currie, pastor of John Street Presbyterian church, assisted by Rev. Mr. McLaren, relative of the deceased. Interment took place at Belleville cemetery. Many floral tributes were placed upon the casket. The bearers were Messrs. D. V. Sinclair, R. Tannahill, R. Templeton, S. Russell, A. McGinnis, and A. McLaren.

SOLDIERS ENTERTAINED

At the conclusion of the services in Christ Church last evening, many soldiers of the 39th Battalion who were in attendance, were entertained in the Parish Hall in connection with the church. The choir provided refreshments which were served, after which appropriate addresses of a brief nature were given by the rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, Col. Ponton, and Col. Preston, commanding officer of the 39th Battalion. Mr. H. McKay rendered a solo and appropriate hymns were sung. The affair was both inspiring and interesting.

SWELLS IN THE RANKS

THREE OLD CHUMS WENT WITH THE FIRST CONTINGENT.

Correspondent In Canadian Expeditionary Force Tells of the Meeting at Montreal of Hon. Richard Scott-Proctor, Tommy Dashwood, and a Nephew of the Earl of Wemyss, Old Rugby Boys.

"The Hon. Private Richard Scott-Proctor, No. 25,764, 14th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, Salisbury."

An orderly in the base postoffice, which is located on the first floor of a two-storey ancient shack in the town, picked up an envelope bearing the above address. He pondered over it.

"Well, what d'ye know about this?" said he, scratching his head. "That's the limit. Some day there'll be one addressed to Lord Arbuthnot or the Duke of Swansea. These Canadians are great kidders. Here, Bill, ever hear of this swank?" passing the letter to his brother sorter.

"Nope, must be a josh," said Bill, as he passed it on to another, who had just finished reading a fresh appeal from a widow who wanted a Canadian soldier-husband.

"Never heard of him," said this one. "It's not a lady's hand-writing, so he might be an honorable, but what the deuce is he a private for when there are so many commissions floating about?"

"Well, we'll send it to the 14th Battalion; they can josh him out there," said the man who made the discovery.

Just then Lieut. Murray, O.C. of the postal corps, came in.

"We've discovered another lord," said the sorters in chorus. "Ever hear tell of the Hon. Scott-Proctor, Mr. Murray?"

"Never have," said Mr. Murray. "I'll take care of the letter and will inform Col. Meighen about this fellow."

But Mr. Murray carried the letter to his office and placed it in another envelope, which he addressed to plain "Private Scott-Proctor." He did this by the request of Col. Meighen, who did not want the boys in the orderly room of the 14th to know that there was an "honorable" in their lines, especially in the ranks.

Yes, the Hon. Private Richard Scott-Proctor is a real private. He also is a real blood, one of the aristocracy, which has risen several notches in the estimation of the English people since the war began, so many of this class having gone to the front and fought and died for their country.

One day shortly after war was declared, an Englishman walked into a Montreal restaurant on St. Catherine street. It was a chair lunch. While devouring ham and eggs he was greeted by another.

"Is that you, Dick?" asked the newcomer. "What are you doing here of all places?"

"Tommy Dashwood, of all people in Montreal," said Scott-Proctor, shaking his friend's hand as though it were a pump-handle. Tommy Dashwood was the son of Sir Thomas Dashwood, an English baronet, a big man in the army.

"I'm just going back to enlist; taking the next boat," said Dashwood. "I'm waiting for money."

"So am I," said Scott-Proctor. "I just arrived two days ago on my through Canada to Australia. Let us go together."

After leaving the quick-lunch establishment they walked along St. Catherine street to Windsor. On the corner they ran into another pal. He was the nephew of the Earl of Wemyss. All these three had gone to the famous rugby college together and had not met each other for several years. The latter was also going home but after a little thought all decided to join the Royal Montreal Rifles, commanded by Lt.-Col. Burland. They entered the ranks, trained at Valcartier, came over in October with the regiment and went into camp on Salisbury plains. It is understood that Dashwood will take a commission in Kitchener's army, but the other two are going to remain with the 14th battalion.

Scott-Proctor wears a Zululand ribbon, having fought in the campaign of 1906. At that time he was a lieutenant in the Durham Light Infantry. One naturally wonders why he does not return to his regiment, but he has two good and sufficient reasons. One is the fact that he likes the Canadians and the other is that his uncle, the Duke of Buccleugh, bet him several pounds that he wouldn't stick to the ranks, but would be seeking something "soft" before the force left for France.

Cause and Result.

"Our dairyman's cows look dejected." "Maybe that is why our milk is so blue."—St. Paul Dispatch.

Young, but Accomplished.

Woman—Does that parrot swear? Dealer—Very prettily, mum, for so young a bird.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Good Advice.

William—I must speak, but I'm so flurried! James—Bill, collect yourself.—Baltimore American.

Queenly.

He—She's a thoroughly queenly woman. She—Yes, even her teeth have gold crowns.—Town Topics.

Roumanian.

"Roumanian" really means "Romanian," the country having been founded by descendants of the ancient Romans.

Stuck.

"I understand you are stuck on my new book." "Yes, I bought one."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Herculean.

"Pa, what is meant by herculean labor?" "Hooking a woman up the back, son."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Limited Popularity.

"Is Jones a popular fellow?" "Well, he is quite a favorite with himself."—Chicago Herald.

Favorable reports as to future industrial conditions of the country should have a tendency to relegate the "calamity howler" to much needed retirement.

OLD PLUM PUDDING BEST

A Recipe That Has Given Satisfaction For Many Years

As every good housekeeper knows, plum pudding must have time to "ripen" before it is served at the holiday dinner, or at the wedding feast, or whatever the "grand occasion" may be that calls for this festive dish.

An English recipe that has stood the test of years is as follows:

Wash one pound each, of seeded raisins and currants. Drain and dry perfectly dry, chop 1 pound of suet and rub with 4 tablespoons of flour. Blanch and chop one-half pound almonds, one-quarter pound citron (shaved in fine pieces), 3 teaspoons (each) of candied lemon and orange peel (cut fine). Mix all these with the suet and flour. Add the raisins and currants and 1 tablespoon of salt. Stir into this mixture 1 wine glass of cider, add 1 pound of dry fine breadcrumbs, mix and set away, covered with tight cover, for 36 hours.

When ready to boil the pudding add 8 eggs (well beaten), one-half cup of lemon juice and one-half pound of flour. Knead all together and fill well-buttered cans two-thirds full. Cover and boil or steam for 8 hours.

H. G. Wells, England's famous author, predicts that the naval war of the future will be a battle of submarines. That may be. It is hard to discount the future. In the present conflict, however, they would cut but a sorry figure in reducing the fortifications of the Dardanelles.

It is said that Roumania would enter the war in April. "Everybody's Doing It" should be a popular tune soon.

One of the pleasant things about vocational training is that it does not compel little boys to learn how to sew.

This year New Jersey will take up the proposal to tax bachelors. Why not consider a proposal to pension the married?

JAILED FOR TRADING WITH THE GERMANS

Canadian Agent of American Firm Described as Bird of Passage

LIVERPOOL, March 27.—George Arthur Gatehouse, sometime manager of the Montreal branch of Sloan & Co., cotton merchants, Philadelphia, was charged at Liverpool yesterday with trading with the enemy. The Crown Prosecutor described the case as serious. The prisoner came to England after the outbreak of the war, apparently to transmit cables for his firm from the Continent. While doing this, the Crown alleged, he had made elaborate preparations to sell a species of cotton, used for the manufacture of explosives, to German agents.

The prisoner was a Canadian by birth, and was arrested at a prominent Liverpool hotel when about to take passage across the Atlantic. The prosecuting solicitor admitted that if the prisoner's firm chose to sell goods as Americans they were within their rights, but when they send a representative here he was subject to the law of this country. The fact that the prisoner was a British subject made it all the worse.

The prisoner's advocate admitted that Gatehouse was a bird of passage, but he always passed between the same branches of the tree. He came here on his principal's written instructions and still believed he was authorized to do all he had done. The prisoner was remanded till Wednesday next, bail of five hundred pounds being taken.

Two hundred civilians have been executed by Austrian authorities for alleged offences against the state. Perhaps they ate too much.

Will Fight Crop Failure

Inexperienced Farmers of Alberta and Saskstchewan to be Given Farming Lessons

OTTAWA, March 29.—The Government it is understood has decided to teach the inexperienced farmers of Southern Alberta and Saskatoon how to produce crops in dry years. It is claimed that much of the failure in the drought-stricken areas, last year, was due to lack of knowledge on the part of many farmers.

F. P. Grisdale, of the Department of Agriculture, has been sent West to pick out 25 farms in southern Alberta and Saskatchewan and lease from the farm owners a number of acres, possibly up to fifty acres in some cases. These 25 farms will be scattered along the main line of the C.P.R. in the two provinces.

The Government will pay these farmers $5 per acre per annum, and the farmers will themselves work the land under the direction of the Government. The crops will be given the farmers in return for their labor, but the Government will reserve the right to take the grain for seed if necessary and will agree to pay five cents per bushel and more than the market value.

It is hoped by this experimental work that crop failures will be less frequent in future.

CANADIAN KILLED

Ontario Corporal Was Driving Car Which Overturned

LONDON, March 29.—While driving a car from Salisbury to Netheravon, Corporal William Campbell, of the Divisional Ammunition Corps, met with a fatal accident on Friday. Corporal Campbell is of Midland, Ontario. In taking a double bend on the road, the car overturned, pinning the driver's head to the ground, so that death was instantaneous. Lieutenants Frape and Warren, the other occupants of the car, escaped unhurt, though the former was thrown underneath. The latter jumped clear. At the inquest held Saturday at Salisbury, the verdict was accidental death.

HYDRANT BROKEN OFF BY AUTOMOBILE

An Accident Which Deprived Many on Front Street From Water Service—Car Considerably Damaged

At a few minutes before seven o'clock this morning an unfortunate accident occurred on Front street which had the effect of depriving users of water of their regular supply for a number of hours.

Mr. Walter Jones, of Trenton, a partner with Herrington & Jones, automobile liverymen, of that town, was proceeding to the city, and in turning off Bridge street on to Front Street, collided with the water works hydrant on Front street in front of the Merchants Bank. The result of the impact was that the hydrant was broken off on a level with the street pavement, causing the water to gush out in great quantities. Owing to the fact that the automobile was astride the broken hydrant, the flow of water did not ascend to any spectacular height. Immediately after the incident Jones reported the affair to the Police Station and city employees connected with the water works department were notified of the accident. The car was found to be over the broken hydrant and prevented the stream from shooting up in the air, but escaping water poured out upon the street. As soon as possible the water gates were closed between Bridge Street and Victoria Avenue, and every arrangement made to replace the broken hydrant. The task was not an easy one, owing to the fact that the street is paved. Workmen were placed at work and the installation of a new hydrant was accomplished this afternoon.

Mr. Jones, in his version of the affair, stated that he was en route to this city for a passenger and when he reached the corner of Bridge and Front streets, intended to proceed eastward up Bridge street, but on a sudden impulse decided to go up Front Street. He turned his car in that direction, but the turn was evidently too short, as the car came in contact with the hydrant, with the above result. The car— a Ford— was badly damaged, and was subsequently taken to a garage here for repairs. The outcome of the aaffir will be of interest to the city.

NEW YORK HERALD CALLS GERMEN SEAMEN MURDERERS

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, March 30.—Commenting editorially on the German torpedoing of the British steamer Falaba, and the heartless conduct of the submarine crew, laughing at the passengers struggling in the water, The Herald calls it "Kultur at its meridian," and says: "Great joy in the halls of Kultur. One hundred and eighteen non-combatants —some of them women—ruthlessly murdered on the high seas. It is the day." The World declares it is not war, but murder.

268 CANADIANS ARE DEAD OVER 500 IN HOSPITALS

Patricias With Other First Line Regiment Who Held the Ground Won at Neuve Chapelle Have Paid Dearly for "Never Budge" Tactics

OTTAWA, March 29.—Two hundred and sixty-eight Canadians have laid down their lives at the front for the Empire.

These are to-day's official figures, including the heavy casualty list which arrived Sunday. This list includes also those who died of sickness at Salisbury Plain. The wounded and invalids in hospitals in France and England are over five hundred, the Canadian honor roll is nearing one thousand. Sixty per cent. in a year is what the military officials estimated as the loss in men.

The heavy casualty list among the Princess Patricias received yesterday shows that that regiment has been again in the fight. It is believed that the recent deaths were incurred checking the furious counter-attacks of the Germans following the British victory at Neuve Chapelle. The Princess Pats, like the other British first line regiments, have all held the ground they so dearly won.

The growing casualty lists among the Canadian contingent also shows that they are in the heart of the fighting in Flanders though they have not participated in any of the big engagements.

Shooting U. S. Citizen Justified

Reports to Washington on Wounding of Montgomery in Bermuda

WASHINGTON, March 30.—Preliminary reports to the British Embassy in the case of the American citizen, George Montgomery, who was wounded by a British sentry at Hamilton, Bermuda, two weeks ago, have been given to the State Department.

The local official inquiry at Hamilton has not been concluded yet, and the State Department has not received its report from the American Consul at Hamilton, which was ordered by mail.

The British report contends that the act on the part of the sentry was "justifiable." Montgomery had in the boat with him a pilot or guide, and it is said that the fault lay entirely with the latter. The British Government report indicates that it is not of great importance who was responsible for approaching the prison at Bermuda, as everybody in the boat had been warned.

159 Canadians Physically Unfit

Party Sailed from England on Saturday on Steamer Megantic

LONDON, March 29.—A party of 159 men from the first contingent sailed on the Metagama Saturday for Canada in charge of Major Guy Marriott, of the 9th Battalion, with Lieutenant Mitchell, of the Record Office, as adjutant. For the most part the men have been found physically unfit, while there is a small element of undesirables.

Col. Frank Reid, with assistant officers, has been detailed to begin a vigorous weeding out process, as improved conditions at Shorncliffe lend themselves to the maintenance of stricter discipline. In fairness to the first contingent, it is only just to point out that numbers of men have suffered physical deterioration through the hardships endured at Salisbury Plain.

Third Brother in Family to Die

Pte. McMahon, Who Joined in Regina Has Friends in Kingston

KINGSTON, March 29.—Word was received in this today by Mr. W. Morrison, of 91 Rideau street, that his half brother, Private Thomas McMahon of No. 2 Company, Princess Pats, had been killed in action on March 19th.

Private McMahon was a prominent Orangeman, and belonged to local Lodge No. 316. He was also a member of the preceptory of the Black Knights of Ireland, and had taken the highest degrees in the order. He was in the Imperial Service before coming to Canada. He is the third brother to give up his life in the present war.

James and John were members of the Dublin Fusiliers and were killed in the early days. A nephew, W. Morrison, Jr., is with the 21st Battalion bugle band, and will go with the battalion overseas. Private McMahon enlisted at Regina. He came to Kingston from the Imperial army about ten years ago.

Brockville Family Equip Regiment

BROCKVILLE, March 29.—Speaking here to-night before an immense audience at the launching of a two days' campaign to raise $25,000 towards the Canadian Patriotic Fund, Hon. Arthur Meighen, Solicitor-General, announced that a Brockville family had made an offer of $100,000 to the Dominion Government to meet the expenses of equipping a Canadian regiment for overseas service. He did not mention names, but it was later learned that the magnificent contribution came from Mrs. G. Fulford, widow of Senator Fulford, and her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Hardy, and it is understood that it will be accepted by the Government. Mr. Hardy presided at to-nights meeting. Professor L. W. ("Trooper") Milloy was one of the speakers.

PLAN TO ENLARGE THE SENATE REJECTED

Bostock's Motion for Delay Was Carried in Upper Chamber—To Await Election—Tariff Resolution and War Credit Were Allowed Smooth Sailing

OTTAWA, March 30.—(Special)—In the Senate today on the Government's proposal to increase the Senate membership to 104 by bringing up the western group to 24 members, Senator Bostock, opposition leader, offered the same amendment as last year, that the increase in membership not take place until after the next general election, or at the same time as the Commons redistribution comes into effect. The amendment was carried by 27 to 16.

The tariff resolution was reported from the committee without amendment and the $100,000,000 war appropriation bill was given a second reading.

BULGARIA INTERCEPTS SHIPMENT OF ARTILLERY FOR CONSTANTINOPLE

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 30—A Havas Agency despatch from Athens says Turkey has authorized Von Der Goltz to offer Bulgaria certain territorial concessions in return for the continued neutrality of the latter. Geneva learns that Bulgaria is holding up shipments of artillery and ammunition destined for Constantinople.

It is reported in Geneva that the Italian troops at present stationed on the Swiss frontier have been ordered to the Tyrolese frontier where the Austrian troops have been concentrating during the past fortnight.

FRENCH BATTERY FIRE FORCES GERMANS TO RETIRE IN DISORDER

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 30.—This afternoon's official statement says: In the Champagne District a German aviator yesterday threw bombs on City of Rheims and wounded two persons. One projectile fell on the Cathedral.

A well directed artillery fire from a French battery forced the Germans to retire in disorder from the village of Jendicourt, to the northeast of St. Mihiel. At all other points the day passed quietly. No infantry engagements took place.

SUGAR CAMPS NOT SO BUSY LATELY

SHERBROOKE, March 29.—The maple syrup industry, which opened in full swing during the week, got a set back by the cold wave which struck the district towards the end of the week. The farmers, who have large orchards, report that the sap run well for a few days, and that an extra quality of syrup was turned out. Syrup was selling from $1 to $1.20 per gallon, and sugar at 10 cents per lb on the market on Saturday.

VOTES FOR WOMEN REFUSED IN MANITOBA

WINNIPEG, March 30.—(Special) —Prorogation of the Manitoba Legislature is expected to take place on Thursday of this week. The opposition motion for the extension of the franchise to women was voted down today. The public accounts committee has concluded the taking of evidence in the investigation into the new parliament buildings contract and will present its report to the House tomorrow.

DRASTIC MEASURES TO PROHIBIT USE OF INTOXICANTS IN CLUBS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 30.—Prohibition as drastic as that prevailing in Russia today faces the United Kingdom. Press discussions of the letter sent by David Lloyd-George to the Shipowners Federation competes successfully in point of interest with the news of the sinking of the British liner Falaba by a German submarine with the loss of more than a hundred lives.

Employers are backing what Mr. Lloyd-George terms "root and branch action," even to the extent of promising to seal their own wine cellars and prohibit the use of intoxicants at their clubs, while labor leaders are equally anxious for the institution of some prohibitory measure.

Great Britain is smouldering in anger over the torpedoing by a German submarine of the steamships Falaba and Aguila, but confidence is expressed that the latest outbursts of under-sea activity will have no effect on the movements of British ships.

GERMAN SUBMARINES CAUGHT IN TRAPS

Bodies of 30 Germans Found in Craft Held by Steel Nets—Scotch Fishermen Die to Sink Ship

LONDON, March 30.—(Special.)—The effectiveness of the steel submarine traps which have been put down to guard British rivers and harbors has been shown by the fact that two German submarines have been caught in the Firth of Forth. In addition a third has been sunk off the coast of Haddingtonshire and a fourth was rammed last Wednesday, disabled, captured and towed into Leith, where the crew were taken prisoners.

No description of these nets can be given and no information of their effectiveness has been allowed to go forth by cable, but at this date, since King George himself has inspected one of the captured submarines and it is talked about freely, no harm can come from letting the world know of it.

The first of the submarines, one of the very large type, was caught in the net of the Firth of Forth, which held it at the bottom until it was found by inspectors. Engineers and divers with great dredges went to work and succeeded in lifting the machine and towing it to a dock.

When the hatches were finally opened an investigation showed 29 dead German sailors and their officer. In addition there were four Scotch fishermen. Today the names of those men stand very high in their native land.

It was apparent that the submarine, bound on a voyage of destruction up the Firth, came upon the men fishing. She took them prisoners and ordered them to steer their craft safely up to a point where they could accomplish their mission.

It has been asked: "Did the fishermen, knowing of the traps, the huge steel nets stretched here and there, deliberately steer the submarine into one of them?" They were caught and they died.

LOOK FINE AFTER MONTH OF FIGHTING

FORT WILLIAM, March 30.—Special—Lieut.-Col. J. J. Carrick, M.P., of the Canadian Eyewitness staff, in a private cable says:

"A Canadian division, after one month in the trenches, has just come out for a rest. They are all looking fine, and their total casualties have been small."

This is understood to refer to the Eighth Battalion, which includes Winnipeg, Port Arthur and Fort William troops.

PICTON HAS SENT 109

Farewell to 50 Men Who Leave to Join the Third Contingent

PICTON, March 30.—(Special)—Picton was practically all on the streets yesterday to bid farewell to 50 men of the 16th Battalion. Headed by the Citizens' Band and escorted by school children carrying flags, and by the Home Guard, they paraded to the station and left at 9 a.m. for Belleville to join the third contingent mobilizing there. This makes 109 men to enlist from here, leaving 15 at the Armouries to form the nucleus of a fourth contingent.

Accident to Father Shocks Son to Death

George Pilkey Fearfully Gored by Bull—His Boy Had Blood-Poisoning

SARNIA, March 30.—Special — George Pilkey, a well-known farmer, residing in Moore township, near Sarnia, was terribly gored by an angry bull yesterday, and his seventeen-year-old son, William, died a couple of hours later from blood-poisoning and the shock caused by his father's injuries. Several days ago William cut his finger; blood-poisoning set in and his condition grew steadily worse. George Pilkey, William's father, left the house and went out to the barn to lead a bull to the watering trough. He took the animal out of the stable and was leading it across the barnyard when it broke loose from the nose ring halter and turned on him. Before he could escape the animal had knocked him to the ground. As he attempted to roll away the bull went at him again and ran its horn into his side, goring him frightfully. Finally the bull turned and left him lying on the ground.

The accident could not be kept from his son, who, in his low condition, died shortly afterward, more, it is believed, from shock than from blood-poisoning. Pilkey will pull through, if complications do not set in, but he is seriously injured.

Keep 50,000 Canadians in Firing Line

If War Office Needs More, What is Necessary Will be Voted

OTTAWA, March 30.—Special—"It is proposed to keep 50,000 Canadians in the firing line throughout the whole year if necessary", was the announcement of General Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, when the war appropriation bill was passed by Parliament last evening. "If the British War Office decides that this number should be increased to 75,000 or more, this will be done, and more money will be required."

PROVIDE FOR PRISONERS OF WAR ON SHORE

British Government Remove Three Ships Used for Interning Germans

LONDON, March 30.—(Special)—Three of the nine ships utilized by the British Government as "prison ships" for the internment of prisoners of war, at a cost of nearly $500,000 a month, have now been taken off, and it is confidently expected that all the others will be vacated by the end of April, and all prisoners provided for on shore. The number of prisoners on board those still in the service is as follows: Ascania 1400, Scotian 1100, Lake Manitoba 1200, Saxonia 2300, Ivernia 1600 and Royal Edward 1200.

MAN MUCH WANTED ON FRAUD CHARGES

ST. CATHARINES, March 30.—Special—Wanted in St. Catharines, Woodstock, Ingersoll, Niagara Falls and Thorold for passing bogus cheques, Alfred Foster, a well-educated Englishman, has been arrested under the Mann White Slave Act at Waterbury, Conn., for having taken Lee Sherwood out of the country by admitting to the authorities there that his presence was desired in Canada. He was brought here by Chief of Police Green and remanded for a week.

OBJECT TO CONTINUANCE OF PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL

Strike Proposed

But The Management Stopped the Scheme and Paid Men off

Twelve cornice-makers at the Pedlar Factory, Oshawa, decided to strike on Monday at noon unless given the full day of 10 hours, the men having been working eight hours since Christmas. The management learning of the action the men proposed to take, forestalled the strike by presenting each man with his pay envelope shortly before the noon hour with the order that their services would no longer be required.

Action to recover $1,400 from defendant on account of his stock in plaintiff company, with interest from date of call, or if defendant found not a shareholder payment by him of his proportionate share of all liabilities and expenses incurred by the individual plaintiffs in the promotion, organization and conduct of said company, etc. At trial the action was dismissed with costs. Appeal argued and dismissed with costs.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

LAST OF THE STAR COURSE.

The closing of the Star Course was marked by a large audience, even when compared to other evenings, and undoubtedly the performance was worthy of it. Burt McKinnie, bass; J. Allen Grubb, tenor; Mrs. Tekla McKinnie, soprano; Rose Heidenreich, contralto, and Miss Marguerite Day, pianist, form a quintet hard to duplicate. Every number, their encores, and especially the last part of the entertainment, the second act from the opera, "Martha" gained special favor. Among the many pleasing encores, there were a few that made good hits, —the two encores of the "Brigand," "Chip of the Old Block," and "Let us be Happy Together," from "Sound Argument," were in themselves exceedingly humorous, but Mr. McKinnie's acting made them irresistible.

Miss Day gave an exact representation of an old-time music-box.

The programme was:—

"Greeting to Spring" .. .. Strauss
Quartette.
"Sound the Alarum" ....
Mr. Grubb.
"Bonnie Sweet Bessie, the Maid of Dundee,"
Mrs. McKinnie.
"The Battle Eve" .. .. Bineere
Duet—Messrs. Grubb and McKinnie.
Three Chinese Songs ....
.........Amy Woodford Finden
Rose Heidenreich
"The Brigand" .. .. Spense
Mr. McKinnie.
"Swing Song," from Bernica.
Duet—Mrs. McKinnie, Mr. Grubb
Extract from "Regiletto."
Quartette.
Piano Solo—A Mediaeval Coronation.
Miss Day.
"Martha".

At the conclusion of the programme Mr. Hess announced that over two hundred tickets had been ordered for next year's Star Course.

BELLEVILLE BRANCH OF THE CANADIAN PATRIOTIC ASSOCIATION

At the meeting held last evening at the Headquarters of the Campaign, a large number were present. After discussing the matter it was on motion decided to discontinue the further active canvass for funs by the organized committees, but that further funds which would be paid by the citizens can be sent sent to R. Tannahill, Esq., Manager of the Bank of Montreal, Treasurer of the Local Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Association or to any of the managers of the other banks in the city who would receive the various contributions and remit same to the Treasurer from time to time as received. All persons who have not contributed are expected to contribute whatever they can afford and these sums can be paid directly to the gentlemen above stated. These means will insure that every cent that is contributed will go to the benefit of the funds without any deduction. It was also decided that the public should not be asked to contribute to entertainments or any other form of giving indirectly to the Canadian Patriotic Fund, that all funds should be voluntarily paid by the contributor without deductions for any expenses so that the full benefit of the contribution should be had and received by the Funds. The Public will, therefore, take notice that they will not be asked, in so far as the Patriotic Fund is concerned, for contributions indirectly. This is not intended to deter the ladies of the Red Cross and Supply Committee or other ladies who are undertaking to assist in sending the necessaries and comforts to the men at the front. What with the present amount subscribed and to be paid in and the amount that should be voluntarily subscribed by those who have not already given there should be no further call to support this fund from this Municipality until the end of this year at the earliest unless some unforseen catastrophe overtakes us which does not seem possible at the present time.

The articles that were to be disposed of last evening, upon consideration were left to a Committee consisting of Messrs. W. Carnew, L. R. Terwilligar, R. Tannahill and D. J. Fairfield to dispose of at the most opportune time and to the best advantage. This arrangement was made with the unanimous approval of all present.

The Treasurer and Staff of six assistants is preparing a statement of the receipts of all moneys paid into the fund from the time of its institution and this statement, together with the present contributions will be published at an early date. The Public, however, are assured that those who have not contributed to this fund can do so by making payment to any one of the Managers of the Banks here and such funds will be acknowledged as heretofore through the press by Mr. Tannahill, the Treasurer.

The Committee acknowledge with many thanks the voluntary provision of their Headquarters by the Belleville Club, the valuable contribution of the telephone number 30,000 by the Bell Telephone Company and the splendid services received there from. The free light and fine fixtures provided by the Trenton Electric and Water Company, the chairs and tables by Tickell & Sons Co., the kindly services of the students of the Ontario Business College and the many other services freely and voluntarily given to assist in the undertaking.

Soldiers Not Specified in New License Law

Liberals Charge That Reference to Soldiers Existed in Bill in Original Form, but Has Been Dropped

Mr. Hanna's Change of Front

"If it doesn't happen as a matter of cordial agreement, then it ought to happen anyway, and our bill when it comes down will have ample provision and will see to it that men in the King's uniform as long as this war lasts shall not be found drinking at the bar or other places where drinks are served, or will not be found buying it by the bottle in shops in Ontario."—Hon. W. J. Hanna in introducing license law amendments, March 23 (Mail and Empire report.)

"The soldiers are not mentioned in the bill. The bill takes power to prohibit the sale to any class under any circumstances if it should appear to be desirable, and I should think that would fairly satisfy the desires of the member of Centre Huron. I think there is no provision that was referred to in introducing the bill to the House that is not amply taken care of in the bill as it is printed and distributed. In the drafting of the bill and passing it through the Legal Department there is provided in the bill, but not in the language used by me in the House, ample powers to do everything indicated, and to do it better and in more acceptable form than the literal language used by me in the House."—Hon. Mr. Hanna in the Legislature yesterday.

Just what was contained in the bill to amend the liquor license act introduced by Hon. W. J. Hanna into the Legislature last week formed an interesting subject of discussion on the orders of the day being called in the Legislature yesterday. The bill had only been printed for distribution a short time before the Rouse met, and Mr. William Proudfoot (Centre Huron) said that the bill did not carry out the explanation made by the Provincial Secretary when moving the first reading of his bill. Mr. Proudfoot said the bill as printed did not contain any mention of prohibiting the sale of liquor to soldiers in uniform.

Mr. Hanna replied that the bill contained an ample provision to cover the sale of liquor to any class.

Mr. Proudfoot wanted to know what clause.

"Clause 9, sub-section 'B'," replied Mr. Hanna.

Mr. Proudfoot protested that the bill as printed was not the one introduced, that a material change had been made and asked for the ruling of the Speaker.

"On what?" asked the Provincial Secretary.

"On the matter that has been brought up. This is not the bill that was introduced."

"I submit it is not," said Mr. Rowell, taking part in the discussion.

"The bill has in it every provision that we suggested to the House," declared Mr. Hanna, and while perhaps not in the language he used, he added it would no doubt suit the purpose better.

Bill Had Been Changed

Mr. Rowell said that when the bill was not available from the printer the Provincial Secretary had sent word to his office that he might see a draft at the office of the Chief Clerk of the License Department. He did not have it, but had sent it to the Law Clerk, where he said it was. "In that draft was a provision dealing expressly with the soldiers. That clause is not in the bill. It was in the bill which my hon. friend (Mr. Hanna) gave on the first reading to the House."

"We are protesting," continued Mr. Rowell, "against the Government dealing with a bill in the custody of the House."

Mr. Hanna said at the time the bill was introduced its terms had not been settled by the Legal Department.

Pressed for his ruling, Speaker Jamieson said there was no actual bill before the House. "The bill was introduced in blank."

Premier to the Defence

Premier Hearst then took a hand in the debate. "We are not going into a discussion as to recollection of the occurrence," said he. "My recollection is that the bill was introduced in blank. A blank sheet of paper was handed in. This is done every day."

The matter was then disposed of, but will likely be heard of again on the second reading of the bill.

BRAZILIAN TRACTION.— There have been, during the week, rumors current anent the reduction or passing of the Brazilian dividend. These rumors may or may not have been inspired by "bear" operators in the stock, but in any event, I am not disposed to place overmuch credence in them. Considerable time has yet to elapse before the directors declare the next dividend which is payable, and it is unlikely that conditions will become worse than they have been during the past few months, during which time Brazilian Traction has made regular dividend payments. It is, of course, not impossible that the directors should see fit to temporarily reduce the dividend, but even suppose such drastic action was taken, the present price of the shares should discount a reduction of one per cent. or even two per cent.

Though the 1914 report has not yet been issued the net earnings of the company are officially announced as 1,927,578 milreis, an increase of 2,353,681 milreis, which increase is equal to about $862,440, at the present rate of 13 7/16d. per milreis. Incidentally it might be mentioned that the expiration of the Brazilian moratorium is tending to improve Brazilian Exchange, which is now close to its recent high level.

A RAGTIME WAR

The following are extracts from an interesting letter received by Mrs. J. W. Embury of Thurlow, from David Young, now serving with the First Canadian Expeditionary Force as a chauffeur, and, who previous to the outbreak of war, made his home with J. W. Embury of Thurlow.

The letter is under date of March 17th, in which he calls this the ragtime war, as he thinks that a suitable name for it.

"We have been here seven weeks, our daily routine," he writes, "being to take up supplies within a few kilometers of the firing line. I have witnessed two aerial flights. The sights are very interesting and some rather touching. The fighting around here has been fierce lately. We are not far from——, where operations were carried out, which led to our splendid victory.

"Well, there were about 300 German prisoners passed through here the other day. I may say one cannot compare our men with theirs, some of theirs being just boys. The weather has been quite warm today, quite a change from rainy Salisbury Plain."

He concludes his letter by saying all is going well in their favor.

A Massachusetts journal has it to say that "when the time arrives for the next award of hero medals, it is to be hoped that the Carnegie commission will no overlook the fact that the Indiana legislature killed one hundred fool bills in fifteen minutes."

With another new president, the third in four months, Hayti is preparing to contest Mexico's laurels in revolutionary rotation.

ILLUSTRATION FARMS

In his report on the inspection of the Illustration Farms conducted by the Commission of Conservation, the agriculturist of the Commission at the annual meeting said:—

"This work has been intensely interesting, and the manner in which the farmers have undertaken and so successfully carried on the work outlined is indeed gratifying. Another feature which must not be overlooked has been the interest aroused among the young in the great possibilities of the old home farm when scientific and up-to-date methods are adopted. On one of the Illustration Farms, among the French-speaking farmers of Quebec, the farmer and his six grown-up sons would drop all work to accompany the instructor each time he visited the farm, all joining in the discussions and asking questions relating to the farm operations. This farmer himself stated that, since following the advice of the Commission's instructors, he had the first successful crop of clover and of corn he had ever grown on his farm. This was in 1914."

FIRE LOSSES

Education in Fire Prevention Gradually Showing Results.

Canada is making headway in the matter of reduction of fire losses. From reports of fires in Canada for the two months of 1915 a loss is shown of $2,498,881 as against $5,717,061 for the same period of 1914, or a reduction of $3,218,177. This is the lowest fire loss for over five years.

Of the 581 fires which occurred in February, 1915, however, 364 took place in dwellings, and the majority of these originated from easily preventable causes. Defective pipes and flues are well established as the causes of the largest number of fires. Flues are defective in numerous ways and even close inspection may not reveal a dangerous condition. Critical examination is, in most cases, impossible, as the construction is in itself faulty, and a cold spell, with forcing of the heating apparatus, finds the weak places.

GERMAN AND THE WAR

Dear Sir:—

The British soldier of today has proved himself as brave and fearless as any of the great soldiers of the past. Canadian boys deserve the praise so fully accorded to them. When the "spring drive" takes place the Canadians will show their mettle, and we will be proud of every one of them, because we know that there is not one of them who will show the white feather. Among the great leaders in this war is one man who is indeed a hero, and who has won undying fame. I refer to Sir Robert Baden-Powell, the author of the Boy Scout movement, adopted now by nearly every country. We remember that Sir Robert's defence of Kimberley won for him the deserved plaudits of Great Britain. But when the time came Sir Robert did what few officers have done—he became a spy upon the Germans. A spy has always been looked upon as something low and despicable. He does not come out in the open; he prowls about, winning confidence from the enemy, and assumes the nationality of those with whom his country is at war. Sir Robert became convinced that some German plot was brewing six years ago. The Secret Service of England had not discovered this, but had failed to give any evidence beyond mere rumors. Sir Robert sacrificed his dignity—he took his life in his hands, because a detected spy is hanged or shot at once. He ran all these chances as well as the ignominy of a shameful death, in order to save his country. Sir Robert discovered the amazing network of espionage in which Germany had surrounded her enemies. With his gun in his hand, his game bag and his dog, he went to a place where he found engineers and officers taking measurements and plans for forts to be erected by the Germans. He appeared to be a hunter of partridges and rabbits, and was not disturbed. He gave the War Office full information as to the intended forts, etc., and made plans. The enormous sums devoted to espionage by the Germans caused the formation of an International Spy Exchange, whose members were largely American Germans, with their headquarters in Belgium. By pretending to be an American, he learned the German plans for the conquest of England. By mines and submarines they were to block the British Channel, which would prevent the British fleet coming out of their ports at Spithead and Portland. Transports filled with troops would then be rushed across the short space of the North Sea to the east coast of England. They had prepared nine embarking stations with piers and platforms, all ready; had steel lighters made for traversing the Channel. They fixed upon the 13th of August as the day for making the attack. Spies in England were to cut telegraph and telephone wires, blow up bridges and tunnels, create confusion and interrupt communication. Ninety thousand men were to be rushed into Leeds, Sheffield, Manchester and Liverpool. This was fully decided upon, and German officers boasted that they would not handle the people with kid gloves, but with such cruelty as would strike terror into all English hearts. The instigator was a German spy named Steinbauer, who was on the Kaiser's staff when that Imperial Majesty visited England as the guest of the country at the opening of the Queen Victoria Memorial. Sir Robert performed similar services elsewhere. England, being thoroughly informed by Sir Robert, began to prepare to meet the exigency, and the Germans had to abandon the attempt. It is idle to speculate as to what might have happened to Great Britain had it not been for Sir Robert. When we learn that Germany had been preparing for twenty years, that she had at least seven millions of soldiers well drilled and officered, and unlimited resources; and when we well know the terrible unpreparedness of Great Britain for war, Germany might well have succeeded in her attempted invasion.

Germany, about the middle of April, will make her Zeppelin attack upon England. Count Zeppelin has been preparing his fleet for many months. The attack, it is thought, will be of from fifty to seventy-five enormous dirigible airships, many of which are 500 feet long, each carrying from 15 to 20 tons of bombs. They will be accompanied by an immense fleet of smaller airships, and from sixty to seventy submarines. They will probably attack London or some of the largest cities. Whether the German fleet will also appear and join in the attack cannot be foretold. A firm in New York is making for Britain a fleet of small dirigibles with which to meet the German Zeppelins. The president of the company building these ships for England is also president of the American Aeronautical Society. He says: "A great cloud of death is gathering on the German coast. At night a monster air fleet will fly from the German coast. Germany will wait and pray. It is her trump card." He says the flight and weight-carrying properties of the Zeppelins have been proved. They will fire from armor-piercing guns, rather than with bombs. The high angle gun depended upon to destroy these ships is of little value. Germany believes that these raids will leave England cowering and helpless. Then he says: "With Germany master of the air, and master under the sea, how long will England maintain her supremacy a-top the sea?" Raid after raid will follow. These opinions are from the head of the firm which is building for the Allies small dirigibles to meet the Zeppelins. The opinions are not those of an enemy, but of an American friend. What can England do to resist this raid? Only two resources: high angle guns, and airships and the dirigibles now being manufactured in New York. Very little can be done to prevent most terrible results from these raids. We see what submarines accomplish, and we know what the "baby killers" have already done in their raids. If England's large cities, forts, and fortifications are to be at the mercy of these Zeppelins, what may be the consequences? Can Great Britain go on with the war at the cost of London, Liverpool, Manchester, Paris, Marseilles, etc., being destroyed? We are rapidly reaching a phase of the war that will be very different from the past. Beyond a doubt, what the Germans now depend upon is not their land forces, but their airships and submarines.

Yours truly,
J. J. B. FLINT.

LETTER FROM ROY ROLLINS

The following letter was received by Mrs. E. Sharpe, of this city, yesterday:

March 13th, 1915

Dear Mother and Cousin,—

Received your letter a few days ago, of Feb. 18th. Glad to hear you received my pictures O.K. I suppose you have been wondering why I have not written for the last week. I guess it's because we are having such a good time. We have been in action over two weeks, and we drivers have had as good a time as we have had since we left Canada. We can hear the guns all the time, but we are away back looking after our horses and playing ball. You hear a lot about hardships in the firing line. Why, we get more to eat now than ever we did. On my birthday thirteen of us had four chickens and a half-bag of potatoes all boiled up together, and had supper at 12 o'clock at night. I guess that was the last time I wrote. I'm on picket tonight, and I'm laying out on the grass writing by a lantern. Talk about fireworks—you should see the star-shells flying through the air at night. They light things up for miles and it's great sport to watch the aeroplane battles far away up in the clouds, and the shells breaking all around them. I had a letter from Charlie and one from Het. I sent them each a card. We get cards here all ready to send, so if you get one you'll know I'm all right.

Oh, yes, I seen Chester Sills today, and a few days ago I met a fellow that I worked with in Kenora. It seemed funny to meet him in France. He came with the Winnipeg boys. Chester sure looks good, and I must say I never felt better in my life. I don't have that hacking in my throat any more.

Well, I must close, as I want to write a couple of more tonight.

Good-bye.
ROY ROLLINS.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR PRIVATE HERMAN

Many on Sunday afternoon attended a memorial service which was held at the Anglican church in the village of Frankford, Sidney Township, in honor of Private Ross Herman, member of the 49th Regiment of Hastings County, who was killed in action in France on March 2nd. The rector, Rev. Mr. Byers, officiated, and delivered a forcible and feeling discourse, after the usual prayers and hymns had been said and sung. A number of the members of the 39th Battalion were present, as were also Col. Ketcheson, commanding officer of the 49th Regiment, and officers of the regiment. The services throughout were of an impressive nature. Private Herman was a resident of Frankford and joined the 49th Regiment at the outbreak of the war. He was a young man who was much respected by all who knew him. On Sunday evening a similar service was held in the Methodist church in Frankford, conducted by Rev. Mr. Batstone. A large number were present to take part in the services.

PRIVATE A. G. DENIKE

To the Editor of Intelligencer.

Private Anselm Claude Denike died for his country, while in action. He fell on the battlefield, March 19, 1915. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Denike, who reside at Picton, and leaves to mourn his loss, his parents, also two brothers, Clayton and Kenneth, who also reside at Picton, and Mrs. Lenord Tisdale of this city, is a sister of the deceased, also Mrs. James Maylea, of Beiseker, Alta, is a sister. Private Denike is the first to be killed of the 16th regiment. He was born in Picton July 16, 1892, and was well known in this city. His many friends will regret to learn of his sad fate, and we all extent our deepest sympathy to the bereaved friends.

Deadly Gas In Submarines

Edison Calls Attention to Danger When Lead Batteries are Used

WEST ORANGE, N.J., March 29.—In connection with the disaster to the submarine F-4, Thomas A. Edison called attention to the danger of chlorine gas being generated in submarines as a result of the lead storage batteries being flooded with sea water.

"The danger to the life as well as to the health of those who go down in submarines will not be lessened until the possibility of the generation of chlorine fumes is removed," the inventor said at his laboratory here. "What I cannot understand is why the Government allows a submarine to hold tons of sulphuric acid, when some marine underwriters refuse to insure a vessel carrying large quantities of this acid, while others, if they take the risk, do so by charging a high rate.

"The trouble in the case of the submarine is that the lead storage batteries are carried in a compartment surrounded by the main ballast tanks. When sea water is admitted to these tanks the boat sinks. It is evident that when the water is admitted to this tank, it is under pressure. The containing jars of lead cells are made of fragile hard rubber, easily broken. Sulphuric acid leaks from these jars and attacks the steel wall of the main ballast tank with resultant corrosion. When the sea water is admitted to the main ballast tank when submerging the weakened wall is likely to give way, which case the sea water floods the battery tank. When sea water mixes with sulphuric acid in a lead battery hydrochloric acid is formed. This attacks the lead plates and produces chlorine gas. Also, when a lead battery is submerged in sea water, electricity passes from the cells through the sea water and liberates chlorine gas in volume."

Mr. Edison pointed out that the steamship De Solar, which sank several weeks ago in the port of St. John's, Newfoundland, was lost because her cargo of sulphuric acid leaked from the steel drums in which it was being carried. The acid, upon being mixed with the bilge water, produced hydrochloric acid, which attacked the fastenings of the ship, causing her to spring a leak.

"With chlorine gas, which is of a heavy green color, the men in a submarine could live but a short time. The weaker men of the crew would suffer from hemorrhages before they died. I can picture the poor fellows, under such circumstances—first stupefied by chlorine gas, making vain efforts to take the steps which would raise their ship, then in a few minutes helpless.

"The navies of the world will continue to have trouble with the submarine and must expect catastrophes so long as they continue to use sulphuric acid in those vessels. This attacks all metals. I do not doubt that the submarines lost in other years by the French and English governments were caused by the same trouble.

"The only remedy is an alkaline battery containing no sulphuric acid. It has been demonstrated that chlorine gas emanating from batteries such as used on the F-4 weaken the men on board. Their lungs are most affected, and hemorrhages have been numerous among crews of vessels carrying lead batteries. I spent much time and money perfecting a battery for submarine use. It cost much more because nickel is many times dearer than lead, but the battery lasts longer and is better in every respect. It is only a matter of time when all new submarines will be equipped with such batteries."

DEATHS.

MRS. D. M. PARKER

On Tuesday morning, the 23rd instant, after an illness of nearly a year, there passed to her eternal rest, Mrs. A. M. Parker, at the Royal Hotel, where she has made her home for over twenty-five years. Mrs. Parker was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bockus, and was born in Picton in the early years of their residence here. She married Dr. D. M. Parker of Boston, Mass., where she resided until her husband's death, returning here then to make her home with her mother and her sister, Mrs. Walter T. Ross. Mrs. Parker was well educated, a great reader, and had travelled a great deal, not only in the States and Canada, but in the old country and on the Continent, on her last journey going to Russia where she witnessed the festivities at the Coronation of the Czar. These advantages, added to a delightful personality, and a bright and quick intelligence, made her a most interesting and agreeable companion, and her warm-hearted, cordial hospitality, in her well appointed apartments made them for many years a centre in the social life of Picton. As a loyal true-hearted friend her pleasant memory will long be cherished by those who knew her.

Her funeral which, at her own request, was private, took place from the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. Walter T. Ross, Centre street—Picton Times.

THE BRITISH PREFERENCE

One of the outstanding characteristics of the Canadian Liberal party is its stupidity. Only on one or two occasions in its whole history has it shown a gleam of understanding of the national temper. Its attitude upon legislation of a national or imperial character has invariably shown a curious tendency toward slip-shod argument and confused thinking.

This poverty of ordinary intelligence is manifested to a striking degree in the apparent failure of the Liberal leaders and press to perceive the utter untenability of their contention that the Government, in its recent tariff legislation, has decreased the British preference. The Liberal mind seems to confuse the idea of a preference with a lower tariff, or Free Trade, when, as a matter of fact a country must have Protection to grant a preference. If all goods entered Canada free, what preference or advantage would the British manufacturer have over the foreign manufacturer? Under the old tariff the British manufacturer enjoyed a preference.

Had the Minister of Finance increased both the general and preferential rate five per cent., the British manufacturer would still have had the same preference. But instead, the Minister increased the preferential rate by only five per cent. Who, that can master the simple rules of addition and subtraction will say that this did not increase the preference of the British manufacturer by 2½ per cent., by $2.50 on every $100 worth of goods imported into Canada. Last year Canada imported goods to the value of $329,000,000. On every dollar's worth of these goods the preference of the British manufacturer has been increased. It is not a question of preference over goods made in Canada; it is a question of a preference over all other nations who sell goods to Canada. That preference over all other nations has been increased. If all last year's imports—$329,000,000 — were supplied to Canada by Britain, British manufacturers, under the new tariff, would pay about nine and one-half million dollars less of duty upon them than would have to be paid by foreign manufacturers, were they supplied by foreign countries. Could there by a plainer illustration of the fact that the preference has been increased?

But the Minister of Finance has done more than that—he has established a new British preference. Last year Canada imported goods to the value of $208,000,000. What preference did Britain have, what preference could she have, in supplying us goods that were on the free list? Under the new tariff there is imposed upon the great proportion of these goods a tax of 7½ per cent. from foreign countries and 5 per cent. from the British Isles. What mind that is not completely muddled will fail to perceive that the British manufacturer is thus given a preference over his foreign competitor in the Canadian market that he did not have before?

And yet in the face of these simple facts Liberal leaders with profound stupidity maintain a prolonged complaint about the "decrease" in the British preference, to which a complete answer is found in the words of the late Finance Minister, the Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Here is what that gentleman thought about increasing the British preference, when, addressing the Colonial Conference of 1902, he used these words;—

"I would like, Sir, to say, from a Canadian point of view, we think that an additional preference in the shape of a higher duty may give the British manufacturer a greater advantage than perhaps Mr. Chamberlain is disposed to think possible. We do not profess that we want to introduce British goods to displace the goods made by the manufacturers of Canada. That is a point upon which we must speak with great frankness.

"The statistics show that our tariff is not prohibitive; it is a moderately protective tariff. We say it incidentally protective. The statistics show that we are importing from abroad vast quantities of goods, and the statistics also show that England is not holding her own, of late, and that a large proportion of these are coming from foreign countries. If these goods are being imported, then, by an increase of the duty, thereby increasing the preference to Great Britain, the goods are still going to be imported, but we can turn the trade, as Mr. Seddon pointed out, from the foreigner to Great Britain. Take the class of goods today, in which there is 30 per cent. duty with one-third off, the British goods come in at 20 per cent. There is thus 10 per cent. advantage to the manufacturer. If you increase 45 per cent. and still keep your proportion of one-third, your preference then becomes 15 per cent. and that is an additional advantage to the British manufacturer as competing with the foreign manufacturer."

Here we have Laurier completely answered by Laurier's own Minister of Finance. If, says Mr. Fielding in effect, you increase the duties, and still maintain your proportion of one-third in respect to British preference, you give the British manufacturer an advantage over the foreign manufacturer greater than he possessed before. Could anything be plainer than that. Could there be a more convincing and logical defence of what the Hon. Mr. White has done

LIQUOR AND TOBACCO

The salient features of the war taxation are sometimes lost sight of in the veritable ocean of talk and misrepresentation on the part of the Liberals. The striking features are the heavy taxes on spirits and tobaccos and the exceptions to the duty of five per cent. British and seven and one-half per cent. general duty.

The duties of customs and excise are heavily increased upon whiskey, gin, brandy, and other alcoholic spirits and upon ale, beer, stout, cigarettes and tobacco. Excise duties increased on wines, non-sparkling and sparkling, including champagne.

The duty of five per cent. and seven and one-half per cent. general specially imposed by the War Revenue Act will not apply to the following principal articles: Mowing machines, harvesters, reapers and complete parts thereof, traction ditching machines; binder twine; fertilizers, manufactured or compounded; cottonseed meal; Indian corn not for distillation; lines, twines, nets and hooks for the fisheries; salt for the fisheries; squid; anthracite coal, bananas, cocoa and chocolate products; coffee; tea; wheat and wheat flour; sugar, raw and refined; printed books; newspapers and magazines.

CURRENT COMMENT

Philadelphia Inquirer: "No belligerent can change the rules of war," says President Wilson, overlooking, probably, the fact that they do.

The Turks appear to have resigned themselves to the forcing of the Dardanelles and the appearance of the allied fleet before Constantinople. All that concerns them now is to make the best of the inevitable.

Chicago Tribune: "German opinion of Great Britain is more or less unflattering; but your real anti-Britisher is the Socialist. Most of the things about England that aren't so we heard from Socialists."

Hamilton Herald: "Two or three days ago Dr. Karl Liebknecht, the German Socialist leader, was ordered to place himself at the disposal of the military authorities. Now he has been mustered into the army and dispatched to the front. It's hardly fair treatment, but it cannot be denied that the German government has taken the most effective way to silence its bravest and only outspoken critic. The chances are that Liebknecht will be silenced forever."

Billy Sunday opines that all of the millionaires in hell cannot buy a pitcher of water. As Sunday approaches the millionaire class by reason of his frenzied fulminations he begins to have a yellow feeling.

Mexico is still seething with revolution and rapine, including incalculable loss of life and property, in which the United States is the chief alien sufferer.

Hamilton Spectator: "If those British and French land forces get into position during the coming week, acting in conjunction with the fleet, we will likely hear of the Turks scurrying off like Easter rabbits."

London Advertiser: "Bismarck wronged Italy when he drew her into the Triple Alliance. Italy's place, logically, was with Great Britain and France. As such she would have gone into this war at the first, and with a light heart."

The Ontario Government has taken the bull by the horns. In Ottawa children are attending no school and are roaming the streets because the schools they formerly attended are closed. It is now decreed that these schools must be reopened, and if the local board will not reopen and conduct them, a special commission will be appointed to do so.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

LIBERAL MEMBER TRIES TO USE INFLUENCE TO GET CONTRACT

Expected Honorarium for This Work He Tells Public Accounts' Committee, also Sought to Obtain Inside Information, But Did Not Consider He Was Violating Any Principal of Honor

GOVERNMENT ORDERS EVERY CONTRACT PROBED

OTTAWA March 29.—When the public accounts committee met on Thursday afternoon both Mr. E. N. Rhodes and Mr. W. F. Nickle, who were conducting the inquiry for the Government, emphasized that they were given instructions to see that every contract was thoroughly probed, and to see that no one was shielded. They had been told to give every facility to the committee to get at the truth.

Mr. J. C. Hurdman, Liberal member for West Ottawa, testified that he tried to use his influence with his cousin, Lieut.-Col. Hurdman, inspector of technical equipment, to secure a contract for a jewellery firm in Ottawa, Bilsky and Son, for four hundred binoculars. He frankly admitted that he expected to get an "honorarium" for this work. Later he endeavored to help a Milwaukee firm, the Stegemann Motor Company, in getting a contract. His course of information was again Col. Hurdman. He added that he had "a very close friend" in the department upon whom he could rely for "prompt inside information." He swore that this "very close friend" was not Col. Hurdman, claiming that he could not recall who the friend was. In this case, as in that of the binoculars, he admitted that he expected a consideration, as a member of the firm had told him that they did not expect him to supply them with information for nothing.

Hoped to Get Honorarium

Mr. Hurdman explained that Mr. Bilsky had asked him to approach his cousin to see if something could be done to secure him an order for binoculars. He saw both General Fiset and Col. Hurdman. General Fiset told him that the whole matter rested with the firm of Ellis and Company, who had been asked to collect the glasses for the Department. Col. Hurdman told him that they would not buy from Bilsky.

"Did you have an agreement with Bilsky in regard to profit?" asked Mr. Nickle.

"No, there was no agreement, but I hoped to get an honorarium."

Mr. Hurdman was asked whether he had used his influence in other cases since the war began to get orders from the Government.

Mr. Hurdman replied that he had endeavored to get advance information for the Stegeman Motor Company of Milwaukee. He met the representative of this company, Mr. John Millmann at the Chateau Laurier. Witness was asked if he could do anything to get orders, and was told that he would not be expected to work for nothing. He had some correspondence with the company later, furnishing them certain information.

Called for Correspondence

The Conservative members of the committee suggested that this correspondence be laid before the committee. Mr. Hurdman promised to produce it, but later said that he had no objection to having the letter he received read to the committee but he considered his replies of a private and confidential character. They contained nothing concerning the public interest.

With the refusal of Mr. Hurdman to lay his replies before the committee an interesting situation developed. The Liberals suddenly lost their ardor to let in the light on contracts, and most of them, led by Mr. Carvell, backed up Mr. Hurdman in his refusal. Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Nickle maintained that everything should be made public, and they asserted that it was the Government's desire to throw the fullest possible light on every transaction.

Mr. Rhodes said it would be a dangerous and unfortunate precedent for witnesses to have the right of withholding letters and documents of importance from the committee. Mr. Hurdman offered to put his letters in the hands of the chairman for him to decide whether or not they were in the public interest.

Mr. Rhodes finally moved that a

Articles of Interest and Profit to the Farmer—Items for the Household, Garden and Field

SHOULD GRAIN BE GROUND FOR WORK HORSES?

Many believe that a horse with good teeth does not require to have his grain ground, while others think it is saving to grind all grain fed. At the Illinois Experiment Station experiments indicated that grinding the grain for horses doing very hard work effected a saving of ten per cent. in the rations required. This is a big item, with feed at the present high level and one worthy of the consideration of all owners of farm work horses. It was found, also, that it requires twice as long for horses to consume ground grain when fed dry as when the same quantity is fed thoroughly dampened. It does not always pay to grind grain for horses. Much depends upon the convenience of the mill or the distance grain must be taken to be ground. Where power is available at home it will surely pay to grind, and even where it is necessary to haul only a short distance grinding will prove profitable. Greatest economy in grinding comes when horses are being worked to the limit, as in spring seeding, and the old saying that grinding makes the feed go farther has something in it, even in the case of the horse with the best of teeth.

In feeding ground grain, allowance must be made for the increase in bulk due to grinding. It requires more measure but less by weight. In Illinois it was found that horses at heavy labor required from one and one-fifth to one and one-third pounds of grain and from one to one and one-fourth pounds of hay per hundred pounds of live weight per day in order to maintain their weight. Grain should be fed in three equal feeds, but the heavy ration of hay should be given at night. Some feed a heavy feed of hay at night, and about an equal quantity divided into the two feeds, morning and noon. We believe feed might often be saved by cutting out the noon feed of hay, feeding a light feed in the morning and a manger full at night.

TEST PLOTS AND SEED PLOTS

It will not require a wide field of observation to convince that there is a great deal of gross carelessness and neglect practiced in the handling of seed grain from the growing crop to the seed in the drill. "Seed selection" is an unknown term on all too many farms, and because of careless or shiftless indifference many farmers continue year after year to sow anything that resembles seed and leave the rest to Providence. It does not generally prove profitable to leave too much to Providence. The grower must do his part. We are hearing the need of greater production this year. There is no doubt but that the individual farmer would like an increased production every year, and would profit in the end by increasing the output of his farm. He knows that good seed is a first consideration, and so should always plan to sow the best. Why not a few test plots and some special seed plots in 1915 to form the nucleus of the farm's pure seed supply for future years? Get some good, clean, plump seed, pure as to variety and free from weed seeds, and sow it by itself on a specially prepared plot. Guard it carefully; keep it separate at threshing time; clean it well; if necessary hand pick, and see how soon you will have a good business in seed grain, bigger yields and larger returns from the farm. Get the best varieties for your district. It may be necessary to run through a test experiment on small plots with two or three leading varieties to determine wheih suits your purpose best. Establish the variety on the place, and stick to it until it fails to produce good crops and good seed. It is not necessary to "change seed", provided good seed, specially selected, is always sown. In fact yields may be substantially increased by this practice. Try it and be convinced. Start a little plot work with seeds this year, and make your own farm the source of the best seed.

FARM FURROWS

Seed testing and cow testing are a winning pair. The first increases the crops; the latter makes their feeding more profitable.

A short tempered man generally drives a short tempered horse. Another case of bad associations corrupting good manners.

Every city has its water supply tested regularly. Investigations to date indicate the wisdom of following the same practice in regard to the "perfectly pure" water of the farm well. Appearances are sometimes deceiving.

Says Farm, Stock and Home: "The silo is conducive to beastly happiness." He who climbed into the silo this winter instead of going through the blizzard to the shock field, will probably add that a silo is conducive to manly comfort.

If we are continually grumbling about the hard lot of the farmer we need not be surprised if our boys hike off to the city. They are merely taking us at our word.

Antiseptics In Australian Blue Gum Prove A Cure For Bronchial Catarrh

BAD COLD IN THE HEAD, THROAT WEAKNESS AND CATARRH CURED QUICKLY

MEDICATED AIR A MARVEL!

Catarrhozone is far superior to any internal medicine.

Its relief is almost instantaneous—just takes long enough to breathe its healing vapor into the lungs to give wonderful soothing relief.

Catarrhozone goes right to the tiniest cells in the lungs, carrying healing, soothing balsams to the places that are tainted with Catarrhal inflammation. A sneezing cold is cured in ten minutes—a sore throat is healed and restored in an hour or two—chronic bronchitis is soothed away and quickly disappears—catarrh of long standing is invariably cured because Catarrhozone kills the germ that cause the trouble.

As a cure for Asthma and a preventative of Grippe every doctor is delighted with Catarrhozone. One eminent throat specialist says if Catarrhozone is used two or three times each day you will never suffer from any disease of the head, throat, nose or lungs. This is good news to many of our readers who must require a safe sure and permanent cure for their colds and winter ills. Every good druggist sells Catarrhozone, large outfit $1.00; small size 50c; trial size 25c.

EVEN RAINCOATS ARE CUT CIRCULAR.

Rain coats of green mixed woollen texture on the raglan lines which are advocated this season, by a long seam down the front of the coat. The new high collar is very adaptable to rainy weather.

NEURALGIA SETTLED IN HER LUNGS

No Relief From The Pain Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

CAMPBELLVILLE, ONT., MAY 5th. 1913.

"I cannot speak too highly of "Fruit-a-tives". For over thirty years, I have suffered from chronic Neuralgia and Constipation, experiencing untold agony. The Neuralgia settled in my lungs and I took bottles of medicine without relief. The doctor told me I would not get better but "Fruit-a-tives" proved that the doctor was wrong by giving me quick relief and finally and completely curing me.

"I would not have my present health if it were not for "Fruit-a-tives" and I am glad of this opportunity of giving you this letter about such a splendid remedy as "Fruit-a-tives".

HAIL HIM! HAIL HIM! EARTH'S NEW SOVERIGN

"THEY KNEW NOT THE TIME OF THEIR VISITATION"

The First Palm Sunday—A Fulfilment of Propecy—The Crisis of Israel's History—Their "Double" of Disfavor—Favor of Returning to Natural Israel—Spiritual Israel's History and Natural Israel's History Parallel—Messiah "A Stone of Stumbling to Both the Houses of Israel"—Chrisiendom Not Ready for Messiah's Second Advent.

NEW YORK CITY, March 28.—Pastor Russell spoke today at New York City Temple, W. 63d street near Broadway. We report his text, "Hosanna! Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!" (Mark 11:9.) He said in part:

Little did the Jews understand the vast importance to them of the event which Christians commemorate on Palm Sunday. It will be remembered that this event occurred at the close of our Lord's earthy ministry—three and one-half years after his baptism at Jordan and five days before His crucifiction. The Sabbath had been spent at Bethan. Lazarus whom Jesus had awakened from the sleep of death, had, with his sisters Martha and Mary, prepared a banquet for Jesus; and when the Sabbath closed the supper was eaten.

It was at that time that Mary brought forth the box of valuable perfume and therewith anointed our Lord's head and feet. It was the same occasion on which Judas had murmured against this expression of her loving devotion, declaring that it was wasteful, and that the money should have been given to the poor. It was then that the Master defended Mary and announced that the anointing was for His burial, which occurred later in the same week. It was then that He suggested to the disciples, 'The poor ye have always with you; and whensoever ye may do them good. But Me ye have not always."

The next morning, the first day of the week, corresponding to our Sunday Jesus made ready for His triumphal entry into the city of Jerusalem as the King of Israel, according to the custom of their kings, riding upon an ass and acclaimed by the populace. The incident had been foretold by the Prophet Zechariah in detail, saying, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion! Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem Behold, thy King cometh unto thee; He is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass."—Zechariah 9:9.

Prophecy Must Be Fulfilled

When the Apostles had brought the ass and when Jesus sat thereon, the large concourse of people that had come from Jerusalem to see Jesus because of His awakening of Lazarus shouted aloud. After the manner of their time, some broke off palm leaves and others laid their garments in the way, thus forming a carpet, as it were, in the road leading to Jerusalem. The shout of the people was just as the Prophet had declared. They hailed Jesus as the promised Son of David, the Messiah long waited for.

On previous occasions, when the people had sought to make Jesus a king, He withdrew himself from them, to wait for their ardor to cool; for He knew that the Father's time was not yet due. But now He knew that His hour was come; and hence He helped on with the enthusiasm by sending for the ass, etc. Prominent sectarian Jews present, although unable to account for the miracle of the awakening of Lazarus were unprepared to think of Jesus as the true Messiah or as anything short of an imposter in that role. When these heard the multitude shouting and addressing Jesus as Messiah, they were offended, and sent word to Jesus to restrain the ignorant people who were thus acclaiming Him.

But instead of forbidding the ovation Jesus halted the procession at the top of the Mount of Olives, and overlooking the Holy City, wept while He pronounced sentence upon—Unworthy! Unappreciative! As the Evangelist declares, "Israel knew not the time of their visitation." The time had come for Israel to receive the King; and not only were they ignorant of the matter collectively, but they were not in the heart condition to understand or appreciate. For three and one-half years Jesus and His faithful Apostles had been declaring that the Kingdom of God was at hand; and for six months in advance of this John the Baptist and his disciples had similarly preached.

After those four years of faithful preaching throughout the length and breadth of Palestine the nation was apparently as unprepared for Jesus as at the first. Hence our Lord's words, 'Therefore I say unto you, Your House is left unto you desolate! Ye shall see Me no more until that day when ye shall say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!" (Matthew 23:37-39.) That day is almost here! There the Jewish nation was cast off from fellowship with God, because "they knew not the time of their visitation."

For more than eighteen centuries Israel has been outcast from national favor. Thank God, the day is at hand when, at the Second Coming of Messiah, His Kingdom shall be turned over to them Then, as He declared they will gladly say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." The long centuries of persecution and separation from God's favor will have brought that people to a humbler condition of heart where they will be glad to receive Divine favor upon Divine terms. To this great event St. Paul refers in Romans 11:27-34.

If this we have before our minds the origin of Palm Sunday and what it signifies as the climax of Natural Israel's test respecting Messiah, we are prepared to go further and note that in God's providence there is a similar test for us Christians.

"Enemies for Your Sakes."

St. John emphasized particularly the fact that the rejection of the Jewish nation because of their rejection of the Messiah did not apply to all the individuals of that nation. As the Prophet had foretold (Romans 11:27-33), there was a small, faithful section, or "remnant." This remnant accepted Christ and were accepted by Him. On Pentecost this class became the nucleus of Spiritual Israel. Thus we read, "He came unto His own (nation), and His own received Him not (as a nation); but to as many as received Him, to them gave He liberty (privilege) to become sons of God, even to them that believed on His name; which were begotten not of blood, nor of the will of flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"—at Pentecost—John 1:11-13.

Thus, so far as the spiritual part of God's great Promise to Abraham is concerned, it has passed from the Jewish nation; but there still remains for them a glorious earthly portion, to which they will be introduced at our Lord's Second Coming. Then their sins will be cancelled; and as a people the Hebrews will return to the Divine favor and will inherit the earthly features of the Prime made to their fathers. Then, through them God's blessing will be extended to all nations and peoples, under Israel's New Covenant (Jeremiah 31:31-34), which will become operative at the hands of their great Mediator—The Christ, The Messiah in glory. But by that time the election of the saints of this Gospel Age will be complete; and The Messiah in glory will include Jesus the Head and the Church His Body—joint-heirs with Him in the spiritual features of the great Abrahamic Promise.—Galatians 3:8, 16, 29.

All this is clearly stated in Romans 11:24-32. But somehow our eyes of understanding as Christians have been holden, so that, until of late, we have not seen these lengths and breadths, these heights and depths, of Divine Love and Wisdom. The fact that now we see these things is corroborative evidence that they are at hand. Just so it was at our Lord's First Advent. Many things pertaining to that day were completely hidden until the time of fulfilment came; and then only the "Wise Virgins" were enabled to see these beauties in the Divine Plan—Psalm 119:18.

The Time of Our Visitation

Apparently very few of God's people have noted the fact that Spiritual Israel has had a history parallel to that of Natural Israel, and that thruout the Scriptures these are dealt with as type and antitype. Few have noticed that the period from the death of Jacob to the death of Jesus finds its exact parallel of 1845½ years between the death of Jesus and our day, and that in both cases there have been a nominal and a real Israel. As the nominal Jewish system was tried and all but the "Israelities indeed" failed, so will Spiritual Israel be tried and all will fail except the spirit-begotten and faithful.

As at the close of the Jewish Age there was a special period of testing and trying, lasting forty years, so there is a special sifting and testing to come to Christendom during the closing forty years of this Gospel Age before the inauguration of the glorious

"WAR"

A SERIAL STORY BY BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

"I do not know where Netti is hiding. I ring and she does not come."

He despatched another servant to find her, who in a short time returned with an anxious countenance:

"Netti is in her room. She is—she is——"

"Speak out!" shouted my father, "what is she?"

"She is—already—quite—black."

A shriek came from every lip. The plague, the horrible plague, was in our very house. What was to be done? Could one leave the poor girl to die alone? But was it not certain death to whoever approached her and those whom this person might afterwards approach? It was as if we were surrounded by murderers or flames, and death grinned at us from every corner and followed every step.

My father ordered the doctor to be fetched immediately. "And you, children, hurry your departure."

"Oh, I feel so sick!" exclaimed Lilli, turning pale and clutching a chair.

We all sprang toward her. "What ails you?" "Don't be silly!" "It is only fear."

We dared not think, but hurried her to her room, and soon she showed most aggravated symptoms of the dread disease. This made the second case of cholera in the castle in one day.

It was terrible to see her suffer and to be unable to help. Frederick did everything possible to relieve her, but nothing availed. When the attack subsided cramps followed, which seemed to make every bone crack, tearing the quivering frame with agony. The poor victim tried to moan but could not—her voice failed, her skin turned cold and blue, and the breathing difficult.

My father strode up and down wringing his hands. Once I stood before him and dared to say: "Father, this is war! Will you not curse it now?" But he shook me off without reply.

After ten hours of suffering, Lilli died. Netti died before, alone in her room, for we were all occupied with Lilli, and no servant would venture to approach one who had "turned black."

Meanwhile Dr. Bresser had arrived, and took command of the household, bringing with him every known means of relief. I could have kissed his hand.

The two bodies were carried to a distant chamber, and strictest measures of disinfection were taken. The odor of carbolic acid to this day brings back the memory of those terrible days.

The intended flight was a second time set on foot. On the day of Lilli's death the carriage stood waiting to carry away Aunt Marie, Rosa, Otto, and my son—but the coachman declared himself unable to drive, seized by the invisible destroyer.

"Then I will drive myself," said my father. "Quick, is everything ready?"

Rosa came forward and said, "Drive on! I must stay and follow Lilli."

It proved the case. The next sunrise found the second daughter in the vault of death. And in the horror of it all our departure was given up.

In my anguish a sudden scorn seized me for the gigantic folly which had brought on all this misery. When Rosa's corpse had been carried out my father sank on his knees with his head against the wall.

I seized him by the arm. "Father, this is war!" No answer. "Father, do you hear? Will you at last curse war?"

He sprang to his feet. "You bring me back to my duty as a soldier. I must not forget that my entire fatherland offers its sacrifice of blood and tears."

"What benefit can come to the fatherland through the suffering and death of its people? What gain through lost battles and the shortening of these young lives? Oh, father, I plead with you—curse war! See from the window the black coffins—they are Lilli and Rosa, and perhaps there will be a third—and why, why?"

"Because God wills it, my child."

"God—always God. All that folly and savagery—the wilful sin of man—always hiding under this shield—God's will!"

"Do not blaspheme, Martha, even while the hand of a reproving God is clearly visible."

The footman appeared, announcing that the carpenter refused to carry the coffins into the chamber where the dead young countesses lay.

Useful for Over 500 Purposes

GILLETT'S LYE "EATS DIRT."

"Then I will see to it myself," said my father, and he strode to the door.

The post brought nothing but sorrow—news of the ravages of the pest; love-letters that would never be answered—for Prince Henry knew nothing of what had happened. A letter to Conrad announcing Lilli's sickness brought him four days later to the castle.

"Lilli!" he cried. "Is it true?"

We nodded. He remained quiet, without shedding a tear, and softly said to himself, "I have loved her all these years. I will go to the churchyard. She waits for me."

He rushed out, and there upon her grave he shot himself.

The war had carried off many an officer, so the tragedy of this indirect death was quite blunted. Besides, this event was swallowed up by a misfortune which sounded the deepest agonies of all our hearts. Otto, the adored and only son, was in the clutch of the destroying angel. All day, all night, with alternating hope and despair, he suffered.

When all was over his father threw himself upon the body with such a piercing shriek that it rang through the house. We had to tear them apart, and for hours and hours the old man poured out his cries of anguish—giving vent to groans and roars, and rattling shrieks of desperation. His son, his Otto, his pride, his all!

After this outbreak he succumbed to a dumb apathy. He lay as one motionless and unconscious, and was put to bed.

When he came to himself, Frederick and I and Aunt Marie were at his bedside. He could not speak, and was struggling for breath. Then he began to shake and toss about, as if in the last symptoms of the cholera, though he had shown no other sign. At last he uttered one word—"Martha"

I fell on my knees beside him "Father, my poor, dear father!"

He lifted his hands over my head

"Your wish—is fulfilled. I curse—I cur——" He sank back. All was over.

"How dreadful," said Aunt Marie, after we had buried him. "He died with a curse on his lips."

"Console yourself," I answered. "If only that curse would fall from every lip—what a blessing to humanity."

Such was the cholera week at Grumitz. In seven days ten of our group were taken. In the village over eighty died. Stated thus coldly it makes a scarcely noteworthy report. Told as a story it seems an extravagant tale. But it is neither a dry fact nor an overdrawn romance. It is a cold, palpable, sad reality.

I stood resigned in daily expectation that death would take the rest of us. I actually wept in anticipation of it. Yet in the thought of their deliverance I still had sweet moments. And as this hope and compassion and love still glowed in us as individuals, might it not some day come to dominate the general relations of the whole human family? The future belongs to Goodness.

CHAPTER VI.

We spent the remainder of the summer in Geneva, Dr. Bresser having urged us to flee from the infected country and the scene of so much sorrow. The depth of apathy and resignation which had overcome me made flight seem almost useless and distasteful to me; besides I did not wish to leave the graves of my family. But the doctor conquered my objections when he appealed to my duty as a mother, and begged me to take little Rudolf out of danger.

We chose Switzerland because Frederick wished to become acquainted with the men who had formed the Red Cross society. He wished to be on the spot, and inform himself as to their object and further aims.

He had resigned from the military service, and took a half-year's leave of absence awaiting its acceptance.

I was now rich—very rich. The entire family being gone—all was mine.

"Look, Frederick," I said, as the notary delivered the title-deeds to me, "what would you say if I should praise the war because it has brought all this advantage to me?"

"Then you would not be my Martha. I see you are thinking of the heartlessness which can rejoice over material prosperity won by the destruction of another's good. Individuals are ashamed of such feelings, but nations rather delight in each other's destruction, and dynasties openly and vaingloriously admit them. Thousands have perished in untold misery—we have ruined them to win for ourselves territory and power. So let us thank Heaven for our victories!"

We lived in quiet retirement in a little villa, close to the shores of the lake. I was still so overwhelmed with what I had passed through that I had no desire to meet strangers. My sympathetic husband quite understood my desire to weep out the sorrow of my torn heart in solitude. It is quite fitting that those who have been so mercilessly thrown out of this beautiful world should have some sacred time allotted them in the memory of those who have been so cruelly robbed of their companionship.

Frederick often went into the city, making his study of the Red Cross. Of this period I have no daily record, and what Frederick told me of those days has nearly passed out of my recollection. My one impression of this time, given me by every element of our environment, was that of quiet ease, and the cheerful activity of the neighborhood. Every one seemed so peaceful and good-humored. Hardly an echo of the war reached us. It was already alluded to as an anecdote of history which had changed the map but slightly. The terrific cannonading in the Bohemian fields was an interesting episode, a little more than a new Wagnerian opera, perhaps. History had recorded it in its pages, but it was soon forgotten by those who lived outside the stricken boundaries. We saw mostly French newspapers, and they were filled with the latest happenings in literature, drama, music, and the coming exposition. The sharp duel between the Prussians and Austrians was an old story. What happened three months ago and thirty miles away, what is not in the Now and the Here, soon slips out of the memory and loses its hold on the heart.

October found us in Vienna settling the many affairs of my inheritance, and preparing for a considerable stay in Paris. The projected exposition offered Frederick the best opportunity to carry out his idea of calling a congress together with the idea of forming a league of peace.

"The professions of arms I have laid down through my convictions gained in war. Now I enlist in the army of peace. Truly, it is a small army with no weapons save love and justice, but every great thing must have its small beginnings."

"Ah," I sighed, "it is a hopeless work. What can a single man do against this stronghold, backed by centuries of custom and millions of men?"

"What can I do? I cannot foolishly hope personally to bring about such a revolution. I simply remarked that I would join the ranks of the peace army. I did not suppose as a soldier that I could save my country or conquer a province. No, the single man can only serve. Still more he must serve. One inspired with a purpose cannot help working for it. He takes his life for it, even though he knows how little this one life counts. He serves because he must. Not the State alone demands allegiance; sincere, strong convictions also oblige compulsory service.

Before going to Paris we planned a visit to Aunt Cornelia in Berlin. We broke the journey at Prague in order to spend "All Souls' Day" on the battlefield of Sadowa.

War will have its charm so long as historians persist in setting up for the leaders monuments of glory built out of the ruins of battle, and crown the Titans of public murder with laurels. Tear away the mask of glory and show its horror, and who would be madly ambitious enough to grasp for such fame?

It was twilight when we arrived, and sadly and silently we proceeded to the dread battlefield, filled with depression and grief. The snow was falling, the bleak trees were swaying in the wailing November wind. Tier after tier the graves stretched out before us, but not as in the quiet, restful churchyard. These were not the graves of aged and weary pilgrims of life gone to their eternal rest, but of young men in the height of their youthful vigor, exulting in the fulness of their manhood, full of rich expectation in the future. Violently and mercilessly they had been hurled into the ditch and the dust of the earth shovelled over them. Who counts the broken hearts, the mangled bleeding limbs, the cries of despair, the flooding tears, the hopeless prayers, the agonizing pains, the shrieks, the maddening submission to death—all is entombed in the eternal silence.

We were not alone on this burial field. The day had brought many both from the home country and the enemy's country, both sought their loved ones in these acres of death. For hours we had heard the sobs and murmurs of lament, for many mourners had come with us on the train.

I heard a poor, heart-broken father say, "Three sons have I lost—each one more noble and better than the other—oh, my three sons!" I can hear it yet above all the other lamentings for fathers, husbands, and brothers which were poured out around us.

All about us black-robed figures knelt, and some, with sobs of pain, staggered from place to place hopelessly searching their dead. But few single graves were to be seen, and few were marked by stone or inscription.

Everywhere the earth was heaped up, and we knew that even under our feet the soldiers' bodies were mouldering.

sub-committee be appointed to look at the correspondence and decide whether it should be admitted as public evidence.

Letters Produced; No Sensation

At last Mr. Hurdman agreed to turn the letters over to Mr. Rhodes to see whether they should be filed with the committee.

Mr. Rhodes, after a consultation with Mr. Carvell, announced that he thought that the correspondence should be read. The committee, keyed up to an expected sensation, was somewhat disappointed with the contents of the correspondence. In his letters, Mr. Hurdman stated that he learned from his cousin that General Sam Hughes had placed an order with T. A. Russell of Toronto, for twenty trucks in opposition to the advice of the purchasing board. He told of getting in touch with his cousin as to orders given, and a second letter stated that he was relying upon a "very close friend" upon whom he could depend for reliable information. He asked Mr. Millmann not to repeat what he said, as it might travel back and "injure our prospects of getting further orders, as the source of information might be easily traced."

Forgot Name of His Friend

Mr. Hurdmann was pressed to say who the "close personal friend" was.

He maintained that he could not remember.

"Was it Col. Hurdman?"

"No, it was not Col. Hurdman."

"Was it a member of the Cabinet?"

"No I don't know them well enough."

"Do you not think, Mr. Hurdman, that it was highly improper for you to get your cousin, who was in a confidential position, to yield you information for pecuniary advantage?" asked Mr. Nickle.

No Violation of Honor

After a minute's hesitation the witness replied, "I do not think I was violating any principle of honor."

Witness said that there was no mention of a commission in his talk with Mr. Millmann, but there was a "problematical profit." Mr. Millmann told him he did not expect him to work for nothing.

Other witnesses of the day were Mr. T. M. Birkett, of the Keystone Supply of Ottawa; Mr. John Bell, an Ottawa broker; Alexander Taylor, a partner of Mr. Birkett, and Sam, Bilsky.

Mr. Birkett said that when the war broke out he heard that the Government wanted binoculars. He found out that Mr. P. W. Ellis was handling the purchase of field glasses. Mr. Mason of that firm saw him and gave him an order for 400 at $48 and $52 a piece. Mr. Bilsky came to him and offered to secure for him the 400 binoculars. An agreement was drafted whereby Bilsky was to get a profit of $5 a binocular. The agreement was placed before the committee, and in it was sentence which had been struck out which stated that $2 a binocular would be allowed for "incidentals."

Mr. Carvell asked if this was not to go to Col Hurdman.

This Mr. Birkett denied. It was for telegraphing, expressage and incidentals as stated. He wanted Bilsky to bear part of his expense. Mr. Birkett said that Mr. Bilsky and Mr. Taylor, his partner, went to New York in an endeavor to get the binoculars. There was such a demand for field glasses with all the allied Governments in the market that all they were able to obtain were 156 pairs. The market was in an uproar. Prices were going up every hour.

Did Not Pay Commission

"Did you pay any officers in the militia department a commission?" asked Hon. Mr. Dr. Reid.

"No; I did not offer any."

The invoices were produced, and according to the compilation of Mr. Carvell, the glasses cost about $32 a piece.

Mr. Bell testified that he had bought twelve glasses from Bilsky at $44 and sold them to the Government at $48 each.

Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

TRAMPS LOOKED AFTER

Six tramps, four of whom were Canadians, ranging from 22 to 30 years of age, were last night provided with shelter at the police station.

A FALSE ALARM

The fire brigade was called out this morning to Pinnacle Street. It was a false alarm, however; the call being sent in by an employee of the evaporator who saw steam coming from the roof of his own house.

VIOLATED MOTOR ACT

Last night between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock an automobile was being driven up Front street without any lights lit. The police ascertained the number of the car and the owner will be summoned up for violating the Motor Act.

ATTENDING OBSEQUIES

Mr. and Mrs. James Warham of this city were to-day at Napanee attending the obsequies of the late Mr. Robert Frizzell, who died in that town. Deceased was a former well-known resident of Canifton, where he was well and favorably known.

RECRUITS ARRIVE HERE

A number of recruits from Kingston who have been attached to the 39th Battalion in this city, arrived here this morning. A striking feature in connection with the attachment was the fact that they had as a mascot a fine specimen of a dog of the bull terrier species.

MISS SIMPKINS TO ASSIST

Miss Helen Simpkins, soprano, late pupil of Mrs. Charles Wilmot, will assist at the concert in aid of the University Base Hospital, which takes place in Convocation Hall, Toronto, Wednesday, March 31. The talent is from the student body and the women's and men's gymnasium classes.

REMAINS BURIED HERE

Yesterday afternoon the funeral of the late Mr. George Holmes who died in Montreal, took plac in this city from the residence of his uncle, Mr. Frank Rutherford, Alexander street. Many relatives and friends were in attendance. Services at the house and interment at Belleville cemetery were conducted by the Rev. A. S. Kerr, pastor of St. Andrew's church. Many floral tributes were placed upon the casket by relatives and friends.

ALLEGED MISAPPROPRIATION

At an early hour this morning Herbert Lindstorm of this city, was placed under arrest and the charge preferred against him is of a serious nature. He is accused of the theft of money which he should have accounted for. It appears that Lindstorm is the local secretary-treasurer of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Railway Employees, or in other words the trustee of the funds of section men who are employees upon the G. T. Railway. It is alleged that the accused has not for the months of November and December and the months of January and Februray remitted to Grand Secretary Treasurer Zeal of the Unon, monies which were in his possession amounting to over $200, hence his arrest. The case was not in a position to be tried and an enlargement was made until April 7th. Lindstorm in the meantime has been committed to jail.

CARPET BALL MATCH

A most interesting game of carpet ball was played last evening at the Ancient Order of Foresters Hall on Front street, between teams representing the Foresters and the Yoke Fellows Mens' Bible Class in connection with the Baptist church. The result was that the Foresters were submerged by the Baptist. Eight games were played during the evening, and the Baptist players secured 6 to their opponents 2. The number of points secured by the immersion players was 131, whilst the Foresters were only able to hew out 110. It was, however, an enjoyable contest, all taking part being most friendly to each other. At an interval during the game refreshments were served by the members of the Forester Society, and it is needless to state that they were thoroughly enjoyed. At the conclusion of the match Mr. A. Blackburn on behalf of the Yoke Fellows' class moved a vote of thanks to the Foresters for their hospitality. This was seconded by Mr. P. Fisher and was carried unanimously, and the singing of "They are Jolly Good Fellows." The vote of thanks was fittingly acknowledged. The Foresters feel confident that they will be able to swamp their Baptist friends when the return match is played.

Keeps Tab On the Eitel

With the Time Fixed for Repairs Drawing to a Close, German Ship Being Watched

WASHINGTON, March 29.—With the time limit fixed for the German cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich to make repairs at Newport News nearing expiration and with the battleship Alabama on her way from Philadelphia to Hampton Roads to enforce American neutrality, interest renewed here today in any move that Commander Thierichens might make. He must soon either renew his merchant raiding expedition in the face of the warships of Allied nations, waiting off the Virginia Capes to capture her, or intern his ship until the end of war. The Prinz Eitel was reported still at her dock at Newport News early today, with smoke pouring from both funnels.

Possibility that the Prinz Eitel would soon make a dash for the open sea, caused despatch of the Alabama on neutrality duty, although officials here have thought that Commander Thierichens would ask for government permission to intern his vessel.

Major Gault Received by King

LONDON, March 29.—The Fort Garry Horse attended service at Canterbury Cathedral yesterday. They marched to the cathedral attended by a British cavalry band. Colonel Paterson and other officers were mounted. The Archbishop who preached, said:

"You are Canadians, at once sons of the British Empire and citizens of a great Dominion with a boundless future, and incalculable possibilies for its limitless and innumerable people, who are to be. Canada is rightly athrob in these years with young life; It is the boyhood time of a mighty nation."

"Increased Fire Effect."

News from the front of Canadians has been scanty for a few days past, but it is understood nearly all the branches of the division are having a quiet time. A letter received this morning sayr:

"Things are still keeping pretty quiet, although there are plenty of aeroplanes flying about. Things will be moving, I expect, in a day or two, although do not expect any such artillery battles as that we had the week before last. There were over a thousand British shells in the air at one time."

Letters Too Lengthy.

The censorship over letters from Canadians at the front is growing more rigid, due to many men writing letters considered far too long. Such letters very probably do not betray the slightest secret, but as they all have to be read by the censor that official finds himself overworked.

Major Hamilton Gault, Princess Pats, was received by the King at Buckingham Palace on Saturday.

THINK STEFANSSON ALREADY PERISHED

OTTAWA, March 29.—That Stefansson, the explorer, is lost in the Arctic, is the belief of Hon. J. D. Hazen, head of the Naval Service Department which equipped the expedition. In a discussion of the estimates of the Department on Saturday night, Hon. Frank Oliver asked for information about the expedition. The Minister told of all the news that had come back from different branches of the expedition. Stefansson with two other men, left other members of the party over a year ago. They were on drifting ice, and hoped by the spring to reach Siberia, or else land on Banks Island, where they would find supplies. From Banks Land they would come across the ice again to the north coast of Canada if they did not meet a steamer.

"It is possible, but not very probable that Stefansson will be found alive," said Mr. Hazen, as Captain Bartlett, of the wrecked Karluk, had been in Ottawa, however, and said that Stefansson was very resourceful and would come through if any man could.

Hon. Frank Oliver said that an articles in Harper's Magazine, by Bert McConnell, Stefansson's secretary, reflected on the Government for not trying harder to rescue lost members of the expedition.

Hon. Mr. Hazen replied, "Even if Stefansson is lost, as I'm afraid is the case, the Government is doing everything that can be done of a practicable nature." He adds that Mr. Connell had been here and urged sending aeroplanes north to search for Stefansson and his companions This was considered entirely impracticable. There were three Government ships up there, the Alaska, Mary Sachs and the North Star, and they had instructions to set out this spring in search of the three men. All other vessels going north were also keeping a watch out.

DENY REPORTS OF LADY PAGET'S DEATH

NEW YORK, March 29.—The report that Lady Ralph Paget, daughter of General Sir Arthur and Lady Mary Paget, had died while engaged in Red Cross work in Servia was denied in a cablegram received yesterday by the Associated Press from her mother, who is in London. The telegram said:

"Lady Paget is most touched by the kind sympathy of her friends in America, and cables saying that the rumor is false. Her daughter is out of danger in Servia."

The report that Lady Ralph Paget had died of spotted typhus fever in Servia was given out in Berlin Thursday by the Overseas New Agency and forwarded by wireless telegraphy to Sayville, L.I.

Lady Ralph Paget, who is a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Paran Stevens of New York, has been active in war relief work, and some time ago she went to Servia to take charge of a hospital. She was there stricken with a serious illness, from which she is now recovering.

SANK A NFLD. BOAT

Kronprinz Wilhelm Rammed Fish-Laden Schooner

NEW YORK, March 29.—Two members of the crew of the British schooner Wilfrid M., of St. John's, Newfoundland, sunk on January 15th by the German auxiliary cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, arrived here today on the Voltaire. Stephen Simmons and C. Lisen, the two seamen said the schooner was bound from St. John's to Bahia, Brazil, with a cargo of fish, when she was stopped by the German ship, and the crew ordered to leave the ship within 15 minutes. After they had been transferred in their own long boat, the Kronprinz Whilhelm rammed the schooner three times and sank her. The crew of the Wilfred M. numbered seven all told, and were put on the collier Otoa and taken to Buenos Aires. The captain and four men went home by way of Boston.

MINISTER ASKED TO SEEK NEW CHARGE

FREDERICTON, N.B., March 29.—A Ministerial Court, composed of clergymen of the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island conferences of the Methodist Church, has found a member of the Conference guilty of uttering unpatriotic sentiments from the pulpit.

Rev. J. K. King, the minister in the charge of the Nashwak circuit, was accused of having used unpatriotic language in reference to the part of Great Britain and Canada in the war.

SAID F-4 WAS UNLUCKY

Member of Crew, in Letter, Described Explosion Aboard Her

PORTLAND, Ore., March 29.—'The F-4 has been the unluckiest boat in the flotilla", wrote George L. D. Deeth to a friend here in a letter dated early in March. Deeth was a member of the submarine's crew. is name appears among those of the men who were aboard the boat on her fatal dive.

"Since we arrived here it has been just one thing after another", continued the letter, which then describ-inside of the boat", he wrote. "It ed an explosion that had occurred on the vessel the day previous.'

"The explosion almost wrecked the bruised a number of us by hurling us against the side of the ship. I was busy working at a small desk when it occurred. I was thrown against the top of the boat and came down with a bang. While I was in the air something struck me on the legs. It was almost an hour before the sting had left. We were all lucky enough to come out of it.

HAIL HIM! HAIL HIM! EARTH'S NEW SOVEREIGN

Millennial blessing. As the trials came upon the Jews in a subtle manner to test their faith and obedience, so even more subtle will be the trials and testings connected with the Harvest of the Gospel Age. See Malachi 3:3, 3.

Natural and Spiritual Israel are contrasted. Through the Prophet the Lord foretold that Messiah would be "for a Stone of Stumbling and a Rock of Offence to both the Houses of Israel"—Natural Israel and Spiritual Israel. (Isaiah 8:14.) We have seen how the first House stumbled on Palm Sunday—commemorated today. They stumbled "because they knew not the time of theis visitation." They did not know that the time had come for the election of the Kingdom class; hence they failed to be in proper heart condition to receive the bless'ngs—1 Thessalonians 5.4.

Many things indicate to us that we are now living in a time corresponding to that Palm Sunday! Many things imply that Christendom is now undergoing its great test; that we are now in that time when God's true people are being divided into two classes, as pictured for us in the parable of the Ten Virgins. As only the Wise Virgins were prepared to enter into the marriage, so only the fully consencrated will be accepted as fit for the Kingdom and granted a share in the glorious resurrection change which will precede the culmination of the Time of Trouble in which the Foolish Virgins, although not of the world, will participate with the world.

True, the great Time of Trouble will usher in the glorious Millennial Dispensation, in which the Church in glory with the great Redeemer will pour out upon all mankind the wonderful restitution blessings promised by the mouth of the holy Prophets. (Acts 3:19-23). True the Foolish Virgins may subsequently get the oil, and may attain a glorious future; but they will lose the choice place of Divine favor and blessing. They cannot be of the Bride class but will receive their blessings as "the virgins her companions that follow her."—Psalm 45:14.

"See That Ye Refuse Not Him.'

As the Jewish nation was not ready to receive Jesus as their King on that first Psalm Sunday, neither is Christendom ready ready to receive Him at His Second Advent. As only the Israelites, indeed" knew the Shepherd's voice, so here will it be an individual matter. The Laodicean period of the Church's history is upon us (Revelation 3-17.) The nominatism of our day is fully portrayed in our Lord's words to the Messenger of the Church at Laodicea. Christendom boasts that she is rich and increased in goods, and has need of nothing; she knows not that she is poor, miserable, blind and naked.

Our Lord now stands at the door and knocks. Ours is Palm Sunday in the highest possible sense. How are we receiving the great blessings which betoken His Parousia? Do we hear His knock? Are we searching His Word and seeking to know His will in all things that we may do it? To all such will come very shortly, we believe, the greater Pentecostal blessing—the resurrection change from the glory of character merely to the glory of person as well, when we shall see our Redeemer as He is and shall share His Glory—1 John 3:1, 2.

Greater light, greater privilege, greater blessing, are ours than were those enjoyed by the Jews at our Lord's First Advent. These privileges and blessings are our tests. Let us be faithful. The Lord is now looking for Saints, for overcomers, valiant faithful persevering thoroughly devoted to Him and His Cause of Righteousness, thoroughly oposed to sin, and especially active in overcoming its domination in their own hearts, in their own minds, and in their own bodies. Sbch the Master pictures as His joint-heirs, priestly kings, sitting with Himself in His Throne of glory and world-wide dominion.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

Vol. 48 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1915. No. 271

Turned Back To Lindsay

Medical Examiner Displeased With The Slaughter at Belleville

Says the Lindsay Warder: Probably nothing aroused more comment around town since the first red coat received his billet which directed him to his proper quarters than the return of 27 soldiers on Friday night and 60 more on Saturday evening from Belleville, where they had been rejected by the examining physician there who pronounced them physically unfit for overseas campaign. It was apparently a careless examination made by the physician, and reflects in no small degree upon his skill and fitness for such a position. The men were ruthlessly cast aside and rejected according to reports for trivial defects.

Doctors McCullough and McAlpine gave the returned soldiers a thorough examination yesterday and pronounced them physically fit. A number of those cast aside in Belleville were men who had seen service and wore badges and stripes that demonstrated their perfect manhood to cope with an adversary as becomingly today as in previous years.

An investigation will be held before a board of enquiry, composed of capable physicians, at the Armouries, when the matter will be fully dealt with. Colonel Duff, head of the medical staff, will, it is expected, arrive to-day to conduct the investigation.

THAW TAKEN TO COURT

But Arrangements on Writs Will Await Appellate Decision

NEW YORK, March 30.—Warden Hanley took Harry K. Thaw from the Tombs to the Supreme Court yesterday on one of the writs obtained to keep him out of the Matteawan Asylum. In accordance with an agreement not to argue any of the writs until the Appellate Division decides the question whether Thaw shall be returned to New Hampshire, Justice Bijur adjourned the case until next Monday. There will be another adjournment then unless the decision of the higher court is handed down in the meantime.

Thaw wore no overcoat, and he did not appear to need one. His cheeks were rosy and his eyes bright. He said he was feeling fine.

DR. PLATT NOMINATED BY W. HASTINGS LIBERALS

Those Responsible for Graft, He Says, Disgrace Canada—W. A. Buchanan Speaks

Dr. E. O. Platt of this city this afternoon received the unanimous vote of the Liberals of the Federal riding of West Hastings to be their standard-bearer in the next election for the House of Commons. Dr. Platt asked time for consideration as to whether or not to accept the nomination.

Mr. William A. Buchanan, M.P., of Medicine Hat, delivered an address.

W. H. Hubbell of Marmora was elected President; Joseph Templeton Belleville, Secretary; D. Jones, Trenton, Treasurer, and F. E. O'Flynn, Belleville, Chairman of Special Organization Committee. E. T. Marsh, Trenton the retiring President, occupied the chair.

The millinery openings would seem to suggest a safe and sane aster, unless some unforeseen casualties appear when the bills are presented.

LONGER HOURS FOR VOTING IN DOMINION ELECTION

Polls Will Open at Eight in the Morning and Will Not Close Until Six in the Evening—Western Provinces Lose Registration Fees

OTTAWA, March 30.—In the Commons this morning Hon. C. J. Doherty introduced a bill which will extend the hours for voting in Dominion elections. The polls will be open from 3 o'clock in the morning until 6 p.m., instead of from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. as at present.

Another important amendment gives workmen an additional hour at noon without loss of pay to cast their vote. It is also provided that a candidate must put on his nomination papers an address at which legal processes may be served upon him, in the event of his election being protested.

Another bill introduced by Mr. Doherty was one to amend the Controverted Election Act, the object of the amendments being to expedite election trials. The form of petition has been materially simplified, while provision is made for more specific information than is found in the blanket petitions which it is now customary to file in the courts. The trial judge is given the power to summons any witnesses whom he considers ought to be examined. He is also authorized to fix a date for the trial within fifteen days after the parties to the case fail to agree upon a date, instead of within thirty days as is now the case.

Another Government Act does away with the practice in Alberta and Saskatchewan of allowing a man whose name is not on the voters' list to deposit his ballot after swearing that he is entitled to a vote. In future this privilege will be accorded to voters in the Yukon only. The measures were given a first reading.

The bill by which the Government proposes to enable Canadian soldiers on active service during the present war to exercise the electoral franchise appeared on the order paper of the House of Commons this morning for the first time.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier suggested that the bill should stand over until the resolution had been dealt with, and this was agreed to.

Hon. Frank Cochrane gave notice that the discussion on his resolution giving the Government authority to lease or acquire the G.T.P. branch line from Lake Superior Junction to Fort William, would take place tomorrow.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier asked if any agreement had been arrived at with the company. Mr. Cochrane said that a lease had been sent to the company and there was some correspondence. There had also been correspondence with the G.T.P., in regard to the taking over of the National Transcontinental. Sir Wilfrid Laurier asked that this correspondence be produced.

PREACHES "LOVE THE FOE"

Canon Simpson's Advice to Englishmen at St. Paul's

LONDON, March 30.—Canon Simpson, preaching in St. Paul's Cathedral from the text "Love Your Enemies", said the war had brought to Englishmen a noble opportunity if they had the grace to use it, to love their enemies. No one, then, would believe the tales of barbarism related of the foe. No one would sneer at culture or urge the ignoble working of hate or assume self-righteously the prerogative of punishment.

It was not enough, he said, to defend England's shores or liberate Belgium to succor France and to give peace to Europe.

"We must", he added, "make an effort to love Germany as God loved us."

GERMAN FLEET BOMBARD LIBAU

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 31.—The Libau correspondent of Reuter's sends a message saying that as a result of two bombardments of Libau by the German fleet three persons have been killed and seven wounded, and fifteen houses damaged. Telegraph wires also were wrecked and the steamer Baltica in the port sustained damage.

STEAMER ELLERMAN SUNK BY SUBMARINE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 31.—The Ellerman Line steamer Flaminian, with a general cargo, from Glasgow to Cape Town, was sunk off the Scilly Islands on Monday, March 29th, presumably by a German submarine. The crew was saved.

Casualties Among Canadian Forces

OTTAWA, March 31.—(Special.)—The casualties in the Canadian force issued by the Militia Department this morning are as follows:

3RD BATTALION

Reported wounded—Private Daniel Russell Armitage (nature of wounds not yet reported), March 24. Next of kin, Mary Armitage, 4 St. Peter's St., Lindsay, Ont.

Wounded—Pte. Duncan McPhee, Glendale, Isle of Skye.

Death—Private Gideon Heath, Mar. 23, at No. 13 General Hospital, Boulogne, of bronchitis. Next of kin, Mary Heath, No. 105 Sixteenth street, Lachine, Que.

Private Richard George Johnson, March 26, at No. 14 General Hospital Boulogne, of enteric fever. Next of kin, Mrs. Charles Johnson, Carson, Man.

4TH BATTALION

Wounded—Captain George Rogers, Barrie, Ont.

1ST BATTALION

Wounded—Private Thomas Kerr Shaw, No. 8 Stationary Hospital, Rouen, March 22, gunshot wounds in shoulders. Next of kin, John Shaw, Essex Dairy Farm, Walkerville, Ont.

Private Archibald McLennan, March 18. Next of kin, Mrs. Alex. McLennan, Corunna, Ont.

First Orillian to Fall

Orillia, March 30.—Today's casualty list contains the name of the first Orillian to die a hero's death in France. John Turnbull of the 9th Battalion was the second son of Mr. Robert Turnbull, Orillia township. He enlisted at Hamilton with the 91st Highlanders. He was employed by the Canadian Westinghouse Company, and resided at 410 Barton street.

Seriously ill—Nursing Sister Annie Hayhurst at Duchess Home, Beaumont street, London, mastoid operation. Next of kin, Mr. T. Hayhurst (brother) 13 Fairmount avenue, Hamilton.

For the consumer to maintain his neutrality is difficult when he is told the opening of the Dardenelles would force down the price of wheat.

DESTROYER OF FALABA FLEW BRITISH ENSIGN

LONDON, March 31.—(Special.)—The inquest at Milford Haven in the matter of the sinking of the Elder-Dempster steamer Falaba has established an official death list of 111. Witnesses under oath testified to what had previously been charged, that the submarine fired before sufficient time had elapsed for the removal of the passengers.

The official announcement is made that among the missing passengers of the Falaba, which was sunk by a German submarine, is Leon Chester Thrasher, an American engineer, who had been living for the past year on the Gold Coast, British West Africa.

William Baxter, chief officer of the Falaba, contributed the odd statement that the submarine crew were dressed in khaki. He also swore that the submarine, when first sighted, flew the British ensign, which was replaced by the German ensign prior to the attack.

Other officers stated that the submarine was at least three knots faster than the Falaba.

The missing boat from the British steamer Aguila, sunk by a German submarine off the Pembrokeshire coast and containing fifteen members of the steamer's crew and two passengers, has reached safety.

This is the fourth boat that put out from the steamer after the submarine attacked it. It was believed to have foundered. The number of men now supposed to have lost their lives with the sinking of the Aguila is nine.

SIR MACKENZIE SAYS ONTARIANS ARE FAIR

Deprecated Introduction of Such Contentious Questions as Bilingualism

OTTAWA, March 31.—(Special.)—Sir Mackenzie Bowell spoke on the bilingual resolution in the Senate yesterday afternoon. Speaking of an editorial in a Toronto paper, which was quoted by Senator Edmunds, Sir Mackenzie stated that he could quote twenty articles from Quebec papers which were many times charged on the other side.

The people of Ontario, he claimed were fair, and had dealt magnanimously with the minority. Rule 17 was intended to give French children an opportunity to learn English. The French-Canadian Bishop of Timiskaming, he said, had stated that Rule 17 did not work an injustice, and was applied successfully without any friction in the schools of his diocese.

He deprecated the introductions of such questions, which led to friction and ill-feeling.

Sir Mackenzie spoke with considerable force, despite his age of ninety-two years.

Speaker Landry in the Senate ruled out of order Senator Power's Provincial rights amendment to the David bilingual motion. He said it was expanded negative, and practically a substitute motion, and Senator Power appealed against the ruling.

The Senate by a vote of 31 to 21 refused to sustain the Speaker's ruling, and, with the exception of Senators Edwards, McSweeny and Costigan who voted for the Speaker, the votes for the ruling were cast by French-Canadian members.

DOCTOR SAYS JOHNSON HAS SMALLEST HEART

HAVANA, March 31.—(Special.)—With the battle for the world's heavyweight championship less than one week away, Jack Johnson and Jess Willard today began reducing their training routine. Willard is so fit that he virtually laid off and planned no work aside from a walk and run of a few miles at seven o'clock this morning. The balance of the day he will spend in resting and sight-seeing. Johnson took some short sprints on the road and went through his regular pugilistic training in the stadium in the afternoon.

The pugilists were examined and measured by physicians again last night. Each man is said to be in splendid condition with regard to their organs and muscles. One doctor said Johnson had the smallest heart of any man he had ever examined. These latest measurements show that the champion is today heavier and more muscled than he was at Reno in 1910. Nevertheless, Willard is the bigger man in almost every particular.

A group of Cuban ministers, representing various evangelical missions centred in Havana, have filed a protest with the government officials against the fight, and some American ministers living here have addressed an open letter to tourists protesting against their support of the bout. No particular attention is being paid to these protests by the Cuban officials or the fight promoters.

WAS TO RECEIVE SUBSTANTIAL RAKE-OFF

OTTAWA, March 30.—A sensation was sprung in the Public Accounts Committee, this morning, when Sam Bilsky, a prominent Ottawa jeweller, swore that according to an agreement brought him by T. M. Birkett, a well known Ottawa dealer, to supply binocular to the Government, Col. Hurdman, inspector of technical equipment and an appointee of the late Government, was to get a rake-off of $2 per glass.

A feature of the morning session was the fight which Liberal members put up against a full cross examination of Bilsky, called as their own star witness.

KAISER AND VON KLUCK ENGAGE IN QUARREL

LONDON, March 30.—General von Kluck, the German commander who led the advance into France, according to travellers from Berlin, was wounded when he was recklessly inspecting trenches at the most dangerous point on the line after a stormy interview with the Emperor William, says an Amsterdam despatch to the Express. It is learned from the same source that the opinion is expressed in Berlin that as the result of the incident the Emperor will entrust the command of von Kluck's army to Prince Eitel Friedrich.

4TH BATTALION WIPES OUT A GERMAN PARTY

From Twenty-Five to Forty of The Enemy Accounted For by the Canadians in Surprise Attack at Midnight

LONDON, March 31.—(Special.)—Writing from France a Toronto officer describes how one company of the Fourth Battalion wiped out between 25 and 40 Germans.

"One night," he says, "the Germans fired on our working party, so we decided to teach them a lesson. We knew their sentries were being relieved at midnight, so suddenly we let loose a rapid gun fire from the whole company and the machine guns. I doubt if any escaped. They lost between 25 and 40 men."

W. A. Dingman Writes Home

France, March 11, 1915.

Friend Robert:—

I have been going to write you a short letter for some time, but when I have started, have always been interrupted. I shall now take advantage of a few spare moments.

We boys had a very good time while in training on the plains in England; surely did travel some. I was in Glasgow for the New Year and believe me, I did enjoy myself. I shall give you details when I see you again. Well, Robert, we are certainly up against the real thing here. Our first time in the trenches was on the 19th of last month, and we got initiated all right; were only eighty yards from the Germans. We lost a few boys, but none from Belleville. We now have four days in the trenches, then four days out for rest. This last time in we had two casualties in our company. Capt. Abell, of Cobourg, was shot through the foot, and we are more than sorry to lose him, although it will only be for a short while. We are under artillery fire nearly every day, and believe me, our boys can surely retaliate. Our artillery boys are considered one of the best batteries going. They have certainly done some damage to the Germans and their guns. We Belleville boys have been lucky up to now; none of us have been wounded, and we are getting the Germans every day. There is a big fight on the left of us today. You ought to hear the big guns roaring. Well, Bob, if we get home safely we will certainly have some story to tell. Believe me, this is WAR. I would like to give you details, but our letters are censored, and anything in them that don't suit is erased. I am writing this on my cap by the light of a small piece of candle, and as things are getting warm along the lines we may be called on, so I will have to conclude and get a rest. Regards to Charlie, Messrs. Foy and Blaylock, also Art Rodbourne. Success to you and yours.

Sincerely,

W. A. DINGMAN.

P.S.—Spafford, just over to see us, sends regards. Has done some splendid work with the guns.

FRENCH CRUISER FIRED ON GERMAN SUBMARINE

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 31.—The Minister of Marine announces that a French light cruiser yesterday afternoon fired upon a German submarine off Dieppe and then ran over her just as she submerged. Quantities of oil coming to the surface indicates that the submarine sank.

LIQUOR LICENSE BILL

(Canadian Press Special)

TORONTO, March 31.—By a vote of 69 to 23, the Ontario Legislature at 3.10 this morning carried through its final stages the liquor license bill of Hon. W. J. Hanna. The vote was preceded by a warm debate lasting ten hours.

NEW YORK VILLAGE DESTROYED BY FIRE

(Canadian Press Special)

WATERTOWN, N.Y., March 31.—In a fire which practically destroyed Norfolk village, with a loss of $200,000, Mrs. J. Thomas, her two children and sister, lost their lives.

NO MODIFICATION IN THE SITUATION

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 31.—An official communication today simply says that no modification of the situation has been reported since the last communication.

HEAD OF ROTHSCHILDS DEAD

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 31.—Lord Rothschild, head of the English branch of the Rothschild family, died in London today.

While the crusade against tuberculosis is doing very well, the efforts to discourage war have had no success worth mentioning.

Perhaps the submarine and mine are declared immoral on the ground that they belong in the underworld.

The average man's idea of revenge is to take the alarm clock out into the back yard and hit it with an axe.

LINE TO JOIN THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL DEFERRED

Work on the Montreal Branch Will Not be Carried Out This Year—When Built Will be up to Standard of N.T.R.

OTTAWA, March 30.—Work on the line to connect Montreal with the National Transcontinental Railway will probably not go on this year, though a vote of $1,000,000 has been provided in the estimates for that purpose. When the item was considered during railway estimates last night, Hon. Mr. Cochrane, minister of railways, said in this regard that the line would meet the N.T.R. at Belle Riviere and would be as direct a connection as the physical characteristics of the country would allow. Of the million dollars voted last year $250,000 had been paid to the North Railway Company, in return for expenditures which had been made on surveys and other preliminary work in connection with the line which that company had first projected.

Mr. Cochrane stated that although the vote was made he doubted whether any work would be done on the road this year.

When it was built, however, it would be up to the standard of the N.T.R., and its estimated cost was between $50,000 and $60,000 a mile.

On a vote of $2,500,000 for Halifax terminals, Hon. Mr. Cochrane said that when completed they would supply shipping accommodation for a number of years for all lines of railway, and would afford accommodation for 30 vessels at once.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham stated that the Intercolonial had been misunderstood for a number of years, and he wished it understood that no matter what Government was in power, the Government system was a business proposition of value to Canada.

Hon. Frank Cochrane said that had he followed the example of other railways and reduced the staff of the Government road, he could have dispensed with the services of 3,000 men and thus saved $6,000 a day. He would thus have been able to show a substantial surplus on the year's operations.

The Minister stated in connection with a vote of $5,500,000 for the new Welland Canal that the work would be completed in three years. There were four contracts still to be let.

He expected that the Rice section of the Trent Valley Canal would be under way in 1916, and that the canal would be completed in October of that year.

Kingston Man Will Make City a Laughing Stock for Absurd By-Law

KINGSTON, March 31.—(Special.)—Because Joseph Nash proprietor of the College Book Store, put a Union Jack out in front of his store, and caused it to float over the sidewalk, he violated one of the city bylaws and in police court Magistrate Farrell imposed a fine of $1 and costs. Nash said he would make a laughing stock of the city for having a bylaw of such a nature.

FRENCH GUN HONORED FOR HEROIC CONDUCT

PARIS, March 30.—A cannon—naturally one of the famous seventy-fives—has just been mentioned in an order of the day for gallantry in action. The mention runs:

"The fourth piece of the Third Battery of the Thirteenth Regiment, placed only 800 metres from the enemy, lost its commander and crew, but nevertheless served only by Lieutenant Sanche and non-commissioned officers Jiudicelli and Mercier, continued firing until the enemy's artillery had been silenced."

This novel method of recognising the heroism of three gunners, aptly illustrates the French artilleryman's custom of regarding guns as living creatures requiring special treatment, and having individual peculiarities.

BIRKENHEAD DOCKERS REFUSE TO WORK

LIVERPOOL, March 30.—The Birkenhead dockers this evening refused to do the week-end work until the shipowners agreed to pay them on Saturdays for the work done Friday nights and Saturdays.

John Sexton, Secretary of the Dockers' Union, addressed them, but was unable to persuade the men to change their decision. The suggestion that the military might be called upon to do their work was received with derisive laughter.

160,000 Germans Land in Austria

LONDON, March 31.—(Special.)—The Morning Post correspondent at Berne cables: News has just reached me that about 160,000 German troops have arrived in Austria, the greater number being despatched to Cracow and the Carpathians and any point where Russian attack is feared. Troop trains to the number of 170 have reached Angivar since March 24, most of the men in them being Bavarians and Saxons, and many of them students under eighteen.

WAR SPIRIT IN GREECE SHOWS NO ABATEMENT

LONDON, March 31.—Special—The return of ex-Premier Venizelos to Athens after a short rest, the tumultuous reception accorded him, and his reiteration of the declaration that Greece must join in the conflict on the side of the Entente powers, have combined to start up further predictions as to when the group of neutral States, which have been wavering so long, will take up arms. But the materials upon which these predictions are based are of the scantiest.

ARRESTED FOR FIRING STEAMER LA TOURAINE

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 31—The Matin says: Raymond Swoboda, who was a passenger on the steamer La Touraine, from New York, has been arrested, charged with setting fire to that vessel on March 6th. Correspondence found in his room is said to indicate that he was entrusted with the task of blowing up the La Touraine.

BERLIN CLAIMS VICTORIES IN EASTERN ZONE

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 31.—A War Office statement says French attacks in the Pont a Mousson district yesterday were everywhere repulsed with heavy loss to the enemy, and that the number of Russian prisoners taken near Krasnopol and on the Skwa River continues to increase.

U-28 DID THE TRICK

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 31.—The German submarine U-28 gets the credit for sinking the steamer Flaminian.

DEATH ROLL.

MISS HATTIE SPRY

As the result of an attack of pneumonia, Miss Hattie Spry, a maiden lady, died at midnight last night. Deceased was a daughter of the late Mr. James Spry and was born in Peterborough, in 1866. She lived the greater portion of her life in this city, where she was well known and highly respected by a large circle of friends. A few days ago Miss Spry was taken ill and pneumonia developed with fatal results. Deceased was a member of the Tabernacle Methodist church, and always took an interest in church work. Two brothers and three sisters survive. The brothers are Louis of Detroit, and James of Manitoulin Island. The sisters are, Mrs. J. R. Davis of this city, Mrs. Knowle of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Mrs. Reynolds of Alton, N.Y.

EDWARD DOYLE

The many friends in this city and vicinity of Mr. Edward Doyle will regret to learn of his demise, which occurred this morning at the family residence on Alexander street in this city. He had been unwell for some months and for the past three weeks had been confined to the house. Deceased, who was 48 years of age, was the eldest son of the late Ald. John Doyle and was born in this city. For many years Mr. Doyle had been connected with the postal service. He was for some time in the post office and for a time was mail clerk on the Belleville—Peterboro' train. Of late years he had been mail clerk on a train from Toronto to Montreal and made Toronto his headquarters. Edward was, by his kindly disposition, universally respected by all who knew him. Deceased was a member of St. Michael's church. An aged mother, six brothers and a sister survive. The brothers are Joseph N., Frank, P. P., J. V., and Wm. L., of this city, and Dr. J. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y. The sister, Miss Loretta is at home. To those called upon to mourn the loss of a loved one will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of many friends. The funeral announcement will appear to-morrow.

The following bids have been received: W. C. Mikel, Esq., K.C., $8.00; J. F. Wills, Esq., K.C., $5.00; Wm. Carnew, Esq., $10.00.

DAMAGED BY WATER

Owing to the fact that yesterday water was turned off on Front street between Bridge street and Victoria avenue, no less than four business places were more or less inundated by water when the later was turned on. The breaking off of the hydrant at the corner of Front and Bridge street was the cause of the water being turned off. Workmen were busily engaged all day in making an excavation for replacing a new hydrant, and at 1.30 this morning the work was completed and the water turned on. In the meantime some taps had been left open with the result that the basins overflowed and water ran down into stores. The places effected were Messrs. Ritchie & Company, Quick & Robertson, W. H. Lattimer and a shoe shining establishment conducted by Greeks. In the stores considerable damage was done to goods. The leakages were discovered by the police, who notified the proprietors of the business places.

"Why Did June Run Away?"

Y.M.C.A. GIRLS 7
BANK CLERKS 7

Quite a number of fans turned out at the Arena last night to see the deciding game between the Y.M.C.A. Girls and the Bankers—the proceeds of the game to be handed over to the Patriotic Fund. Sharp to advertised time Referee Blais set the ball rolling, and from the start the girls took up the offensive, but were unable to get into proper working order until Haggerty by an individual rush drew first blood, giving the Bankers the lead.

This got the girls going and inside a minute after the face-off H. Manley equalized. The girls now got the taste of scoring and kept up the pressure, and Period No. 1 ended leaving the score 3—1 in favor of Y. M. representatives.

Period No. 2 was near being disastrous for the girls, as they were so anxious to score that they frequently left the defence open and Morrison and Haggerty were not slow to take advantage of the absence of C. Leavens and L. Sharpe and between them scored five goals in this period; but the girls were on the move too, and a beautiful end to end rush of C. Leavens ended in the puck finding the nets. Immediately after the face-off Tiny Panter made another brilliant rush and her efforts were rewarded by another major being recorded. Thus period No. 2 came to a close leaving the Bankers one ahead.

No. 3 sees the best hockey of the game, the girls taking the offensive from the start and leaving nothing to chance went right after the puck, while L. Sharpe and C. Leavens guarded the defence as if one of the Dardenelles forts, while F. Panter and Morrison were shooting as if to burst the end of the rink to pieces, but the superb goal tending of M. Sharpe was not be be denied, and the Bankers only succeeded in finding the nets once. With the score 7—5 in favor of the boys only five minutes to go, things did not look any too bright for the Fair Sex, but encouraged by Captain Leavens they made determined attempts to equalize and their efforts were rewarded by P. Ruttan scoring the first and E. Ford, who by the way was responsible for two of the three scored in the first period, tieing the score. Neither teams were willing to play an overtime period, as they were completely exhausted after a strenuous hour's play.

It would be hard to pick out any of the girls for special mention, as they all worked their heads off to break the tie which existed since the teams first met this season; while Captain Gies was the star for the Bankers' contingent. The line-up:

Y.M.C.A. Girls—M. Sharpe, goal; L. Sharpe and C. Leaven, defence; G. Panter, rover; H. Manley, centre; E. Ford and P. Ruttan, wings.

Bankers—Haggerty, goal; Gies and Morrison, defence; Ferguson, centre; Panter, rover; T. H. Halpin and A. N. Other, wings.

Referee—Mr. Blais. Time-Keeper—Mr. J. Phelan.

The net proceeds, which amounted to $13.98, were given by the Girls to the Patriotic Fund.

THE BABY'S WELFARE
A MOTHER'S DREAD

A fear clutches at the heart of the mother that her own little one may not live long. She dreads its second summer, or that it may never wake from its sound sleep. All mankind loves a mother—loves to see a mother love her child. A baby and its mother are insured against ill-health if the mother takes Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a tonic for women that Dr. R. V. Pierce invented nearly a half century ago for women's ills. This is a vegetable tonic, made only of the best roots with glycerine, which puts the female system into perfect, healthy action.

Many mothers of families in the United States have reason to be grateful to the person who recommended Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is put up for the single purpose of curing disease of women. It has sold more largely on this continent than any other medicine for women. Another point in its favor: it is a temperance remedy and does not contain a single drop of alcohol nor of any narcotic.

Young mothers who preserve the charms of face and figure in spite of an increasing family and the care of growing children are always to be envied. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription gives the strength and health upon which happy motherhood depends. It enables the mother to nourish the infant life depending on her, and enjoy the hourly happiness of watching the development of a perfectly healthy child.

FREE—The Common Sense Medical Adviser, bound in cloth, is sent on receipt of 5 dimes (or stamps) to pay expense of duty, wrapping and mailing. Address: Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

Swollen, Aching Veins

A COMMON CAUSE OF DISCOMFORT.

The army of people troubled with swollen veins is a large one and was steadily on the increase until the discovery a few years ago that a germicide-liniment of marked value for other ailments gave prompt relief from this aggravating trouble

Since this accidental discovery hundreds of sufferers have proven its efficiency—it has made good even in cases of long standing.

Mr. R. C. Kellogg, Becket, Mass., before using this remedy, suffered intensely with painful and inflamed veins; they were swollen, knotted, and hard. He writes: "After using one and one-half bottles of Absorbine, Jr., the veins were reduced, inflammation and pain gone, and I have had no recurrence of the trouble during the past six years."

This germicide-liniment—Absorbine, Jr. is made of herbs and safe and harmless to use, which in itself makes it distinctive. Most druggists have it or send $1.00 to the manufacturer, W. F. Young, P. D. F., 457 Lymans Bldg., Montreal Can., and a bottle will be mailed to you promptly. Safe delivery guaranteed.

WITH THE BOYS IN THE BELLEVILLE BARRACKS

The streets of Belleville are spotted with khaki-clad figures. They move about in twos, threes and often in groups of ten or twelve. The men do not stroll. There is no appearance of idling. Seldom is there pause to converse with the civilian. Such conversation as passes is one with another. The attitude, as one may observe is that of earnestness. Of some duty recently assigned or expectant. Occasionally the flat topped hat of the enlisted man is seen standing up from the throng on the street. The wearer is one of the many specimen of manhood, six feet and over, who have volunteered and who are undergoing initiation into the preliminary work of the life of the soldier.

The attitude of the enlisted man is one of partial reserve. He is feeling the influence of discipline. A gathering of men brought together for purpose and lacking discipline is but a mob. Presently the volunteer, having absorbed the idea that he is one of the cogs on the wheel of efficiency and that his movement is to be regulated as a part of the larger movement of the whole gives himself willingly and cheerfully to attaining proficiency in detail. Months from now adherance to that discipline and promptness in execution of the order may mean success or failure, the carrying of a position, or the loss of a trench. He, in the first weeks of his drill begins to realize that this preparation for the battle-field is indeed serious work. He is not invited but to hold such in reserve until he but to hold such in reserve until he may see how best to apply. The end to be achieved is to turn out not automatons but intelligent soldiers. The personal equasion, of bravery, dash, vim and esprit de corps is taken as a part of the game. It is not even thought that the volunteer will be lacking in these attributes. And he never is.

All over the country men are enlisting and enrolling. Taken in and drilled for a few weeks they are transferred to one of the military centres and there stationed. While physical inspection has been made when the enlistment took place, at the temporary headquarters there is more rigorous inspection. It is the pity of it all that only the best, or nearest best should be selected. But it is beyond question that the man who may have some physical defect or ailment, hitherto latent, may under the stress of the campaign and exposure fall down and become a positive hindrance and charge on the force. The field is no place for any but those in fit condition and who may be forced to retire from the field only because of wounds received in action. So thorough inspection is made, and in cases a weeding out and possible rejections for things seemingly trivial, but likely to grow into positive obstructions farther on.

Some hundreds of men have gone to the training headquarters from Peterborough. Detachments have moved off so late as the last two weeks. Others will follow soon as provision may be made to care for and house and train. To get the best of drill and experience men must be drilled in masses as large as may be, and in many respects approaching the conditions of field service. This is impossible, except at a few points, where suitable buildings can be had to house, and territory to allow of evolution and practice. All this is in care of the military authorities and who are acting wisely and for good reason.

The enlisted man leaves home, or the centre where enlisted, and either in civilian dress or in equipment provided is moved to the drill headquarters. Then follows inspection, and the outfitting. Just as the novitiate in some monastic order sets himself apart from the world the coming soldier sets aside the things of civil life. He is given a complete and ample outfit. These he draws from the stores of the quartermaster, who is a sort of munificient and beneficient provider. Once in his new belongings the clothes of the enrolled man are carefully parceled and despatched to his home. He may use them months or years after. For the present he is the King's man. He wears the King's uniform; civil affairs, outside of the interests of wife and family are no concern of his. Such are laid aside with the garments he has discarded

That we may know how our soldier is provided for, let us enumerate his equipment. First let us look at the stores from which this equipment is drawn. All that care and forethought can do has been exhausted in providing things which are necessary, and such things. Safe to say that on the average the volunteer has not had of equal quality in the whole course of his life. Two or three buildings are made use of as storehouses. A disused school has been hastily fitted up, and it is crammed with good things; barely room enough to leave a corner for the men busy in recording the stock and givings out. For a most careful and accurate stock-taking is practiced. Every article and object has to be accounted for.

If a counter or two were provided, the doors thrown open, the prices advertised, the department could do a land-office business as a retailer of good merchandize; for there would be no question of quality. Underclothing of the very finest and warmest, socks, sweaters, mufflers, shirts, jackets, and all intimate personal wear are piled around in profusion. The now familiar khaki uniforms in sets and sizes for all. Nearly two thousand suits are made from cloths well woven on the looms of the Auburn Woollen Co., at Peterborough, the greatcoats look especially comfy appearing. Boots of all sizes, mostly of a reddish brown color. These are some of the leather outfits that we read so much about. But these have been inspected and there is little doubt of their serviceability. At any rate the soldiers wearing them say they are fine. Here, as a matter of record, is personal equipment of the soldier and which he enjoys. The list is that issued to the dismounted men, or infantry: angle boots, forage caps, greatcoat, jacket, puttees, service shirts, service trousers, drab trousers, sleeping cap, housewife, table knife, pocket knife, razor, 2 pairs of socks, 2 hand towels, blacking or polish, winter mitts, Cardigan waistcoat, 3 pairs of boot laces, hair brush, shaving brush, clothes brush, hair comb, 2 pairs of winter drawers, 2 pairs of summer drawers, 2 table forks, holdall, grey flannel shirt, light shirt, table spoons, Dubbin (for boots), kit bag.

In addition each man is given a stout mattress of ticking, which is filled with oat straw, and forms the bed. A pillow filled with straw is the compliment of the tick. Two big, warm, woollen blankets are handed each man. Then with his rifle, cartridge belt, bayonet belt and bayonet, canteen, haversack, etc., one would think that the soldier had acquired so much responsibility in these personal belongings that he would be loaded down. So he would be if he essayed to carry all he claims his own. On the line of march it is taken care of for him. It is crammed into a capacious bag, blazoned with his number and corps and carried on the transport train. It is his privilege and perplexity to find it when he is ready to turn in at night. But the soldier takes care of his own.

It will be seen that the above is a pretty full equipment. Of course neckties and sleeve buttons and such trifles are not included. These have no place in the force. They are left behind with the affairs of civil life. On what is so well provided any man can get along. If he needs anything else he must buy it out of his own private fortune.

Having outfitted the soldier the next thing is to feed him and sleep him. Both most material. The first Napoleon, of whom we hear good and bad, said, or is reported to have said, which is the same thing at this distance: "That an army marched on its stomach". The eminent Corsican was most right. Experience has amply proved. A well fed soldier is a dangerous thing, and that is the kind we are after making, d'ye mind. That is the end of our exertions. The soldier must be housed and mealed and that is what they are doing in Belleville. Doing it well, too, considering this is our first war, our first preparatory experience. After we have gotten our dandruff up and squabbled with our neighbors for a few years, and everlastingly punched the stuffing out of them, we shall be acclimitized, so to speak, and do some things better. That is the result of experience. So to house the soldiers such buildings as were available had to be made use of. Something better than temporary woden structures had to be used, for the winter has been cold.

The buildings of the big and deceased Canning Factory have been utilized. These are a few blocks from the centre of the city and are about as suitable a premises as could have been found: large, roomy, the floors extend from one end to the other. It is of three stories, substantial and built of brick. It was thoroughly cleaned, the walls whitened, floors scrubbed and made clean and sweet. The lower floor is given over to the mess room, and tabled and seated to serve eleven hundred at one sitting. At one end, and separated from the main room is the appliances for cooking. Four big double stoves, or furnaces are attended to by eight cooks. Special boilers provide steam and hot water in large quantities. All the table ware is of the enamelled kind, and is scalded after each using with boiling water and dried by heat. The stoves are set on a wide platform of concrete, removing all danger of fire. Sinks, washing troughs, cupboards and a complete sewer service have been installed. A big refrigerator takes care of the meats. A part of the bread is baked on the premises; great, big, crusty loaves, with the "kind that mother used to make" appearance show up handsomely. Other bread is supplied by local bakers. Foods and supplies are bought in large quantities and of the very best. There is no lack of provender. A good appetite is ensured by the outdoor exercise and there is ample to subdue such wants.

As to the soldier's sleeps, as the children say, the two floors have been fitted up with open bunks, constructed of planed scantlings. These are built across the width of the rooms, each set of bunks provide for twelve men. Getting into the upper bunks is no more troublesome than climbing into the upper berth on a Pullman. Once in, the sleeper may be calm and dream away until the bugle call rouses him for the duties of the day. He lays on the straw filled tick, inserts the straw filled pillow under his head, snugs down into his warm and expensive blankets and snores off to dreamland. All lights go off at ten o'clock. The strictest order is maintained. There is no skylarking. This getting a good night's sleep is a serious business. The only lights left burning, or rather, lighted, are at the entrance to the stairs. The dormitories are warmed by big open, draft hot air furnaces, each set on a wide base of concrete. All pipes are carefully protected and are kept quite within view from the furnace to the chimney.

Something has been printed as to the buildings being a "fire trap". Nothing could be farther from the facts. All that human carefulness can do is done to guard against the possibility of fire. There are ample fire windows and fire escapes. All day and all night the corridors of the dormitories are patrolled by the sentries on duty. They walk unceasingly up and down and across and watch and peer that no fire is in sight. The only way in which fire could occur would be from some soldier trying, by stealth, to smoke in bed. So far that has not occurred. Should a man be detected in so doing the penalty would be heavy.

On a raised platform at the end of the eating room is a piano. The force may be regaled with music while at meals, if the officer in charge permit. In the evenings the men get up concerts and entertainments, and the excellence of the programmes would distance many of the events for which we pay good money to hear and see. The singing is fine and there is plenty of talent available.

Cleanliness is a thing expected and loked after. That there be no excuse ample facilities and conveniences have been provided. The fittings are most substantial, even if not so elaborate as in the city hotels. Around one end of each of the flats a space is partitioned off for a lavatory and bath room. The baths are of the shower variety. Each set of conveniences is served with both hot and cold water and the sprinkling system is efficient. The soldier takes his choice and exercises his preferences. Not only may he bathe if he chooses, but he must do so. That is a part of the regulations having for its care the health of the soldier. Clean towels are provided in profusion. Thirty men each bath on each floor at once. The lavatories are well fitted up and most excellent in arrangement. Drinking water is served on each flat by means of the sanitary drinking jet, doing away with all cups and bowls. Taken altogether the soldier is well clothed, well fed, cleanliness is looked after and insisted on. He has time allowed for some recreations and is, in many cases, better off physically than he has been for many years. If any ailment developes or disease show itself it will come about in spite of the very thorough sanitary arrangements that have been made and that are being carried out and enforced.

Not many years ago a battle in the air would have been pure fiction. Now it is a common-place fact.

CONSIDERATE WITH REBELS

Colonel Maritz and others held responsible for the insurrection in South Africa are not to suffer the death penalty for their foolish and treasonable conduct, although other punishment is to be inflicted. This generous action on the part of the South African Government is sure to be appreciated by the Boers in general, says The Montreal Gazette. The comparatively small number who sought to take advantage of Great Britain's embarrassment to engage in rebellion for the restoration of the Boer republic were sadly misled by their leaders, who made all sorts of promises and lied about the condition of things on the field of war in Europe. The burghers who were thus fooled into action soon had their eyes opened to the true situation, and with the first check to their plans the rebellion dwindled away. The peace was restored after Boer had been defeated by Boer. The thanks of the people of the United Kingdom are due to Sir Louis Botha, the Premier of the Union, and former commander of the forces opposing the British armies in the last South African war. It paid Great Britain to be magnanimous after that war, and history should repeat itself in the present instance.

The Boers have no ground to complain of the treatment accorded them by the British authorities since the war that cost them their republics. It was in 1899 that war was declared and fighting began. Towards the end of 1900 Kruger saw how things were going and fled to Holland, where he died in 1904, a disappointed old man whose ambitious dreams had all come to naught. It was in 1902 that peace was officially declared, and the same year saw the death of Cecil Rhodes. There was no attempt at repression of the Boer liberty, and in 1906 constitutions were granted the Transvaal and Orange River Colony. A year later Transvaal and Orange River ministries were formed under Botha and Fischer respectively. The Union of South Africa was established in 1910, Botha leading the first ministry. There were those who prophesied that Great Britain's former foe would again cause trouble and possibly incite rebellion. But they were mistaken, as events have proved on several occasions. For Botha has been a strong upholder of the British connection all through. He led in putting down the recent abortive revolt that was engineered by some of his former colleagues. He has, in truth, been a wise and capable leader, and is living proof of the wisdom of Great Britain's colonial policy of free government by the colonials themselves.

MRS. BORDEN

The sincere sympathy of all Canada will go out to Sir Robert Borden, Premier, in the death of his aged mother. Mrs. Borden, who was nearly ninety years of age, died at her home at Grand Pre, Nova Scotia, early Monday morning.

It has been Sir Robert Borden's custom, as readers of the press are aware, to pay frequent visits to his mother at Grand Pre, whither he seemed to go for his best inspiration towards public service. This homely association added an intensely human touch to the personal reputation of a man so much in the public eye as Sir Robert has been for many years. It was not the least of the Premier's commendable qualities that he was a dutiful and devoted son.

Canada owed much to the late Mrs. Borden. She gave the country a Government leader who has proved his worth at a critical time. The many thousands of Canadians who know and appreciate the services of the son must also have appreciated the services of the mother.—Montreal Mail.

WHAT THE BORDEN GOVERNMENT HAS DONE FOR THE EMPIRE

Just how energetically the government is carrying out the policy outlined by Sir Robert Borden at the outset of the war, of keeping fifty thousand men continually in training in Canada and of sending forward a continual stream of fighting units to the aid of the Empire is possibly not realized by the people of Canada. Liberal papers who did everything they possibly could to block aid to the Empire two years ago and who refused to permit the Militia Department to be properly manned and equipped to meet an emergency have been indulging in criticisms of the Government because of alleged tardiness. In this they have misrepresented the facts.

The official figures show that Canada today has 95,000 soldiers on active service and under arms. These comprise men in the trenches in Flanders, reserves in England, regiments at Bermuda and the West Indies, the second, third and fourth contingents under training, and the home defences.

The 95,000 men now under arms are distributed as follows:

First Contingent, now at the front, with reserves in England—33,000.

Princess Patricia Light Infantry, and reinforcements—1,600 men.

Royal Canadian Regiment at Bermuda—1,200 men.

Regiment at St. Lucia, British West Indies—500 men.

Thirteen regiments of mounted men—7,400.

Second Contingent, including 4,000 already in England—20,000 men.

Twenty-six regiments of Third and Fourth Contingents—20,000 men.

Men on home defence duty and guarding alien camps—10,092 men.

In addition to the foregoing, there has been sent forward various hospital, veterinary and other detachments, which would make something like fifteen hundred or two thousand men.

CANADIAN TROOPS IN FRANCE.

The First Army Division, now in Flanders, under the command of General Alderson, consists of four brigades, of four brigades of four battalions each. It was accompanied by a squadron of cavalry and a company of cyclists. The artillery at the front consists of three field artillery brigades, the heavy artillery battery with ammunition column, and the divisional ammunition column. There are three divisional engineer companies, a signal company, a supply and transport train, and three medical ambulances.

Besides these troops there are now in England, of the 33,000 who went over with the First Contingent, three battalions which will be used as reinforcements for the infantry, and the 17th Nova Scotia Regiment, which is being used as a general reserve. One infantry battalion, the Sixth, which was originally the 34th Fort Garry Light Horse, of Winnipeg, has been transferred into mounted infantry, and will be used as a depot for the purpose of providing cavalry reinforcements. In addition to these units the First Contingent contained the Royal Canadian Dragoons, the Lord Strathcona Horse, and two battalions of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery. These three units are apparently still in England.

PERMANENT CORPS TO BERMUDA.

When the war broke out the British regular regiment, stationed at Bermuda was recalled, and the Royal Canadian Regiment, Canada's crack permanent corps, of Halifax, was sent to take its place. In addition, a regiment 500 strong, was sent to St. Lucia, British West Indies. No mention of this movement has ever been made in any Canadian newspaper, but as the regiment has been stationed there for some time and all danger of German attack by raiding cruisers has passed, there can be no harm in publishing the fact.

Western Canada in particular is filled with expert horsemen, cowboys, rough riders and frontiersmen. At the outbreak of the war there was a strong demand for these men to be allowed to go as a mounted corps. However, at that time it was apparent that the war was to be one of trench fighting, and the Imperial authorities discouraged the idea. Later, when Turkey threw her turban into the ring it was decided to raise three mounted brigades. These will be sent to Egypt, if required, and if not needed there, may be of use in the later stages of the war in Europe. These consist of thirteen regiments, six of 600 men ,and seven of 550 men. They are all recruited up to full strength, and, in fact, are over strength. Eight of these regiments are in Western Canada and five in Eastern Canada.

SECOND CONTINGENT 20,000 STRONG.

The Second Contingent is now fully recruited, and is carrying on its training preparatory to leaving for the front. Approximately there are 20,000 men, of whom 4,000 are already in England, and may be called upon if required, as reinforcements for the First Contingent. This Contingent consists of a full army division. There are twelve infantry brigades, a squadron of mounted troops, twelve field artillery brigades, a heavy artillery battery, ammunition columns, divisional engineers, signal service, etc.

In addition to the two army divisions, there are twenty-six reserve battalions, which are generally known as the Third and Fourth Contingents, at various stages of evolution. They will only be sent to the front as reinforcements. Most of these regiments are at full strength, and others are at half strength and are daily filling up their ranks. Several regiments have just been authorized, and have only been recruiting for a few days. It is estimated by the Militia Department that some twenty thousand men have been enlisted for these regiments, and the number is growing daily. In addition the latest figures show that there are exactly 10,092 men on active service in Canada, including the garrisons at Halifax, Quebec, Esquimault, and other military towns, the guards on the Welland, St. Lawrence, and other canals, guards on public buildings, and the alien enemies detention camp guards at Petewawa, Fort Henry, Hearst, and other points.

CURRENT COMMENT

In Montreal civic politics the way of the transgressor—or grafter—is apparently easy—but the fellow who attempts to expose him is up against it for fair.

And now bitter complaints are being made about the quality of socks supplied to the Canadian soldiers by contractors. All the more reason why our Canadian women should stick to their knitting.

Ottawa Journal: "A cable despatch from Geneva says the German Emperor has ordered the removal to Berlin of valuable paintings and tapestry from his mountain castle at Koenigsberg. This is a little different from gobbling up Paris."

If the Trenton artist who smashed into the Front street hydrant yesterday morning had kept on to Hotel Quinte, as was his first intention, he would have reached his destination without mishap. It is the quick side twists that get one into difficulty.

Almost daily now come reports of steamers ignoring the orders of German submarines to stop and be torpedoed, and even of freight steamers trying to ram the terrors of the deep. The race of British skippers has evidently not lost any of its proverbial courage.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont's soup kitchen, which fed 25,000 persons during the cold months, has closed its doors until next winter, the demands on it having fallen off of late. The industrial situation in America's chief city must be showing considerable improvement with the coming of spring.

New York Post: "A story comes from England that Lord Desborough recently asked Lord Kitchener what uniform he thought the Citizens' organization should wear if the Germans came. Kitchener replied that they had better wear whatever uniform they would best like to be buried in."

A sweet little Chicago girl is looking for a husband who won't ever want to go to the movies, to theatres or to dances, who will go to church willingly twice each Sunday, who will stay home and think it fun. In return, she, apparently, intends to mend his clothes. Better to be a slave to the tailor.

"It is inconceivable," says the Toronto News, touching the provincial license commission, "that an independent non-partizan commission, holding office on long tenure, can be made subservient to considerations of patronage." But is that commission going to be independent, and is it going to be non-partizan?—Hamilton Herald.

Montreal Mail: "After all is said and done, the Opposition has scored very little in its criticism of the White War Taxes. The Minister of Finance has been confronted by the most difficult set of circumstances that any Canadian Finance Minister ever encountered, and he has done his work with a cautious discretion that has done much to disarm criticism."

trenches they took in the Champagne country is striking and terrible proof of the nature of the fighting. Eleven thousand dead soldiers means that the pick, physically speaking, of a community of at least 50,000 persons, has been lost forever. The Germans are paying heavily for the war their leaders encouraged.

New York Times: "There was a time when many New Yorkers felt that the city could get along very well without a Board of Aldermen. Lately the board has performed its duties conscientiously, its former claim to functions it never should have exercised has been willingly resigned, and the ancient Aldermanic swagger has quite disappeared." Happy New York.

Someone has advocated aeroplane funerals. Still there are a lot of us who will prefer to have our remains transferred to the cemetery in the good old-fashioned way.

According to the calendar, spring has arrived. Now we expect poetic activity and baseball preparations.

PUSHED LAD OFF DOCK INTO WATER

Boy Seventeen Makes Strange Confession to Police About Attempt to Kill Half Brother

MONTREAL, March 30.—Aparently not realizing the gravity of the situation he was in, nor the charge which was brought against him, a lad of 17, made the most amazing confession to Chief of Detectives Charpentier this morning that ever was heard in any police officer's presence.

The boy is charged with attempting to murder his half-brother, aged 13, by throwing him into the river.

"I took my half-brother down to the water front at the foot of Desery street yesterday afternoon and gave him some ginger ale and cigarettes," he said. "I knew the cigarettes would act as "dope" on the little fellow and that he would thus not know what was going to happen to him. When I got him to the edge of the wharf, I gave him a push and he fell into the water. He kicked and struggled and it was really funny to see him. When I saw he was not able to get out I left. That's all."

Such was the declaration the boy made to the chief when he was brought before him by Detectives Beauchamp, who had arrested him at his home at 1766 St. Catherine street east this morning. The lad managed to hold on to the ice when he was thrown into the river and was rescued by passers-by who heard his cries and who thought he had fallen from the wharf. When the little fellow was taken home he told his parents what had happened and the police on being notified arrested the half brother.

The older boy will be arraigned on a charge of attempted murder.

THE KAYSER COMPANY TO OPEN BRANCH IN CANADA

An American Concern That is Not Owned by German and Austrian Interests—Known as the Biggest Silk Glove Producers in the World

(New York Commercial and Financial World)

When an announcement was made that Julius Kayser and Company, known as the largest silk glove manufacturers in the world, with headquarters in New York City, were to open a branch factory at Sherbrooke, Canada, articles appeared in a number of Canadian papers that the officers, directors and stockholders of this house were known as leading German and Austrian financiers. As a matter of fact there are no German or Austrian financiers who own or control the company, and why the false report was spread broadcast throughout Canada is something of a mystery to us, unless some one thought that the word "Kayser" was closely allied to the Kaiser, ruler of Germany, or possibly some Canadian may have felt inimical to the establishment of a branch in Canada on the part of Julius Kayser and Company and heuse spread the false rumor. Since several of our readers in the Dominion have asked us for the truth regarding the report that was spread, we felt it our duty to make the above statement. This house is an American concern outright and the men behind it are not of Teutonic extraction.

This enterprise was founded by Julius Kayser, who was originally a manufacturer of silk mitts in New York and who by introducing the double finger tip for silk gloves laid the foundation for an undertaking which has grown to be the largest of its kind in the world. The firm was originally composed of Mr. Julius Kayser and other young Americans who helped him build up his business. About four years ago the Company was incorporated and its shares are now listed on the New York Stock Exchange. The Company's last report and the statement of financial authorities show that the concern has made a progress that is truly phenomenal and almost without a parallel in the industrial history of this country.

The Kayser house has been manufacturing silk gloves and also Italian silk underwear and hoisery in this country for a period of over thirty years. During that period the house grew from a small concern to the largest producers of silk specialties in the world. A successful branch is operated in London, and the leading stores there have made a feature of these American silk products.

The Company's headquarters have always been in New York City, and the largest factory is in Brooklyn. Owing to the constantly increasing business, due to the merits of the goods, the factory resources have been gradually extended, so that the Company now owns and operates seven factories in the United States and one in Grenoble, France.

The new silk plant in Canada, which will start operations this spring, will be located on Frontenac street, Sherbrooke, and this new factory will be the only Canadian branch for silk glove manufacturing purposes. The Canadian sales office is located in Montreal in conjunction with Perrin Freres the famous French glove makers.

The new factory at Sherbrooke will be built along the most modern lines and give employment to a large corps of Canadian operators. The establishment of the factory at that point is due in a large measure to the very successful business built up for the New York house by Mr. Austin of the Canadian selling staff. In a statement to a reporter for this publication, one of the officers of the Company said recently: "Our locating in Sherbrooke is the outcome of several years' planning, always with a view toward developing further our Canadian business. Our New York factory and other auxiliary plants, are kept busy supplying the merchandise demand in the States, and by operating in Canada we can take care of the needs of Canadian merchants much more promptly and give a more direct and efficient service. One thing has somewhat surprised us, and that is the fact that our concern should be thought other than an American organization. According to published reports we have seen this mistake has been made."

It is our opinion that the Canadians will welcome the opening of the branch factory at Sherbrooke, since it will give employment to many operators and put within easy access of the people a high grade line of goods that stands virtually in a class by itself.

Note—Since the above was written word has come from our Canadian correspondent to the effect that while the rumors regarding this house as being of German origin were widespread that the false impression so created is being refuted by influential members of the daily press and prominent business men in various parts of the Dominion. We are glad to thus go on record as an act of justice to a concern of long and honorable standing which has been placed in a false position before the public in a time when a national crisis is apt to bias otherwise well balanced minds.

TAX COLLECTOR 74 YEARS OLD

Expected to Resign on Account of Feebleness — Gained Strength and Twenty-four Pounds by Taking Vinol.

Corinth, Miss.:—"I am a city tax collector and seventy-four years of age. I was in a weak, run-down condition so that I became exhausted by every little exertion. My druggist told me about Vinol, and I decided to take it. In a week I noticed considerable improvement; I continued its use and now I have gained twenty pounds in weight, and feel much stronger. I consider Vinol a fine tonic to create strength for old people."—J. A. PRICE, Corinth, Miss.

As one grows old their organs act more slowly and less effectually than in youth, circulation is poor, the blood gets thin, the appetite poor and digestion weak. Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, is the ideal strengthener and body builder for old folks because it creates a good healthy appetite, strengthens digestion, enriches the blood, improves circulation and in this natural manner builds up, strengthens and invigorates feeble, run-down, nervous and aged people, and if it does not do all we say, we will pay back your money.

GERMANY MUST BE MADE PAY DEARLY FOR PIRATES' WORK

Morning Post Says Reprisals in Kind are Out of Question—People Who Have Fostered the Barbarous Spirit Will Find Way of the Trangressor is Hard

LONDON, March 30.—The sinking by German submarines of the steamers Falaba and Aguila is commented upon with the greatest bitterness in this morning's papers. Although witnesses differ somewhat as to the exact time allowed for the debarkation of passengers and crews before the torpedoes were fired, it is the concensus of testimony that it was insufficient to get the passengers off. This, together with the reported failure of the submarines to render any assistance, provokes the strongest criticism of Germany's latest methods of naval warfare.

The Morning Post says:

"Germany has boasted that the opinion of the civilized world does not interest her and certainly will not deflect her from her appointed course, and now we have evidence, which now even our utmost incorrigible sentimentalists cannot ignore, that she means what she says.

"To vent her hatred of this country there is no barbarity from which she will shrink, not even the shelling of women passengers as they seek refuge in the boats of a sinking ship. Very well. We must henceforth reckon with that fact.

While Germany thus fixes the brand of infamy on her name, it is our business first of all to take all measures for thwarting this reckless savagery, and, next to make it plain that a dear account will be inexorably exacted for these crimes.

"It is true that the conscience of this country would never allow us to take reprisals in kind, whatever Germany does in the way of murder and outrage. We could not stoop to the lex talionis. But that does not mean that we are to suffer these things passively; that we are to let by-gones be bygones when the time to exact the settlement shall arrive, and extend to the criminals an act of general oblivion and forgiveness. To consent to such counsel would not only be weak, but treachery to civilization and humanity.

"It has become a vital world interest that the spirit which has made these deeds of horror possible cannot be only humiliated but utterly broken, and that the people who have fostered that spirit should be made to repent in bitterness and sorrow. It is our bounden duty to posterity, not less than to the present generation, to see to it that in its ending the way of the transgressor shall be hard."

Act is Simply Massacre

The Daily News says: "If these cases are not the ferocities of individual brutes but the settled ruthlessness of a new phase in the campaign the Germans cannot complain whatever different treatment is hereafter meted out to their submarine crews. Men who deliberately kill unarmed merchant sailors and helpless women have clearly no place in the ranks of honorable combatants of any kind, and can shelter their conduct behind no orders whatever. The sinking of the Falaba has, it is believed, involved the loss of something like 150 lives. It is mere massacre of no military significance whatever, for the prestige of a few officers on board cannot be held to make the torpedoing of an unarmed liner with all on board a warlike operation.

"It weakens in no respect this country's power to conduct the war, but it does strengthen very materially the determination of Englishmen so to conduct it as to bring to strict account the men who can do such things and laugh at them, and the nation and government which can condone and extol them."

The Times says in an editorial that the treatment of non-combatants in Belgium is being repeated at sea and that the world at large will form its own judgment. It adds: "The Lesson we must take to heart is that we are at war with a people who will hesitate at no means to accomplish their ends. The Germans evidently are desperate. The new turn given to their submarine campaign indicates the failure of its first objective, which was to kill our foreign trade. Once more Admiral Von Tirpitz has done us a great service. His latest achievement will complete the education begun by the shelling of Scarborough; it will remove what remains of slackness among us, redouble the national resolution and reinforce national effort."

MRS. WISENEIGHBOUR SAYS:—

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "EDDY'S" Washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an Indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday."

MRS. NEWLYWED says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

"WAR"

A SERIAL STORY BY BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
The Authoress

Many officers and soldiers wandered among the other mourners. Evidently they had shared in the terrible contest, and were now making this pilgrimage to honor their fallen comrades.

We went to that part of the field where the largest number of friends and foes lay entombed together, in one enclosure. To this place the majority of the pilgrims found their way, for here, naturally, they might expect their lost loved ones to be buried. Around this spot they set up their crosses and candles, and here they laid their wreaths and flowers as they knelt and sobbed out their sorrowing hearts.

A tall, slender man, of noble presence, in a general's cloak, approached this central burial ground. All gave way reverently to him, and in hushed whispers I heard: "The Emperor."

Yes, it was Francis Joseph, the ruler of the country, the supreme war lord, and he had come on this All Souls' Day to offer his silent prayers for the souls of his dead children, his fallen warriors. There he stood, with his bowed head uncovered, in agonized and devoted homage before the majesty of Death. He stood long and motionless in profound meditation. I could not turn my eyes from his face. What thoughts were passing through his soul, what sentiments oppressed his overwhelmed heart? I knew he had a good and tender heart. I felt my mind yield to his thoughts, and I felt that I was thinking as he was thinking as he stood there with bowed head:

"You, my own poor, brave soldiers—dead . . . and for what? We did not conquer; and my Venice, too, is lost. . . so much is lost, and all your young lives lost too. And you offered them so devotedly—for me. Oh, if I could give them back, for I never desired this sacrifice! It was for yourselves, your country, that you were led out into this war. Not through me, though I was compelled to give the command. Not for me have my subjects fought. No, I was called to the throne for their sakes, and any hour I would have been ready to die for the good of my people. . . Oh, if I had but followed the impulse of my heart and never said 'Yes' when all about me shouted 'War! war!' Yet, could I have resisted? God is my witness that I could not. What impelled me I do not fully realize, but I know the pressure was an irresistible force outside me—from you—yourselves—my poor dead soldiers. . . Oh, what have you not suffered? And now sad—how sad it all is! And now you lie here—and on other battlefields, snatched away by shot and shell and grape and sabres—by cholera and fever. . . Oh, had I only said 'No!' And you, Elizabeth, begged me to! Oh, if I had only said it! The thought that—is unendurable that. . . Oh, it is a wretched, imperfect world—too much agony—too much woe!"

As I watched him, thinking thus for him, my eyes searching his features—just as I come to the "too much agony, too much woe"—he covered his face with both hands and broke into tears.

So passed All Souls' Day of 1866 on the Sadowa battlefield.

TIME OF PEACE

CHAPTER I.

In Berlin there reigned an evident spirit of jubilation. Even the useless street-loafer had an air of conscious victory. "We have given the other fellows a good thrashing" seemed to give a certain air of conscious victory to every one. Yet nearly every family mourned for some never-to-be-forgotten dead which lay on the battlefields of Germany and Bohemia.

I dreaded meeting Aunt Cornelia again, for Gottfried had been her idol, her all; to measure her sorrow, I had only to fancy losing my Rudolf, if he were a young man—no, I did not dare think it out.

With beating hearts we entered Frau von Tessow's house. Even in the entrance the deep mourning of the house was felt. We were led into my aunt's bedroom, which she seldom quitted, except to go to church on Sunday and for one hour each day, which she spent in Gottfried's little study. Here she took us, and showed us the letter which he had left on his desk:

My Own Darling Mother:—I know you will come here when I am gone and find this letter. We have already parted, and it will please you and surprise you to get these last words, so hopeful and cheerful. Have courage, I shall be back. We are two undivided hearts which hang on each other, and nothing can tear them apart. I prophesy that I shall win stars and crosses in this fortunate campaign, and then come home and make you a grandmother six times over. I kiss your hand, your dear benign forehead, my most adored of all little mothers.

YOUR GOTTFRIED

When I embraced the dear lady, we both broke into loud sobs. Frederick's eyes were wet as he silently pressed her to his heart. Tears were sufficient words to express all we felt.

Our visit was a most sorrowful one, but Frederick was able to give the poor mother the self-same comfort he had brought to me, in assuring her of the instantaneous and painless death of Gottfried.

We were suddenly called from Berlin by the dangerous illness of Aunt Marie. Upon returning, we found her at the point of death

"It is my turn now," she said, "but I am glad. Since my dear brother and the three children were torn away, I have had no delight in life. It has been a great comfort, my dear Martha, to know that you are happy, and since your husband escaped the dangers of two wars and the cholera, it is evident that you are destined to grow old together. Try to educate our little Rudolf to be a good Christian and a good soldier, that his grandfather in heaven may rejoice over him. I shall constantly pray for you from above that you may live long and contented."

After three days of lingering, this last friend of my childhood passed away, resigned, as she had lived, happy in the hope of heaven. She left her small fortune to Rudolf, and appointed our old friend, the Cabinet Minister, as trustee, and since business affairs kept us in Vienna for some months we saw much of him.

Twice a week he dined with us, and though he had now retired to private life was still fond of discussing politics. Frederick tried to turn the conversation away from political gossip, in which the other revelled upon the subject of the rights of humanity. The old gentleman could not follow Frederick, for he merely saw political science from the standpoint of gaining an advantage, and not of giving right and justice the first place.

I usually sat nearby with my needlework, but only listened. The old statesman would hardly think it proper for a woman to mix into such deep subjects. He little realized that I made it my business to record all these discussions in my notebook.

Frederick made no secret of his opinions, although he realized the thankless part one plays in defending theories which are generally thought to be impracticable and grotesque.

"My dear Tilling, I have an important piece of news to-day," said the Minister one afternoon with an air of importance. "It is rumored in government circles that the ministry of war is recommending general obligatory military service."

"What? the system which before the war was so ridiculed?"

"Yes, we did have a prejudice against it, but Prussia has shown its advantages. From your enthusiastic moral, democratic, and liberal point of view, it would seem the ideal thing to have every patriot give himself to his fatherland for service, then . . if we had already introduced conscription, could little Prussia have vanquished us?"

"That simply means that with our added force we would have counterbalanced the enemy's forces. If conscription were introduced generally how could it benefit anybody? The chess game of war would simply be played with greater numbers. This chess game of war would simply be played with greater numbers. The proportion would be the same, and the decision of victory would cost—instead of hundreds of thousands of slaughtered—millions perhaps."

"But do you consider it fair that only a small part should be sacrificed for the benefit of another class, who, chiefly because they are rich, may stay at home? No, indeed; the new law will change all this—every one must serve and none can buy his freedom from it. Besides, the educated and intelligent make the finest material for soldiers."

"But the enemy will also have the educated class, both sides will suffer by the loss of such priceless material—the intellect from which civilization is to gain its inventions, arts, and scientific discoveries. Should they be set up as targets for the enemy's bullets?"

"Pshaw! What can rummaging of the scientists, the dreams of the artists and inventors, help to advance the power of a nation?"

"How can you say that!" exclaimed Frederick.

"Besides, these men need spare but a short period from their research, and a few years of strict discipline will do them good. In the present state of things we must pay the blood tax, and it ought to be equally shared."

"If through this it could be diminished, something would be gained—but it is only increased. I fully hope the plan fails. No one can tell where it will end. Each Power will try to outdo the other, and we shall no longer have armies, but armed nations. Men will be drawn more and more into the service; the time will be lengthened, the costs will increase, and without actual battle and bloodshed, nations will be thrown into ruin, simply through their preparation for war."

"You look too far into the future, dear Tilling."

"One can never look too far ahead. We should think to the end in our undertakings—were we not just now comparing war to a game of chess? It is a poor player who only looks a single move ahead. Let us develop the thought of conscription to the extreme measure—what if, after the limit of number and age has been reached, a nation should recruit its women too? The others would imitate it. And then the children—and the rest would imitate it. And in the armaments, in the instruments of destruction, where would be the limits? Oh, it is a savage blind leap into the dark."

"You are a rash dreamer, Tilling. If war were preventable, it would indeed be a good thing, but since that is impossible, every nation must prepare to win in the 'struggle for existence,' as your new-fangled Darwinism calls it."

"And if I did show you a practical way to wipe out war, you would consider me only a silly faddist, riding the humanitarian hobby, as the war party sneeringly calls it.

"There is no practical means of doing away with war so long as we have to deal with human passions, rivalries, opposing interests, the impossibility of agreeing on all questions—"

"Such agreement is unnecessary," interrupted Frederick. "Where differences arise, courts of justice, not the sword, can decide."

"Sovereign states appeal to such a settlement? Never! Nor would the people."

"The people? Rulers and statesmen are opposed, but never the people—their love for peace is sincere, while the claim of the diplomats is always hypocritical. More and more the people cry for peace as the standing armies grow, for the halo of self sacrifice will grow dim when every man must serve. Besides, who are the enthusiasts for the glories and dangers of war? Those who are safely outside them—the politicians, the professors, the stay-at-homes. When their safety is threatened they sing another song. Then more and more every one must look upon it with horror, and that sense will grow when poets, thinkers, lovers of humanity, timid people, when all these will, each from his own special point of view, curse the wretched trade they have been forced into."

"However, they will be very careful to keep silent and not pass as cowards, or fall out of favor with their superiors."

"Keep silent? Not always. I have kept silent for many years, but as I speak, soon many will break out. When convictions possess one's soul it speaks out. It took forty years for mine to find expression. It took decades to ripen in me; perhaps the masses may need as many generations—but the hour will come when they will at last speak out."

CHAPTER II.

New Year, '67! We celebrated it alone, my dearest Frederick and I, and as the clock struck twelve, I sighed:

"Do you remember poor father's toast last year at this very hour? I dare not wish you a happy New Year. Behind the future there often lies concealed so much that is terrible and which mortal wishes cannot avert."

"Then let us to-night rather look back than toward the future. What you have endured, my poor brave wife! So many loved ones you have buried—and those days of horror on the battlefield in Bohemia!"

"I shall never regret having seen those cruel sights. They make me able to sympathize with my whole soul in your efforts."

"We must educate our Rudolf to continue in these ideas. Perhaps in his lifetime these things may come to pass—hardly in ours. What a noise there is upon the streets! They greeted the last New Year with as much enthusiasm—and it brought such frightful suffering. How forgetful men are!"

"Do not scold them for forgetting. Some of our anguish is already passing into the shadows, and I am filled with the happiness of the present—what bliss to have you, my own love. We were not to speak of the future; but what lies before us looks so good—we have love, unity, riches, all that life has to offer. We will travel, see the world and all that is beautiful and wondrous in it. During times of peace the world is fair—and peace may last many, many years. Yet if war comes you are no longer in it, and Rudolf is safe, for he shall never be a soldier."

Guns Only Defence Against Submarines

British Mercantile Marine Men Would Avenge Death of Captain Davis

LIVERPOOL, March 31.—The Falaba outrage has aroused in the mercantile masters a determination to avenge the death of Captain Davis, a man of a quiet, reserved disposition, with a host of friends in the service and among the west coast passengers, and a reputation for reliable seamanship. It is declared in Liverpool that the gallant manner in which he died was typical of his character.

"Give us guns—this is the reply of the shipmasters to the German pirates," said Thomas Scott, Secretary of the Mercantile Marine Service Association, in discussing the outrages today. Continuing, he said: "Submarines have now given sufficient evidence that they have not the slightest scruple in murdering crews and passengers. There no longer is anything in the argument that arming merchant ships would provoke submarines. They need no provocation. Our only defence is guns."

The fellow who knows it all is the same chap who asks questions about things he does not know.

PAINS IN THE SIDE, CHEST, OR BACK
ACHING MUSCLES CURED QUICKLY

EVEN DOCTORS MARVEL AT THE PENETRATING POWER OF GOOD OLD "NERVILINE."

Pains anywhere—in the chest, neck side, back or muscles—they are always a discomfort.

If the inflammation is severe, the pain will be intense. If allowed to continue, complications will follow.

Physicians say one of the best remedies is "Nerviline"—it can't help curing because it penetrates through the sore tissues, carrying healing properties that destroy every symptom of pain.

In case of colds, sore chest and pleurisy, there should be a good hand-rubbing with Nerviline, and, of course to prevent the trouble coming back, it's advisable to put on a Nerviline Porous Plaster, which, by absorption through the skin, draws out all congestion.

For general household use, for curing the ailments of the young and old, for destroying all pain, outward or inward, nothing can excel Nerviline; thousands testify to this effect.

For nearly forty years Nerviline has been a renowned and trust remedy in thousands of homes where practically no medicine is needed.

Nerviline is safe to use. For children's coughs, colds and sore throat nothing can be used with more certain results.

Get the large 50 cent family size bottle today. It is more economical than the 25 cent trial size, and is sure to keep down the doctor's bill and cure a host of minor ills that arise in every household.

All dealers sell Nerviline, or direct from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

ENCOURAGING LETTER FROM CAPT. O'FLYNN

Letters have been received from Captain O'Flynn, by his mother bearing date 14th and 16th of March instant.

He writes that at the point at which our boys are stationed they have the Germans beaten and are superior to them in the conflict. "It is wonderful to see the confidence displayed by the British. They absolutely know that they will win," and he is proud to be even a small part of such a wonderful army and nation.

His health and that of his friend, Lieut. Ponton, is excellent and there have been no casualties as yet among the Belleville boys. He mentions that the religious service was conducted on the 14th by a son of Rev. Dr. Gordon, Principal of Queens' University.

He writes we have every reason to be proud of our artillery. It is one of the finest branches of the service. The losses of the Germans must be very great and there is a feeling throughout the army that they cannot long stand the terrific drain on their resources.

He graphically describes the religious services of the Rev. Mr. Gordon, the men all standing around in the court yard and the preacher standing on a pile of debris addressing the men.

In his second letter he again refers to the artillery. "Our artillery have done remarkably well. They are much better than the artillery that faces them. We are delighted at the good showing they have made. Our engineers are also doing wood work."

The Captain received a pair of socks from Queen Mary and the Women of the Empire which was accompanied by a note from the Queen, which he sent to his mother. The letter bears the impress of the Crown and is from Buckingham Palace and reads as follows:

Gift from Mary R and the Women of the Empire 1915."

It is either written by Her Majesty or is a splendid facsimile of her writing. Evidently one was sent to each of the officers as the Captain says that each received one.

He continues in the best of spirits, writes in a cheerful mood and sends best wishes to his friends.

FROM TOM VANCE

March 9, 1915

Dear father and mother and all, just a line to let you know I am well and hope you are all the same. We are having some very fine weather and are getting used to the firing line. I saw Leo Ross a week ago, and he was looking fine. Thank God none of our Belleville boys have got hit yet.

The main thing in the trenches is to keep your head down and you bet I do; only, when on sentry go, then I have to look over. I had a letter from Bessie and one from John and Pearl last night. I suppose the snow is nearly all gone over there now.

They just handed me a leter from you, so I must see what is in it. Well, mother I have read your letter and am glad to hear you are all well.

Well, mother, you said you had been wishing that I would never have to go to the front. Well I never wished it. I came to see all I could of it, and if God spares me to get back home, I will be able to tell some stories that will make you glad I came. So don't be worrying, for I have been pretty lucky so far.

Sorry to hear little Tom had a cold, but hope he is better now. I haven't got time to write to Lizzie and Edna this time, but give give them all my love. I will close for this time, so bye bye. Answer soon. I remain as ever, your loving son, Tom Vance.

Adress—No. 1266,Pte. Tom Vance, 1st Canadian Contingent, British Expeditionary Force, 1st Infantry Brigade, 2nd Battalion, No. 3 Company.

CHARGED WITH FRAUD

Police of Ontario towns have been notified by the Chief Constables of Toronto and Peterborough to arrest a man going by the name of Harry L. Kirby, age about 26 years, five feet nine inches in height, and weighing about 160 lbs., dressed in full military khaki suit, with one star in his shoulder strap. The man represents that he is a lieutenant in the third overseas contingent, and a member of the 13th Scottish Rifles of Cavanville. Kirby is charged with fraud, his alleged method being to issue worthless cheques on the Bank of Commerce for more than the amount required so that the merchant will give him change. His chief pets are book stores, jewelers, fur dealers, and dry goods merchants. He also calls himself Kincade or Lindsay. There is no authorized rank in the Canadian regiments that wear one star, so that any one with such a badge is an imposter.

Letter From Gerald Spafford

Hotel de Dugout,
March 11, 1915.

Dear Mr. Bowell:

Bidding adieu to good old England and the kind-hearted people of Devizes, an eventful voyage across the Channel and finally an interesting railway tour and route march brings us to the scene of operations, where things in general are in keeping with the desires of every Canadian who departed with the 1st Contingent.

We occupy one of the most important positions on the Allies' line, and it's a warm corner, too, and best of all, we have given the Huns by way of introduction the last few days, one of the warmest receptions within their memories. Behind each gun that belched forth its tongue of flame and steel, and in the trenches in front of us are stalwart sons of the Dominion of Canada, and among them are our boys of the Bay of Quinte district. Lieut. Dick Ponton and his lads are with us—had the pleasure of exchanging greetings with him. He is looking as fit as a fiddle. Charlie Gibson and many others are all in the best of spirits.

With me I have Gunner Frank Day and Gunner Leo Ross. I have been in the trenches ten days, and the above lads have been on duty with me night and day. We are the detached section, quite by ourselves, covering an important line of the enemy's entrenchments. We have been in action as a section and with the brigade, and needless to say, we have done some good work.

Conditions are really excellent, considering that in spite of rain and mud which Salisbury Plain has got to go some to beat the sticky clay found here.

We relieved the 105th battery of English Royal Horse Artillery, who took a prominent part in the retreat from Mons. Over half of their men were cut up.

We have, you will note, nicknamed our dugout "Hotel de Dugout." It is a spacious hole in the ground about four and a half feet deep and eight by twelve square—accommodation par excellence, heated by a small stove on which we have our chef cook the meals; lighted by two cadles, strictly fireproof ceilings, fitted with automatic showers. All we have to do is to release the rubber sheets on the ceiling and, presto! you have the showers. The only inconvenience is that we cannot control the supply. Excellent mud baths—regular Mount Clemens. We bale out, depending on the weather, twice daily in fair weather, and 'steen times when it rains—but we have got the thing down to a science now.

Our bill of fare is good: Breakfast—bacon and eggs; toast, coffee and milk. Dinner—roast beef, steak, bread, fresh creamery butter and mashed potatoes, rice pudding and assorted jams, etc. Supper—Welsh rarebit, toast, coffee, cold canned bully beef, German friend potatoes. We therefore are quite comfortable. Our wine list is also quite complete: Hot rum, Conas grape wine and beer; cigarets and tobacco are available.

Our first experience under the fire of the enemy—the natural tendency of every man living, quite naturally, and instinctitvely, when he hears a little Willie (13-pounder) screaming over his head, is to duck; but after a series of them dropping quite wide of the mark one becomes reassured and it's real interesting to watch their effect—and we all have become quite contemptuous of them—hardly turn our heads to see them burst. The only time we take notice is when we lose the sound of their gentle buzz-buzz overhead. We know she is descending and coming close, so we naturally take cover till it's over. Some amusing things have happened thus—but before going farther let me say that the boys are as cool as cucumbers, and what would strike the casual observer forcibly is the matter-of-fact way we go about our duties. For instance, the following dialogue will enlighten you:

Voice of sentry about 8.30 a.m. at entrance of dugout—"Hello down there! Is Sergt. Spafford there?"

Sergeant—"Y-e-s—what is it?"

Voice—"Mr. Helmer (the Lieut. in charge of the section) wants you."

Meantime I am partaking of a hearty breakfast, consisting of grilled bacon and eggs, toast and fine new churned butter, coffee, etc., so I leave it and hurry to officer's domicile.

Sergt.—"Want me, sir?"

Lieut.—"Yes, Sergt. We are going to fire on the enemy's trenches, at the following range, angle, so on, etc."

Sergt.—"Right away, sir?"

Lieut.—"Yes, if you are ready."

Sergt.—"Well, sir, I haven't finished breakfast yet."

Lieut.—"Oh, very good; when you have finished you may go ahead.

He, meantime, is seated at a table which serves for a desk, a telephone near by, and like any city business man directs the fire of our section.

While we are firing we are talking of home and the possibility of an early declaration of peace.

The capture of a spy, which has given us some novel experiences—my sentry noticed the light, and orders are that no lights are to be shown after 6.30 p.m., so naturally we were suspicious. After several attempts to locate it we were getting, as Tommy expresses it, "fed up" and peeved; so one night I informed the Lieut. that I was going out to get him. Taking a pair of night glasses and an automatic revolver, I proceeded about 11.30 p.m. toward the spot where I knew the offender must be, over muddy fields, hedges and ditches, crawling Indian fashion, when the Huns put up a star rocket, illuminating the whole neighborhood for miles. I got within about 50 yards of my goal when, lo, by some signal or warning from outside, the signalling stopped and the light went out. There I remained, determined to get him if waiting would bring it about—even though sleep is a big item here now owing to the activity of our division. Well, I waited—one, two and three o'clock passed, and I returned disappointed. Well, next day, knowing the location by the previous night's exploration, I made a general reconnaissance of the neighborhood and arranged to have two men posted near by the following night. My plan was successful, and we got him with the goods.

Gunners Day and Ross, and Bom. Robinson were digging potatoes in the field of a near-by ruined farm house, which the Huns shell whenever they feel in the humor. Well, the lads were digging away industriously, when—bang! bang! bang! bang!—four screaming Little Willies burst on percussion within about 20 feet of them. Three surprised boys dropped in the muddy field flat on their faces, but not for long. Self-preservation is the better part of valor, and speed is a big asset under the circumstances. Well, Day got here first. On my query, "Where are the potatoes?" He said when he had recovered his breath: "Well, Spaff, we were digging them, but the Germans started plowing the field, so we quit."

Another funny one happened about 5.00 p.m. last night. Our stove was smoking badly owing to the wind, so we went above, seated ourselves on the bank of our dugout and proceeded to partake of our supper. Of course we had just been hammering down with our shells the enemy's trenches, and all around us guns were pounding incessantly. Anyway we were chatting and eating away, when—buzz! bang!—in the field in front of us a Little Willie burst, but quite a distance away. We proceeded to go on without further notice, when I heard the gentle hum of another, and I knew it was too close to take any chances, by the sound, so I shouted to the boys to duck. We did, and the shrapnel dug up dirt all around us. We finished supper in the smoke below. Gunner Chipman, ex-N.W.M.P., did not wait to climb down the hole, but dove down with a mess tin in one hand and a dixie of tea in the other.

There is besides the humorous side of life here, a more serious view of things, when one sees the ruined homes and lonely graves of our heroes who have given their lives for the cause of liberty and justice. While it is sad, it is an inspiration to us all, for we are more determined to force the tyrant Huns to their knees and avenge the injustice wrought on innocent peace-loving people.

While writing this I hear the call for action, so here we go.

Well, here we are again. The Huns sent us a few, but our guns returned the compliment five to one, so we are standing by again. There is heavy fighting on our right to-day. Our efforts of the 11th and 12th were crowned with success; our infantry behaved beautifully, capturing a trench.

We opened fire on the enemy at 7.30 a.m., keeping up a heavy, accurate and deadly fire until 2 p.m. We could hear our infantry cheering as the Huns, much discomfited by our fire, scampered for cover—our shells battering down their barricades and bursting in their trenches.

You shall hear of good news shortly, and tell the good folks at home every lad is prepared to do his duty.

Our aeroplanes have some close shaves. The other day one was scouting along our front, when the Huns cut loose with their aerial guns, and for a few minutes our gallant airman was in the midst of about four shrapnel bombs which seemed to be very close, but he succeeded in getting out of range by clever manoeuvring. Have seen two exciting fights between our aeroplanes and those of the enemy, and judging by the results, for daring and cleverness our men are superior to the Germans in many respects.

Pat Yeomans, with B. C. staff of the 1st Battery, First Brigade, while on duty with his C. O. on observation, their position was heavily shelled, but no one was hurt. Still, Pat had some close calls, so I was informed, and although I have met him since and quizzed him, he seemed to think it a matter too trivial to mention. Pat is a plucky youngster. It's no cinch to be patroling telephone lines at night in a country infested by the enemy and wily sharp-shooters to snipe you without warning. It is particularly hazardous, owing to the position we hold. We have the enemy in front and on both flanks, and their searchlights and star shells are playing every second, and at the slightest move, you hear a machine gun or rifle bullet singing around you.

Well, must conclude. Regards to all. All boys join in sending their respects and good wishes.

Respectfully yours,
GERALD N. SPAFFORD.

Notice to Creditors

IN THE MATTER OF MARY E. WHITE and Thoreld W. R. White of the Town of Trenton in the County of Hastings, livery and horse dealers, insolvents.

NOTICE is hereby given that the said Mary E. White and Thorold W. R. White carrying on business as Liverymen and Horse Dealers at the said Town of Trenton in the County of Hastings, have made an assignment under R.S.O. 1914, Chapter 134 of all their estate, credits and effects to M. B. Morrison, Esq., of the City of Belleville in the County of Hastings, sheriff of the said County, for the general benefit of creditors.

A meeting of creditors will be held at the office of the said Assignee at the Court House in the City of Belleville on Tuesday the 6th day of April, 1915 at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon to receive a statement of affairs, appoint inspectors, and for the ordering of the affairs of the estate generally. Creditors are requested to file their claims with the Assignee, with proofs and particulars as required by said Act, on or before the day of such meeting.

And notice is further given that after the 15th day of May, 1915, the Assignee will proceed to distribute the assets of the estate amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which notice shall then have been given, and that he will not be liable for the assets or any part thereof so distributed, to any person or persons of whose claims he shall not then have had notice.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

Saturday night saw the opening of the City Basket Ball League at the Y. M.C.A. and there is every evidence that this will prove a successful League, especially since the teams are somewhat evenly balanced.

The first game between the Bankers' and Bridge St. Ever Readies was a great exhibition of this popular game but the handlers of the "long green" had a bit more of the "real stuff" on their team and were on top 20-28 when the whistle blew for quits.

On the second game G.T.R. and Belleville Hardware clashed and the Railroad bunch were travelling down grade all the time. Marshall and Hitchon both mogul types were a tower of strength for the trunks. Moon and Marsh Hitchon played a great game for the Hardware bunch. The score was 38-11 in favor of G.T.R.

Line up—Bankers—French, center; Gies and Panter, forward; Morrison and Alexander, defence.

Ever Readies—Finkle and DeGraw, forwards; Mosley and Tuite, defence; McQueen, center.

Belleville Hardware—Marsh Hitchon and Moon forwards; Hogan and Goyer, defence.
